With a degree in mechanical engineering, he found a job at the Buffalo Forge Company in 1901 and he began designing heating systems to dry lumber and coffee. Carrier was soon made head of the company's department of experimental engineering. It was here that he solved his first problem in temperature and humidity control for the Sackett-Wilhelms Lithographing and Publishing Company in Brooklyn in 1902. Marking the birth of modern air conditioning, Carrier's device controlled temperature, humidity, ventilation and air quality.

In 1915, Carrier and six colleagues pooled together their life savings and founded Carrier Engineering Corporation in New York. In 1910 the company bought its first building in Newark, New Jersey and soon found its way back to our Empire State. In 1937 Carrier consolidated five plants on Geddes Street near my home in Syracuse. In 1947 Carrier moved to its present location on Thompson Road in the town of Dewitt, also in my congressional district. Today Carrier Corporation, the company that bears the founder's name, is a nearly $9 billion organization and remains the global leader in providing heating, cooling and refrigeration solutions in more than 172 countries around the world.

As an aside, my colleague from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) will appreciate this. As a Peace Corps volunteer in Nepal, the only night I spent in an air-conditioned room in about 2-and-a-half years was in a Carrier air-conditioned room in Kathmandu, Nepal.

The 43,000 worldwide employees of Carrier Corporation can be proud that they continue to carry on their founder's tradition of excellence by generating comfort wherever people work, live and play. Many of us take for granted the fact that air conditioning has become an integral technology, enabling the advancement of society through improvements to our Nation's health and well-being, manufacturing processes, building capacities, food preservation and general productivity and indoor comfort.

From its birth 100 years ago to today's $36 billion industry, employing 700,000 Americans, we can all be very proud of Dr. Carrier. He did indeed change history. I suspect that if he did not invent air conditioning, we would not be meeting in Washington today because they used to close the Capitol in the beginning of the summer and stay away long until late in the fall. This invention also may have created a tremendous upsurge in the amount of legislation passed by this body, so maybe all is not progress.

The Sistine Chapel in Rome is air-conditioned with Carrier air conditioning. Many great documents of this country are enshrined in museums and the air is conditioned also by Carrier air conditioning. Indeed, this building in which we meet today is also chilled by Carrier air chillers.

So in gratitude for all of that, I would ask unanimous support of H. Con. Res. 413 and I ask Members to join me in celebrating this 100-year anniversary.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise only to say that we thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. WALSH) for bringing this matter before the House; and we, of course, agree that Mr. Carrier has a long and distinguished career and a great invention; and we obviously would support this resolution.

I add only in his memory the one thing we might concentrate on doing is concentrating more on research and develop to improve efficiencies. Through smart public policy we can reduce energy consumption by improving the energy standards and efficiency standards required of common appliances like air conditioners as well as refrigerators, photo copiers and fax machines. I think that would be a great testament to Mr. Carrier's life and his hard work. If we just applied those standards already on the books in this country, we would be estimated to save consumers some $150 billion in energy costs by 2020. In fact, if we really looked at our research and development monies, we will know and realize that they have decreased from $6.55 billion in 1978 to some $2 billion now in 1998.

In 1998 the President's Committee of Advisors on Science and Technology recommended that our research and development costs over 5 years be increased because right now they are not commensurate in scope or scale with the energy challenges and opportunities of the 21st century and those that they will present.

Again, I also add our voice to the congratulations of Dr. Carrier. I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. WALSH) for bringing this forward and say we look forward to improving the efficiencies of technology like this so we continue to do better and better by our energy consumption.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the invention of modern air conditioning has clearly changed our country. Modern air conditioning fueled the post-war growth of sunbelt cities such as Miami, Phoenix, Las Vegas and Houston. The invention of modern air conditioning also led to the building of glass skyscrapers, shopping malls and pressurized modules for space exploration.

On this, the 100th anniversary of the invention of modern air conditioning, we truly honor Dr. Willis H. Carrier. Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support this concurrent resolution.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 413, offered by Mr. WALSH, marking the centennial of Dr. Willis H. Carrier's invention of modern air conditioning. I can think of no better place to recognize this accomplishment than in the House Chamber—first air-conditioned by Dr. Carrier in 1929—on a 90 degree July day.

For the past century, Carrier air conditioning and refrigeration systems have been keeping our offices and homes cool. The man responsible for this phenomenon is Carrier's founder, Dr. Willis Haviland Carrier. Born on a farm in Angola, New York in 1876, the only child had a humble upbringing yet possessed high hopes from the start. At the time he could not have known the worldwide impact his invention would create. It would boost industrial production. It would change the face of urban architecture, including providing comfort cooling to some of the world's most prestigious buildings. It would improve health care for millions. It would allow unimagined industries to flourish.

Today, Carrier Corporation, the company that bears the founder's name, is an $8.895 billion organization providing heating, cooling and refrigeration solutions in more than 172 countries around the world. The nearly 43,000 worldwide employees of Carrier Corporation create comfort wherever people work, live or play—from private residences and apartments to grand hotels; from sprawling factories to soaring office towers; from theme parks to centuries-old cultural centers. Overall, the air-conditioning industry totals $36 billion and employs more than 700,000 people in the United States.

One hundred years later, we benefit now more than ever from Dr. Carrier's invention. I urge my colleagues to pass the Resolution.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 413.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLARENCE MILLER POST OFFICE BUILDING

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4755) to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 204 South Broad Street in Lancaster, Ohio, as the Clarence Miller Post Office Building.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CLARENCE MILLER POST OFFICE BUILDING.

(a) DESIGNATION.—The facility of the United States Postal Service located at 204 South Broad Street in Lancaster, Ohio, shall be known and designated as the "Clarence Miller Post Office Building".

(b) REFERENCES.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the facility referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the Clarence Miller Post Office Building.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4755, the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4755, introduced by our distinguished colleague from the State of Ohio (Mr. HOBSON), designates a post office in Lancaster, Ohio as the Clarence Miller Post Office Building.

Members of the entire House delegation from the State of Ohio are cosponsors of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this post office will recognize former Congressman Clarence Miller and his 5 decades of public service to the citizens of Lancaster, Ohio whom Congressman Miller served as a city councilman, mayor and U.S. representative. Born in Lancaster on November 1, 1917, Clarence Miller served 13 terms as a United States Congressman, from 1967 until 1993. Prior to his term in Congress, he was mayor of Lancaster from 1964 to 1966 and a member of the Lancaster City Council, 1957 to 1963.

Congressman Miller originally made his living as a utility company engineer before entering into public service.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of H.R. 4755.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Government Reform, I am pleased to join my colleague in consideration of H.R. 4755, a bill in fact to designate a facility of the United States Postal Service after Clarence Miller. Obviously the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HOBSON) has introduced this bill. It enjoys great support, from my understanding, from the entire Ohio delegation. Not having been a Member of Congress when Mr. Miller was in fact serving, I do know that by reputation he served from 1966 until January of 1993. I am also informed that the former Representative Miller served on the Committee on Agriculture, Committee on Public Works and Transportation, and the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, on the 3 subcommittees of that group. He was well known as a budget watchdog because of his fierce dedication to fiscal responsibility.

Former Representative Miller is now retired but he is also active in his Lancaster community. He is a member of the First United Methodist Church, the recipient of numerous awards and honors in recognition of his untiring efforts to serve his fellow Ohioans.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the swift passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HOBSON).

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask for the House to approve the bill to deem the Lancaster, Ohio, post office for former congressman Clarence Miller, to recognize his years of public service to the citizens of Lancaster, Ohio.

Clarence Miller served the people of Lancaster and central Ohio for over five decades and for thousands of Ohioans he exemplified the proper role of a public servant.

Clarence was a true community leader who was committed to improving the lives of those he represented, whether it was in the Lancaster City Hall or the United States Congress. His vision and civic spirit have made lasting contributions to our area, and he truly deserves this honor.

Mr. Miller was born in Lancaster on November 1, 1917. After attending Lancaster public schools and receiving technical training in Scranton, Pennsylvania, Mr. Miller was employed as a utility company engineer.

He served as a member of the Lancaster City Council from 1957 to 1963 and as mayor of Lancaster from 1964 to 1966. In 1967, he was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives where he served until his retirement in 1993.

In Congress, Mr. Miller first served on the Committee on Agriculture and Committee on Public Works and Transportation. In 1973, he became a member of the House Committee on Appropriations and served on the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations; Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State; Subcommittee on Treasury, Postal Service and General Government; and Subcommittee on Defense.

Clarence also holds U.S. and Canadian patents for technical innovations he developed in his professional ability as an electrical engineer.

There are many in Congress and in Washington today with fond memories of Clarence Miller. This legislation would provide a lasting tribute to this fine individual that would be most visible to those he served for so many years in Lancaster, Ohio.

I might say that Mr. Miller today lives in Lancaster, Ohio. He visits the office often and still takes part in trying to help make our community better.

So it is with deep appreciation that I thank the House for passing this piece of legislation today.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this measure.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, as an original cosponsor of H.R. 4755, I rise in strong support of this bill to designate the post office in Lancaster, Ohio as the Clarence Miller Post Office Building. This building served as Clarence's district office while he served the people of Southern Ohio for 26 years as a member of the House of Representatives.

Clarence Miller is a native and lifelong resident of Lancaster, Ohio. He was born in 1917. He was the third of six children born to Clarence Miller, Sr., and Delores Lloyd Miller. He married his high school sweetheart, Helen Brown, on December 25, 1936, and they spent 50 happy years together until her passing in 1986.

Clarence has two children, Jacqueline and Ronald. He has five grandchildren, Tyler Williams, Todd Williams, Amy Jackson, Jennifer Smith, and Drew Miller and four great-grandchildren—Morgan, Connor, Drew and Grant. He has a surviving brother, Paul, a retired broadcaster and marketing executive in Cincinnati.

Clarence grew up during the Great Depression. He was the son of an electrician. Clarence and his brothers and sisters worked to help the family financially during those troubled times, and as a young boy he delivered papers for the Lancaster Eagle Gazette.

During high school he unloaded trucks after school at the Omar Bakery, often not returning home until after midnight, and then rising early the next morning to attend classes.

Clarence always prided himself on being a self-made man. Following high school he went to work digging ditches for the Ohio Fuel and Gas Co., now called Columbia Gas, and rose through the ranks to become a practicing electrical engineer. While continuing to work full time at Ohio Fuel, Clarence and his brother, Paul, along with their mother, started Miller Electric, a small retail and electric wiring business in Lancaster.

Clarence first became interested in politics in the 1950s when the Ohio Fuel and Gas Co. offered courses in civics to its employees to help provide them with a better appreciation of how government operates. Clarence found the subject so captivating that he himself started teaching those courses, and afterwards began thinking about entering politics.

His political career began in 1957, when he was appointed to fill an unexpired term as a member of the Lancaster City Council. He was elected to a full term, and then was elected mayor of Lancaster, receiving the largest plurality in the history of the city.

Clarence was first elected to the House of Representatives in 1966 and was elected each succeeding Congress by wider margins. Clarence and President George Herbert Walker Bush were members of the same freshman class. For six years Clarence served on the House Agriculture Committee and the Public Works and Transportation Committee, and then he was selected to serve on the powerful Appropriations Committee where he served for the next 20 years. Clarence was noted for his efforts to reduce federal spending during times of skyrocketing deficits. He originated the idea of offering 2-percent across-the-board reduction amendments to appropriations bills, which became known as the Miller Amendments.

Clarence always had a keen interest in technology, and was one of a handful of Members of the House to hold both United States and Canadian patents for technical innovations developed while he worked as an electrical engineer. Clarence successfully merged his technical background with his work in Congress. In 1977 he was appointed by the Speaker to be a member of the Technology Assessment Board of the Congress.

Clarence received many honors and awards including: honorary doctorate degrees from Marietta College in Marietta, Ohio, and Rio Grande College in Rio Grande, Ohio; the Phillips Medal of Public Service from Ohio University in Athens, OH; the National Associated Businessmen's "Watchdog of the Treasury Award"; the Americans for Constitutional Action's "Distinguished Service Award"; and the National Rifle Association's "Legislator of the Year Award."

He always took great pride in his work. He was not one to seek the public limelight. Clarence worked quietly and diligently over the years for our nation and for his constituents. He always said it is not important to get your name in the Washington Post or on the network news. Instead, you have to look after the people who sent you here to represent them, and to do what they think is best for the country as a whole.

Apparently Clarence's philosophy served him well, because he consistently defeated his opponents over the years by a better than 2-to-1 margin.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to vote for H.R. 4755 to honor Clarence Miller, a gentleman who served the people of Southern Ohio and our Nation very well in this chamber for 26 years.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4755.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

HONORING TED WILLIAMS

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 482) honoring Ted Williams and extending the condolences of the House of Representatives on his death.

H. RES. 482

Resolved, That the House of Representatives honors the outstanding accomplishments of Ted Williams and expresses its deepest sympathies and condolences to the family of Ted Williams on his passing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H. Res. 482.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the House consider House Resolution 482, and I commend my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) for introducing it. This resolution recognizes the enduring contributions, heroic achievements and dedicated work of Ted Williams.

Mr. Speaker, it is truly my honor to rise today to support this resolution that honors Ted Williams. Ted Williams is not only one of baseball's greatest hitters, he was also a member of this Nation's greatest generation. Many of his baseball exploits still stand today.

The last hitter to bat over .400, Ted approached that endeavor like anything else in his life, never taking a shortcut. Batting under .400 but rounded off to .400 going into the last two games of the 1941 season, Ted took to the field and went six for eight in a double header on the last day of the season, raising his average to .406, the last player to hit over .400. He led the American league in batting six times, slugging percentage nine times, and total bases six times, and runs scored six times. He won two triple crown titles and was named Most Valuable Player of the league twice. He was also named to the All Star Team 16 times. Yet Ted's love of country and duty to serve took him away from the game twice, once during the Second World War and again during the Korean War.

During the Korean War, he flew 39 combat missions and earned an Air Medal and two Gold Stars. During his baseball career Ted had always hoped that people would see him and refer to him as the greatest hitter who ever lived. He was the greatest hitter that ever lived. But today this House recognizes Ted Williams as also a Navy aviator, a Marine, and a great American who exemplified dedication and sacrifice in absolutely everything he did.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to just reiterate some of the points that my esteemed colleague from Connecticut made, who has to travel a little bit further to Fenway Park than some of us who live in Massachusetts. The points he made are worth noting, but we also have a number of young people in the House today observing this particular proceeding, and I hope that what they take away from this even more so than the feats accomplished on Fenway Park and on the baseball fields around this country are the facts that Ted Williams served his country in the military, as the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) said, on two occasions. When he left the baseball field first was for World War II and, secondly, for the Korean Conflict. He served his country nobly there and was a hero and continued on beyond that. Even after he finished his baseball career, he provided invaluable assistance to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and to others through his work and service for the Jimmy Fund, helping to eradicate cancer in children.

So for all the good deeds he did in baseball, he was a rounded individual who served this country, who has continued to serve his fellow man in a humanitarian way, with very serious issues of health. Besides that, he had some fantastic eyesight, a great athletic ability, was a terrific fisherman, and probably was the greatest hitter to ever live.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY), an individual who is better known around the House of Representatives for his fowl shooting percentage, more so than his batting average, the dean of the Massachusetts delegation, and a great baseball fan.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) for yielding me the time, and I thank the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) for helping organize this tribute to Ted Williams.

As has already been said, he served 5 years in the military, 3 years in World War II, 2 years in the Korean war, each of those years at the prime of his baseball career.

We in Boston and many across the country believed that if he had not been forced because of the need to protect our country to actually play those five seasons that he would hold the record in just about every single offensive category of baseball statistics. That is how great a hitter he was. The amazing thing is that even though he missed 5 years, he is still near the top in so many of the important baseball categories.

When I was a boy growing up in Malden, Massachusetts, playing baseball for 3 or 4 or 5 hours a day, the one thing that I did at night was to lie there at night trying to go to sleep, dreaming of myself as Ted Williams, trying to hit Whitey Ford or Bob Turley or Don Larson or some other Yankee pitcher because we knew that of all of the people who we could call upon in order to protect us against the hated Yankees that Ted Williams was at the top of the list. And not only did I go to sleep dreaming that I was Ted Williams with that perfect swing, but I am sure that there were millions of others having the very same dream about their own baseball aspirations.

He not only was a great baseball player and a great patriot, but he was also a great fisherman. He is in the Fisherman's Hall of Fame. He, for over 50 years, was the living embodiment of the Jimmy Fund which is a fund which has been created up in Boston at the Farber Institute, which is now global in its reach which helps to treat cancer in children, which was his passion.

A lot of people say that Ted Williams reminds them of John Wayne; but in reality, John Wayne only played those parts in movies. John Wayne wishes he was Ted Williams, wishes that he had had the life, the career, the success that he had had in every single endeavor that he touched in his life.

If somebody says 406, everyone knows that Ted Williams hit that for batting average in 1941. There are so many things that we could talk about here today; but at bottom, this was a great man, a great American and someone who is deserving of all of the praise which he is receiving across this country, and I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for yielding me the time.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, we have no other speakers, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Again, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) for introducing this resolution and working so hard to bring it to the floor. Frankly, when he speaks, no one else needs to.

I also thank the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON), chairman of the Committee on Government Reform, and the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), the ranking member, for expediting its consideration. I ask all Members to support this resolution to express our condolences on Ted Williams' death and honor his awesome life and achievements.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 482 to honor and recognize the life of baseball legend Ted Williams. I would like to extend my condolences on his recent passing away on July 5, 2002. It is both fitting and proper to recognize Mr. Williams for both his on the field and off the field heroics. From his patriotism to his love for America's greatest past time, Ted Williams has touched the lives of millions.

Theodore Samuel Williams was born in San Diego, California on August 30, 1918. Immediately after high school graduation, he signed a contract with the San Diego minor league baseball team. There he played one and half seasons with the team until the Red Sox obtained him in 1937, where he finished his career in 1960. After one year with the Red Sox, it was clear that Williams was destined to be a star. Throughout his career, the "Splendid Splinter" was one of the few people to post a batting average over .400 for a season and is the last player to date to do so. Ted Williams achieved the "Triple Crown" twice for leading the league in batting average, home runs, and runs-batted-in. He won the American League's Most Valuable Player Award twice and led the Red Sox to the pennant in 1946. He was elected into the Baseball Hall Of Fame in 1966. In his career, he slugged 521 home runs with a batting average of .344. In almost 8,000 at-bats, he struck out only 709 times. Ted Williams once said, "When I walk down the street and meet people I just want them to think 'There goes the greatest hitter who ever lived.'" Few people would disagree with this statement.

Not only did Ted Williams play baseball with excitement, but he loved his country with a passion as well. Mr. Williams was dedicated to his country and served in the Marine reserves for nearly five years. He selflessly put his baseball career aside two times at the peak of his performance in order to serve his country in its time of need. While in the service, he flew bomber planes in both World War II and in the Korean War. Many called him a hero. Williams was a patron for America.

Ted Williams had no tolerance for anything but the best from his colleagues. His stubbornness and need for perfection helped Williams be the best at his trade, whether it be playing baseball, flying fighter planes, or fishing. Ted Williams will be missed. I ask my colleagues to join me in our condolences and remembrances of Ted Williams for his brilliant accomplishments, patriotism, and fantastic memories throughout the 20th century by voting in favor of H. Res. 482.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague Mr. MARKEY for sponsoring H. Res. 482 honoring the great Ted Williams.

Ted Williams—the Splendid Splinter—dominated baseball throughout the 1940s and 50s. As the Boston Red Sox left fielder, he batted a lifetime .344, batted in 1,839 runs, had 2654 hits, and hit 521 home runs. Throughout this time, he won two Triple Crowns. However, it is his season batting average of .406 in 1941 that will forever live in the hearts of all baseball fans. No other player has hit over .400 for a season since.

Yet, if one asked Mr. Williams what he was most proud of in his life, he would say it was the time he spent fighting for this great nation. Mr. Williams spent five years—in the prime of his life and his baseball career—fighting in World War II and in the Korean War. Many often wonder how many more hits Williams would have had, had he not dedicated his life to the Navy and the Marines. And people throughout New England will remember Ted Williams for all the charitable work he performed for children.

Ted Williams spend 19 seasons with the Red Sox, 19 summers in Fenway Park. In a city where baseball is more than just a pastime, Ted Williams is an icon. A tunnel running underneath the city of Boston is named after the Splendid Splinter—the first of many expected tributes and memorials. Baseball fans throughout New England and across the nation now join in mourning the loss of Ted Williams—the greatest hitter of all time and a man of great dignity and character.

And I think I speak for Red Sox fans everywhere in encouraging this year's team to win the World Series in Ted Williams' honor. A guy can always hope, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, again I would like to thank Mr. MARKEY and my other colleagues in the Massachusetts delegation for sponsoring this resolution. I ask Members to support this bill.

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of a great American, Ted Williams and in strong support of a resolution that the House with my support passed earlier this afternoon.

I would also like to bring to my colleagues' attention legislation that I am introducing to name a post office in Hernando, Florida the "Ted Williams Post Office Building."

We all know about Mr. Williams' legendary baseball achievements, such as hitting .406 in 1941 and hitting a home run in his last at bat. We also know about his dedication to our country, which he showed by interrupting his baseball career TWICE, to serve in World War II and Korea.

However, I am here to talk about what Mr. Williams did for Citrus County in my district, where he lived from the mid-1980's until his passing earlier this month.

As most of you know, Mr. Williams was a fabulous fisherman, and he first came to Citrus County in 1950 for that reason. However, it wasn't until over 30 years later that he began to leave his mark on the County.

In 1982, Mr. Williams was named a marketing consultant for the Citrus Hills residential development, lent his name to the project and, most importantly, moved to the County shortly afterward. This helped bring thousands of transplanted New Englanders who followed his playing career to retire in Citrus County.

Mr. Williams put Citrus County in the national spotlight in 1994 with the opening of the Ted Williams Museum and Hitters Hall of Fame, which is located in Citrus Hills. The event brought plenty of celebrities to the area, such as Joe DiMaggio, Muhammad Ali and Bob Costas, who served as master of ceremonies.

The Museum would have an incredible effect on tourism in the area—which continues to this day. Despite his failing health, Mr. Williams appeared before 2,000 fans at the Museum's yearly hall of fame induction ceremony in February.

Everyone in Citrus County—baseball fans or not—had tremendous pride in the fact that one of the world's greatest baseball players lived in the area. However, he wasn't just a great ballplayer—he was a great American, and he left his mark on Citrus County.

The last day of the 1941 season, Mr. Williams was hitting .400 and was given the opportunity by his manager to sit out the game in order to preserve this monumental achievement. Of course, he did not sit, and finished going 6 for 8 in both games of a double-header.

Ted Williams would continue that dedication when he arrived in Citrus County. Indeed, the last player to bat over .400 batted 1.000 in Citrus County.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 482, legislation that honors one of baseball's finest players, and one of America's finest citizens, Ted Williams. I also want to commend the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MARKEY for offering this fitting resolution.

Mr. Speaker, Ted Williams was respected by his peers, admired by his successors, and adored by his fans. His work-ethic was second to none, and he toiled day in and day out, dreaming that one day people would see him and remark: "There goes the greatest hitter who ever lived."

His wiry frame and pure talent earned him the nickname "The Splendid Splinter," and Ted Williams never failed to live up to that reputation on the field.

Williams is best remembered for batting .406 in 1941. In the sixty years since that tremendous season, no one has approached the milestone.

That 1941 season typified Williams' supreme devotion to the sport of baseball. Before the final day of the season, Williams had secured a .400 batting average. Yet he refused to sit out that day's double-header, playing both games and batting 6 for 8, raising his average 6 points.

Ted Williams' dedication to the game of baseball was evident as he continued to excel at an age when most ballplayers would have long since hung up their cleats. At the age of 40, he added his sixth and final batting title to his long list of accomplishments, becoming the oldest player to ever lead the league in hitting.

Williams was also a master of dramatic finishes, as he closed out his career in Fenway Park with a home run in his last at-bat. It was a fitting end for Boston's greatest and most beloved baseball player of all time.

While Teddy Ballgame will always be remembered as a baseball player, some of his greatest accomplishments came off the field. Williams' devotion to baseball was matched only by his devotion to his country. He acted as a true role model and hero during a time of war, sacrificing three years in the prime of his career to serve in the United States Marines in World War II from 1943–1945. Seven years later, he again left the baseball diamond to serve his country, this time in the Korean War. And even though his time in the military undoubtedly cost him some of his best playing days, he never regretted his service. In fact, Williams often counted his enlistment as a Marine as one of his greatest accomplishments.

In addition to his heroic sacrifices as a Marine, Williams will be remembered as the first Hall of Famer to have the courage to insist upon the inclusion of Negro League stars in Cooperstown. And we will be forever grateful to Williams for his generous support of the Jimmy Fund, a local charity that aids the fight against cancer.

Mr. Speaker, when Ted Williams passed away on July 5th, America lost a baseball legend. But we also lost a man with courage, dedication, and desire rarely equaled. It was these qualities that allowed Ted Williams to accomplish his lifelong goal. For when Ted Williams, the Splendid Splinter, passed away, there was one phrase that was on everyone's lips: "There goes the greatest hitter who ever lived."

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 482.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

CONGRATULATING DETROIT RED WINGS FOR WINNING 2002 STANLEY CUP CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 452) congratulating the Detroit Red Wings for winning the 2002 Stanley Cup Championship.

H. RES. 452

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) congratulates—

(A) the Detroit Red Wings for winning the 2002 Stanley Cup Championship and for their outstanding performance during the entire 2001–2002 National Hockey League season; and

(B) all of the 16 National Hockey League teams that played in the postseason;

(2) recognizes the achievements of the Red Wings players, coaches, and support staff who worked hard and were instrumental in bringing the Stanley Cup back to the city of Detroit;

(3) commends the Carolina Hurricanes for a valiant performance during the playoff finals and for showing their strength and skill as a team; and

(4) directs the Clerk of the House of Representatives to transmit an enrolled copy of this resolution to—

(A) the Red Wings players;

(B) Head Coach Scotty Bowman; and

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) each will control 20 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H. Res. 452.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to have an opportunity to salute the Detroit Red Wings and will just point out that my statement was written by a staff member who does not even happen to be a Detroit Red Wings fan, but he has done a gracious job in preparing this statement.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 452, introduced by our distinguished colleague from the State of Michigan (Ms. KILPATRICK), congratulates the National Hockey League's Detroit Red Wings for winning the Stanley Cup for the third time in 6 years. The entire House delegation from the State of Michigan are cosponsors of this legislation.

Last month, the Detroit Red Wings defeated the Carolina Hurricanes in just five games to win the Stanley Cup Finals and bring the title back to, as the writer says, Hockeytown. En route to the finals, the Red Wings beat last year's Stanley Cup champions, the Colorado Avalanche, to clinch the Western Conference title.

The Red Wings' roster features such NHL superstars as team captain Steve Yzerman, Brett Hull, Sergei Federov, Chris Chelios, and goalie Dominik Hasek.

I would specifically like to congratulate Detroit Head Coach Scotty Bowman for his impressive leadership this season and throughout his frankly awesome career. Coach Bowman has been with the team since 1993, and he has guided the Red Wings to three Stanley Cup championships, including back-to-back wins in 1997 and 1998. Bowman is retiring from the NHL and thus closing out a truly remarkable career, during which he set many coaching records including a record nine Stanley Cup championships during his tenure with the Montreal Canadiens, the Pittsburgh Penguins, and now with the Detroit Red Wings.

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons, I urge adoption of House Resolution 452.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise to also support House Resolution 452 for consideration this afternoon. Obviously, all the things that the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) has already mentioned are on my list of comments to make here on behalf of the gentlewoman from Michigan (Ms. KILPATRICK) and the other members of the Michigan delegation who, unfortunately, could not be here this afternoon to bring this matter forward and speak to it.

I do think it takes note again for the young people that are here that this is not just about winning and losing a hockey game, but more about the hard work and determination and teammanship that goes into a championship effort; and for that, the Red Wings are certainly to be congratulated for the skill, tenacity, and dominance with which they finished the regular season and then clinched the President's trophy.

They have done a great job. They deserve all the credit. For a Boston Bruins fan like myself, it is always difficult to understand that once again the Stanley Cup slipped away, but it went to a team who had a great year, was a very deserving; and we want to make sure that everybody acknowledges this important feat as well as the hard work of Mr. Bowman as the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) said, the team captain and other players there.

Their whole delegation, I am sure all of Michigan, take great pride in the work that this team and the effort that they have made.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I think it says something that a Boston Bruins, one of the original six, and a New York Rangers fan are saluting the Detroit Red Wings. They have been an awesome team, remarkable players, and truly outstanding coach; and I will just say that given that some Members have not had the opportunity to speak, with some trepidation, I am going to ask for a rollcall vote and know that my House Members from different hockey towns will have the good nature and goodwill to make this a unanimous resolution.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN), and we are honored to have in this body today a member of this body who takes great pride in being from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my friend from Massachusetts yielding me the time.

I just want to say a few words about the Red Wings as someone who has been a fan for quite a few years. The Red Wings are for Michigan more than a hockey team, and I think that is the secret.

A lot of us do care they are a successful hockey team. Some of us go back to the days when we played and there were not any indoor rinks. Some of us who are Red Wings fans used to fool around with hockey on ponds, and sometimes because the winter was not long enough, falling in while we were playing hockey.

But as I said, the Red Wings really are much more than a hockey team and that has been especially true under the ownership of Mike and Marion Ilitch. They understand what sports mean to Detroit and the whole metropolitan area in the State. They also understand, though, that sports can mean something more than just who wins and who loses.

And the Red Wings, I think, have such wonderful following because, especially under the Ilitches, and the coaches there, led by Scotty Bowman, there has been continuity. We have come to know the players. I must say, on some teams, the players change so much every year, it is hard to identify with them. But that has not been true of the Red Wings.

The team that won the championship and the Stanley Cup really melded together and became a family, taking in new members, and I think that gave us a sense of community and a sense, if I may say so, even of family. When Vladi Konstantinov was seriously injured, everybody rallied around him. And it is always a moving few moments when he rejoins the team for various events.

So I just wanted to come to the floor and to say, in tribute to the Red Wings, many thanks to all of the players, led by Steve Yzerman, the captain; to all of the coaches, led by Scotty Bowman; and to the entire Ilitch family, for making a sports team something more than a sports team. This wonderful group won the Stanley Cup, but they really also won the hearts of a lot of us in Michigan.

And if I daresay, as I close, to all my colleagues who have not been in the Detroit metropolitan area recently, there are more Red Wing flags flying from cars than you will see such flags anywhere else in America. If we who are candidates for office had just one-fiftieth of the flags that fly from the cars supporting the Red Wings, we could never lose an election. The Red Wings maybe can lose a Stanley Cup contest in future years, but they won it again this year and all of us from Michigan are very, very proud of them. And I thank the House for bringing up this resolution of congratulations.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to thank the gentleman from Michigan for his very thoughtful comments, and to say whether you are a Bruin fan, or Ranger fan, like Mr. TIERNEY and me, you can still be very happy to support this important resolution honoring the Detroit Red Wings.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the entire Detroit Red Wings organization for winning the 2002 Stanley Cup on June 13, 2002, and collecting their 10th Cup by defeating the Eastern Conference Champion Carolina Hurricanes. After 82 games, followed by perhaps the most grueling playoff setup in professional sports, the Red Wings proved once again that talent and experience could triumph over more youthful competition.

Marian and Mike Ilitch, the owners of the Red Wings and community leaders in Detroit, have once again returned Lord Stanley's Cup to "Hockeytown," where it rightfully belongs. I would like to thank the Ilitch family for their dedication to the city of Detroit, State of Michigan, and to all Red Wing fans.

Red Wing fans are indebted to retiring head coach Scotty Bowman, who has brought the Red Wings to the playoffs 7 times in the last 8 years, won three Stanley Cups in the past 6 years, and who, with this year's victory, has earned his ninth Stanley Cup victory, surpassing his mentor Toe Blake for the most championships in National Hockey League history. This is truly an amazing accomplishment and I wish him well in his retirement.

Finally, I express my congratulations to the Red Wing players for their incredible season, and for showing all of us how to perform under great pressure. I applaud the hard work and dedication which made this victory possible, and would offer my personal appreciation on behalf of Michigan's 16th Congressional District, to Captain Steve Yzerman, Brett Hull, Igor Larionov, Brendan Shanahan, Lue Robitaille, Sergei Federov, Darren McCarty, Chris Chelios, Niklas Lidstrom, Dominik Hasek, Kris Draper, Jiri Fischer, Jesse Wallin, Uwe Krupp, Mathieu Dandenault, Pavel Datsyuk, Ladislav Kohn, Kirk Maltby, Boyd Devereaux, Fredrik Olausson, Steve Duchesne, Jason Williams, Maxim Kuznetsov, Manny Legace, Jason Elliott, Sean Avery, Jiri Sleg, and Tomas Holmstrom.

With the recent signing of Curtis Joseph and re-signing of Chris Chelios, I look forward to seeing another Stanley Cup Parade in Hockeytown next year!

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in congratulations of the 2001–2002 Stanley Cup Champion Detroit Red Wings.

Although history will be the final judge, the Detroit Red Wings are already being considered one of the greatest hockey teams ever assembled. Led by the winningest coach in NHL history, a team made up of truly great players—more than half a dozen prospective Hall of Famers and a rookie class with seemingly boundless potential—the Red Wings are a team that is greater than the sum of its parts. If there is one thing that can be said about the team, it's that they could never be counted out.

Throughout the year and the playoffs, the stars stepped up and led when leadership was needed, and when the veterans had difficulties, the rookies came through when it really mattered. Under Scotty Bowman, the Red Wings came together with an offense as quick and precise as a surgeon's scalpel, and a defense as tenacious as the octopus that we in Detroit have adopted as our symbol for the playoffs.

The Red Wings have shown themselves to be outstanding role models both on and off the ice. They embody the values of teamwork, discipline and dignity, and their involvement with the community has brought it together. For our young people becoming passionate about the sport of hockey, they couldn't look up to a better group of players.

And so today I join with my colleagues in congratulating the Detroit Red Wings for their Stanley Cup victory. This team has guts, determination and finesse. Sports Illustrated has called them the New York Yankees of Hockey, but I'm not so sure that's appropriate. They're the Detroit Red Wings of Hockey, and that speaks volumes more.

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Representatives for bringing up H. Res. 452, a resolution that I, along with support from the entire Michigan delegation, introduced congratulating the Red Wings on a tremendous year that culminated in winning the 2002 Stanley Cup Championship.

As a native Detroiter, I am so proud of the Red Wings for bringing the Stanley Cup back to the City of Detroit and the State of Michigan. They showed true heart, dominance, skill, and tenacity throughout regular and post-season play in the National Hockey League. More importantly, they showed all of us that anything is possible with hard work, determination, and a strong team spirit. The Red Wings are true champions.

Thank you to head coach Scotty Bowman, who led the Red Wings to their third Stanley Cup under his leadership, with the back to back wins in 1997 and 1998. I wish, Mr. Bowman, "the Winningest Coach in Hockey," all the best in his retirement and thank him for all that he has brought to this great sport. Congratulations to President and team owner Mike Ilitch and his wife, Marian, who have shown steadfast support for the team and the City of Detroit and have been owners of the Red Wings franchise since 1982. Their commitment to the team and the City rings true everyday.

For all hockey fans out there and for anyone that knows even a little bit about hockey, clinching the Stanley Cup is no easy feat. The Red Wings went through four grueling playoff rounds and defeated four very competitive and skilled teams to win the Cup, including the 2001 Stanley Cup Championships, the Colorado Avalanche in the Western Conference finals, and the valiant Caroline Hurricanes in the Stanley Cup finals.

The Red Wings faced strong opposition, but showed their true grit and skill every step of the way, getting stronger as each playoff series progressed. All the players on the Red Wings contributed to the team's success. Deservedly, each player will have his name engraved on the Stanley Cup, which is considered to be the most coveted sports trophy in North America.

I would like to thank my Michigan colleagues for cosponsoring this resolution. We congratulate the Detroit Red Wings on an awesome year. Way to go Red Wings! Hockeytown is proud.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of congratulating the Detroit Red Wings for winning the 2002 Stanley Cup Hockey Championship.

As one of the Original Six hockey clubs, the Red Wings have proven time and time again that they are one of hockey's premiere franchises of all time. With their three to one victory over the Carolina Hurricanes in game five of the 2002 Stanley Cup Finals, the Wings clinched their third Stanley Cup in six years, totaling an impressive ten Cups since the team became a franchise in 1926. With a record like that, it makes sense that Detroit has come to be known as Hockeytown USA.

So congratulations and a special farewell go to Red Wing coach Scotty Bowman, who announced his retirement just before Steve Yzerman handed him the Cup after the final game. Congratulations also to Mike Illitch and Jimmy Devallano for putting this team together. Congratulations, obviously, to captain Steve Yzerman, to the playoff MVP Nicklas Lidstrom, to Brendan Shanahan, to goalie Dominik Hasek, and to all the members of this great club for bringing yet another of Lord Stanley's coveted chalices to Hockeytown. And congratulations to the Detroit fans that stood behind their team through it all. Mr. Speaker, we have done it again.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, House Resolution 452. The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

BLACKWATER NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE EXPANSION ACT

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4807) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire the property in Cecil County, Maryland, known as Garrett Island for inclusion in the Susquehanna National Wildlife Refuge, as amended.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge Expansion Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

(1) Garrett Island, located at the mouth of the Susquehanna River in Cecil County, Maryland, is a microcosm of the geology and geography of the region, including hard rock piedmont, coastal plain, and volcanic formations.

(2) Garrett Island is the only rocky island in the tidal waters of the Chesapeake.

(3) Garrett Island and adjacent waters provide high-quality habitat for bird and fish species.

(4) Garrett Island contains significant archeological sites reflecting human history and prehistory of the region.

SEC. 3. AUTHORITY TO ACQUIRE PROPERTY FOR INCLUSION IN THE SUSQUEHANNA NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE.

(a) ACQUISITION.—The Secretary of the Interior may use otherwise available amounts to acquire the area known as Garrett Island, consisting of approximately 198 acres located at the mouth of the Susquehanna River in Cecil County, Maryland.

(b) ADMINISTRATION.—Lands and interests acquired by the United States under this section shall be managed by the Secretary as the Garrett Island Unit of the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge.

(c) PURPOSES.—The purposes for which the Garrett Island Unit is established and shall be managed are the following:

(1) To support the Delmarva Conservation Corridor Demonstration Program.

(2) To conserve, restore, and manage habitats as necessary to contribute to the migratory bird populations prevalent in the Atlantic Flyway.

(3) To conserve, restore, and manage the significant aquatic resource values associated with submerged land adjacent to the unit and to achieve the habitat objectives of the agreement known as the Chesapeake 2000 Agreement.

(4) To conserve the archeological resources on the unit.

(5) To provide public access to the unit in a manner that does not adversely impact natural resources on and around the unit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) and the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST).

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I am pleased to present this legislation to the House of Representatives to expand the boundaries of Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge, which is located in my Congressional District in Maryland.

Garrett Island, which consists of approximately 198 acres, was the site of Maryland's second settlement in the 1600s. It is the only rocky island in the tidal waters of the Chesapeake Bay system, and it is a vital link between the Susquehanna River and the Chesapeake Bay. It also provides habitat to 44 different bird species, including eagles, common loons, tundra swans, and 14 kinds of ducks.

I have visited Garrett Island a number of times, and there is no question that its rich history, geographic location and wildlife resource values make it an excellent candidate for inclusion within the National Wildlife Refuge system. As a Nation, we can ill afford to allow unique places like Garrett Island to be lost forever.

While I was disappointed to hear the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's initial reaction to the idea was that it opposed its inclusion, I am pleased they will be visiting the island next month to evaluate its trust resources. I am confident that once a comprehensive review has been concluded, as promised by the end of the summer, the service will join me in enthusiastically urging the protection of Garrett Island.

The Cecil Land Trust has done everything they can to protect the important property, contributing $150,000 toward the purchase of the island. And based on our hearing, Federal acquisition costs would be less than $400,000, and little, if any, maintenance or personnel will be required for the future of this inclusion.

The Chesapeake Bay Foundation had it right when they wrote that steps must be taken to ensure protection of this largely unspoiled historical and geological gem. I would urge my colleagues to vote aye on H.R. 4807. This is an important and necessary inclusion in our National Wildlife Refuge system, which will celebrate its hundredth birthday next year.

This is exactly the type of place that Teddy Roosevelt had in mind when the unique system of public lands was created.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we on this side have no objection to this legislation that would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire Garrett Island for its future inclusion as part of the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge in Maryland.

Certainly the protection of the last undeveloped island in the lower reach of the Susquehanna River is a positive step toward preserving the remaining fish and wildlife habitat found near the headwaters of the Chesapeake Bay. I want to applaud the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) for this bill and for his leadership on this subcommittee on this and many other issues.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has voiced some minor reservations concerning the legislation, as we have just heard. These concerns are mostly due to the administration's ongoing effort to reevaluate current land acquisition policies governing the refuge system. However, the technical changes made to the bill, I think, will help to address these minor concerns. And the relatively low cost of acquisition should warrant a new assessment of Garrett Island by the Fish and Wildlife Service. The island is deserving of the service's full and unbiased consideration.

H.R. 4807 is a noncontroversial bill. I also urge all Members to support this legislation to help protect fish and wildlife habitat in the Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to mention just one other item.

There is a family in Cecil County, the Kilbys, that live and work on a dairy farm, and they have been strong supporters of the concept of Garrett Island being included in the National Wildlife Refuge system. There are broad and varied opportunities for this island to be included, and so I urge not only my colleagues to vote aye on this legislation, but I also urge the Interior Department, when they are visiting the island, to recognize those varied opportunities.

The United States often sends biologists, zoologists, ornithologists, you name it, to vast areas of the world to study ecosystems. We have in our backyard, here in Maryland, a magnificent Chesapeake Bay watershed ecosystem, and this island can be one of those facilities that will be included in what could be known as an island corridor in the Chesapeake Bay so that people from the University of Maryland or the Baltimore Zoo or the Baltimore Aquarium, or other universities and community colleges and even high schools do not have to travel to Brazil or Southeast Asia or regions of Africa to show their interns or their students the kinds of ecosystems that make communities drive. They can send them to the island corridor, Garrett Island being the jewel of that concept.

So I urge my colleagues to vote for this legislation. I also want to thank the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands for her support and the staff for their work on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4807, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read:

"A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire the property in Cecil County, Maryland, known as Garrett Island for inclusion in the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HONORING AMERICAN ZOO AND AQUARIUM ASSOCIATION

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 408) honoring the American Zoo and Aquarium Association and its accredited member institutions for their continued service to animal welfare, conservation education, conservation research, and wildlife conservation programs.

H. CON. RES. 408

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress recognizes and honors the American Zoo and Aquarium Association and its member institutions of zoological parks and aquariums for their dedicated service in animal welfare, conservation education, conservation research, and wildlife conservation programs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) and the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST).

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, founded in 1924, the American Zoo Association is a nonprofit organization dedicated to the advancement of zoos and aquariums. AZA institutions draw over 135 million visitors annually and have more than 5 million zoo and aquarium members. These institutions teach more than 12 million people each year in living classrooms, dedicate an estimated $50 million annually to education programs, invest an estimated $50 million annually to scientific research, and support over 1,300 field conservation research projects in 80 countries.

AZA member institutions are a critical component in the conservation of marine mammals in the wild through broad-based education research and standing recovery rehabilitation programs.

Additionally, many AZA facilities and scientists collaborate with researchers from colleges, universities, and other scientific institutions to conduct studies important to species conservation and health. AZA facilities have developed species survival plans which are cooperative long-term breeding and conservation programs that provide many species with an insurance policy against extinction. Some of the species covered by these plans include all the great apes, Africa and Asian elephants, Siberian and Sumatran tigers, and black, white Sumatran and greater one-horned rhinos.

These cooperative conservation programs support both field and institutional research to ensure that these animals are carefully managed and maintain a healthy self-sustaining population that is genetically diverse and demographically stable.

AZA institutions across the United States have maintained high curatorial and veterinarian standards for zoos and aquariums in addition to supporting programs that protect, conserve, and restore wild animal populations.

Mr. Speaker, H. Con. Res. 408 commends the American Zoo and Aquarium Association for all the great work they have done, and I urge Members to support passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise also in support of this concurrent resolution recognizing the American Zoo and Aquarium Association for its outstanding role in the conservation of the world's biodiversity and for its advancement of zoos and aquariums here and abroad.

Collectively, AZA member institutions draw over 135 million visitors each year. This affords the AZA facilities a huge opportunity and responsibility to instruct the public on the need to protect and conserve the wonders of the natural world.

The wide variety of public education and interpretive programs made available through AZA institutions admirably fulfills this mission, and I applaud the AZA for their important work towards developing the next generation of wildlife conservation.

In closing, H. Con. Res. 408 is noncontroversial, and I urge its adoption by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands and the staff on both sides of the aisle for supporting this legislation in recognizing all of those people, whether it is a tiny zoo in Cecil County, Maryland, or Salisbury, Maryland, or the magnificent aquarium in Baltimore, Maryland, to zoos and aquariums all across this country by trying to understand, and doing a pretty good job of it, of understanding the nature of the magnificence of where people fit into the natural environment on this blue planet.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for the gentleman's leadership and the work he has done to accommodate the needs and unique considerations of the territories as we work on the Committee on Resources. We have no members of AZA, but we do have Coral World in St. Thomas, and I am hoping at some point in the near future they will be a member of this wonderful organization.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Virgin Islands is a beautiful place in the Caribbean; that is its own AZA.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 408.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CELEBRATING 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF CONSTITUTION OF COMMONWEALTH OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 395) celebrating the 50th anniversary of the constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, as amended.

H. CON. RES. 395

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress celebrates the 50th anniversary of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) and the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST).

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Con. Res. 395. The gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN), the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL), and Resident Commissioner ANIBAL ACEVEDO-VILÁ worked together to compose this nonpartisan and status-neutral resolution celebrating the 50th anniversary of the constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

H. Con. Res. 395 celebrates the 50th anniversary of this important historical event in our Nation's history by listing some highlights Puerto Rico's local constitution went through in becoming adopted. The resolution is non-controversial, and I ask Members to join me in its support.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H. Con. Res. 395 is a resolution authored by the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. ACEVEDO-VILÁ) in close collaboration and with the full support of both the chairman and ranking member, the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) and the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL).

The gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. ACEVEDO-VILÁ) regrets that he is not here for the House consideration of the resolution commemorating the 50th anniversary of the constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, but a long-standing commitment in his district this morning made it impossible for him to be here until later today. He has already submitted a statement for the RECORD on his support of this historic occasion.

I take this opportunity, also, Mr. Speaker to commend the resident commissioner, the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. ACEVEDO-VILÁ) for his work on this resolution. H. Con. Res. 395 commemorates the 50th anniversary of the constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. Mindful of the spirited debate over Puerto Rico's political status, the resolution was crafted to be nonpartisan and status neutral.

The adoption of Puerto Rico's constitution began in 1950 with the enactment of the U.S. law which permitted Puerto Rico to draft its own constitution. A referendum held in March of 1952 ratified the work of a constitution convention 6 months in the making. In July 1952, Congress approved Puerto Rico's constitution, and it was thereafter signed by President Harry S. Truman as Public Law 82-447.

The relationship between Puerto Rico and the United States predates the adoption of their constitution. Their contribution to the diversity of the U.S. along with their economic and social development begins in 1898 and continues today. The constitution is but yet a milestone for Puerto Rico, and they look forward to greater political progress.

Mr. Speaker, Puerto Ricans living in my district, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and particularly my home island of St. Croix, have contributed significantly to the development of the Virgin Islands. They are now an integral part of the fabric of every facet of life in our community.

I am sure that all of the residents of the U.S. Virgin Islands join me in congratulating the esteemed Governor, Sila Calderon, and our neighbors, friends and oft times family, the people of Puerto Rico, on this 50th anniversary and wish them God's continued blessings not only during this celebration but as they continue to realize their dreams and aspirations for the future.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage Members to support this resolution. We look forward to expeditious consideration in the other body.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he might consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO).

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, I rise with utmost respect for my colleagues and with some sadness in my heart because I rise in opposition to this resolution. I do so because in our profession, perception is a strong weapon. And the perception of this weapon or the result will be that we are in fact celebrating the relationship between Puerto Rico and the United States. While that relationship has had some wonderful moments, it has never stopped, in my opinion, being a colonial relationship, in fact.

I do not think the Congress should at this moment or at any other moment celebrate and encourage continued colonial relationships. Now, why do I believe that Puerto Rico is a colony of the United States? Because while citizenship has been granted since 1917, the same rights as other American citizens have not been granted to the American citizens who live in Puerto Rico. I often startle some of my colleagues by reminding them that if any of us were to move back to Puerto Rico right now, we could not serve in Congress with a vote, we could not vote for Members of Congress, we could not vote for the President, or have full representation. Yet our citizenship supposedly would stay intact. I find it very difficult to do what I am doing, but I think it needs to be done so we can continue once and for all to discuss this issue and bring it to the front of the political discussion in this country.

A few years ago I joined with the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) in the so-called Young bill, which I think was the first real attempt for our country to tell the place where I was born what to do about its political future. What the Young bill did was say here are your options, take a vote, and 180 days from the time you take the vote, we will respond. That bill passed the House, never passed the Senate. That is sad because that bill in my opinion would have put this thing in motion.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear today that Puerto Rico remains a U.S. territory subject to the absolute powers of the U.S. Congress under the territorial clause of the United States Constitution in spite of the level of internal self-government given by the U.S. Congress.

When in 1952 the Jones Act was replaced by Public Law 447, which is what we are celebrating today, which approved the constitution of Puerto Rico, the law governing Puerto Rico changed. However, the territorial relationship previously existing did not change at all. And a territory, as we all know, is neither a State of the Union nor a nation of the world. It is simply a colony. In fact, Puerto Rico holds the dubious distinction of being the oldest colony in the world, having been a colony of Spain for over 400 years until 1898 and now a colony of the U.S. for over 100 years.

To celebrate any colonial status is to promote and prolong it. And I cannot, and I refuse to do that, however benign this resolution may seem.

This Congress should not be celebrating nor promoting the continued colonialism of Puerto Rico, and it is time we did something about it. The United Nations recognizes two options for decolonization: Puerto Rico becomes the 51st State of the Union and joins the other States with full powers and responsibilities; or Puerto Rico becomes a sovereign nation unto itself and takes its place among other nations of the world.

Under separation, there is also the option for free association where Puerto Rico could negotiate with the United States, common currency, postal service, military service; but all negotiated as equals, not as it exists today.

Rather than celebrating and promoting this status, we should let the 4 million American citizens of Puerto Rico know that the only option real to them is not the present option, but the option of statehood or independence. Most importantly and most urgently, we must move forward to put an end to this colonialism that shames both our Nation and Puerto Rico and brings indignity to the over 4 million fellow citizens living in Puerto Rico.

Mr. Speaker, I come to this discussion as a person who feels emotion on both sides. I grew up in New York City since I was a little boy coming from Puerto Rico. I was born in Puerto Rico. I grew up in a State called New York. I know the dignity and strength and democracy of being a State. I grew up in an independent Nation called the United States. I know the dignity and strength of that. That is all I ask for the place I was born in.

Let me say for those on the island who may not care for these comments, I do not approach it as someone who was born there only. I approach it as a Member of the United States Congress who, looking at the Caribbean, says today, 2002, 104 years later, Puerto Rico should no longer be a colony of the United States.

I respect my colleagues, and I know that their intent is to celebrate the relationship. However, I have some problems, serious problems, with the relationship. Statehood or independence, that is the way to go.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the constitution that we are celebrating the 50th anniversary of is really a milestone for Puerto Rico. As we have heard, this is but a step on their road to progress and a future status yet to be determined by the people of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman and his sentiment on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I do want to say that the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. ACEVEDO-VILÁ) asked us to propose this resolution for the 50th anniversary of the constitution of Puerto Rico with the full intent of giving the people of Puerto Rico a great deal of dignity. It is about that that we are discussing this issue here this afternoon.

I urge my colleagues to vote "aye" on the resolution.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, while I do not have any objections to this resolution, it does not paint the complete picture regarding the status of Puerto Rico. H. Con. Res. 395, does not represent the views of the majority of our fellow citizens in Puerto Rico.

It is important that my colleagues are aware that most of our fellow citizens in Puerto Rico and many of our citizens of Puerto Rican descent do not share the sentiments of this resolution. Many of our constituents do not support continuation of Puerto Rico's current political status.

The constitution enshrined Puerto Rico's status as a U.S. territory. Its approval attempted to legitimize the status, but it was controversial from the start. This subject to many is visceral, and several years ago nationalists were so enraged by this often-divisive issue that they fired shots in this very chamber. Their violence was unjustified and reprehensible, and world events clearly show that resorting to violence to have your voice heard does not advance one's cause. Advocates of the constitution were disappointed with the final result of an effort that was intended to enable Puerto Ricans to choose a permanent, non-territorial status as well as draft a local constitution. It only accomplished the latter goal. In fact, the counsel to the governor at the time who had a significant role in drafting not only the laws that authorized and approved the constitution but the constitution itself, recently wrote that even the constitution was "mauled" in Congress. The counsel called the vents of fifty years ago that we rise to celebrate today "a tawdry record."

In fact, approving the equivalent of a state constitution for a territory was a democratic innovation in territorial governance at the time, even though Puerto Ricans were already electing their own governor as well as legislature.

The current governing arrangement is a sad anachronism in this era. It no longer has the support of our fellow citizens in Puerto Rico. A 12-year governor from the party that is generally associated with the current status wrote a few years ago "all factions do agree on the need to end the present undemocratic arrangement, whereby Puerto Rico is subject to the laws of Congress but cannot vote in it."

In the most recent referendum on the islands' status options, in December 1998, the current status received .06% of the vote. The party that has been associated with the current status abandoned that losing proposition—and never really wanted it.

Even the most ardent defenders of the status quo, like the current Governor, recognize that the current arrangement has had its day, although in careful words. The Governor recently said that "fifty years ago" the arrangement "fared quite well when compared with the prevailing colonial arrangements then existing in the Caribbean. Half a century later there are areas where that is no longer the case."

Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the distinguished gentleman from the territory and the Governor who were elected with a plurality; they are not in a position to speak for the people of Puerto Rico on the issue. While a plurality is adequate for conducting day-to-day government functions, it is not enough to act on behalf of the islands on questions that can change the complete status of the territory. For issues of paramount importance a majority is required.

Puerto Rico has a tradition of handling all such questions on a tri-partisan basis. This resolution was not the subject of consultations with the two minority parties, which together represent a clear majority of the vote and the majority of citizens' views on status matters. It is important to note that spokesmen for the two parties have criticized the resolution because of the status that it symbolizes.

Mr. Speaker, while I do not object to H. Con. Res. 395, we should recognize that a majority of Puerto Ricans would not be pleased by our passage of this Resolution.

Mr. ACEVEDO-VILÁ. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Chairman Hansen and Ranking Member Rahall and the leadership of both parties for their support of this Concurrent Resolution celebrating the 50th anniversary of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

In order to fully appreciate the historical significance of the Constitution of the Commonwealth proclaimed in 1952, I will share with my colleagues some of the pertinent historical facts.

In 1917 Congress approved the Jones Act, conferring the U.S. citizenship to all Puerto Ricans. While citizenship has always been and remains cherished by Puerto Ricans, the Jones Act did not provide increased local rule or a democratic process through which the people of Puerto Rico could exercise their right to self-determination.

While the Jones Act included a bill of rights, the central principle of a democratic system—consent by the governed—was non-existent in Puerto Rico. Puerto Rico was therefore treated at this time like a colony. For decades, the Puerto Rican people struggled to achieve self-determination, and democratic rule. After World War II, the colonial regime founded under the Jones Act became difficult to sustain in Puerto Rico and in Washington. In 1947 Congress responded to Puerto Rico's claim for democracy, by enacting the Elective Governor Act. This statute provided for the election, every 4 years, of the governor of Puerto Rico by the people of Puerto Rico.

There years later, with Public Law 600 of 1950, Congress began a process through which the people of Puerto Rico would exercise their right to self-determination by drafting their own constitution. It is important to note that Congress did not impose this Act upon the people of Puerto Rico, but rather it made an offer to Puerto Ricans that could be accepted or rejected. Section 2 of the Act provides: "This Act shall be submitted to the qualified voters of Puerto Rico for acceptance or rejection through an island-wide referendum to be held in accordance with the laws of Puerto Rico. Upon the approval of this Act by a majority of the voters participating in such referendum, the Legislature of Puerto Rico is authorized to call a constitutional convention to draft a constitution for the said island of Puerto Rico."

Puerto Rico accepted the offer and a constitutional convention drafted the new constitution and in March 1952, the people of Puerto Rico ratified it. Months later, the President signed Public Law 447, approving the Constitution of the Commonwealth. In that Joint Resolution, Congress expressed that Public Law 600 had been approved "as a compact with the people of Puerto Rico." Finally, in July 25, 1952, Governor Luis Muñoz Marín proclaimed the Constitution of the Commonwealth.

This Constitution established a republican form of government, provided for a broad Bill of Rights that followed not only the U.S. Constitution but also the Universal Declaration of the Rights of Man. This Constitution also provided for the election of all members of the legislature by the people.

As expected, democratic rule, paved the way for cultural growth and economic development. After 1952, under the Commonwealth status, Puerto Rican culture flourished, and a stronger sense of identity grew. Our symbols were brought back to our public landscape, our flag, our anthem, etc. The Commonwealth allowed Puerto Ricans to fully and freely express their identity and their pride. Moreover, under Commonwealth, our economic foundations have grown stronger and the relationship has been very beneficial for both Puerto Rico and the United States. Today Puerto Rico consumes more U.S. goods per capita than any jurisdiction in the world and represents the 9th largest market for U.S. goods in the world. In 1999, Puerto Rico purchased $16 billion worth of U.S. products, which translates into over 320,000 jobs in the mainland U.S. Today I want my colleagues to recognize that Puerto Rico purchases more from the U.S. than much larger countries such as China, Italy, Russia and Brazil.

Clearly the Commonwealth Constitution has served well the people of Puerto Rico and the status of Commonwealth has benefited the United States.

While the Commonwealth alternative has won every referendum held on the Island since 1952, the issue of Puerto Rico's status is not settled. It is actually a highly divisive issue. As the representative of Puerto Rico in Congress I will continue working to make sure that the will of the people of Puerto Rico is heard and respected in Washington, and to make sure that any petition to improve the Commonwealth be properly addressed.

Notwithstanding the current debate of status in Puerto Rico, there is no doubt that the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico represents the greatest democratic achievement of the Puerto Rican people, in the 20th century. It is this historical achievement that we celebrate on July 25th.

The Commonwealth is the result of the pragmatic genius and the progressive spirit of a great generation of leaders in Puerto Rico and in the United States. I quote President Harry Truman on April 22, 1952, regarding the approval by Congress of the Puerto Rican Constitution: "The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico will be a government which is truly by consent of the governed. No government can be invested with higher dignity and greater worth than one based upon the principle of consent. The people of the United States and the people of Puerto Rico are entering into a new relationship that will serve as an inspiration to all who love freedom and hate tyranny. We are giving new substance to man's hope for a world with liberty and equality under law. Those who truly love freedom know that the right relationship between a government and its people is based on mutual consent and esteem. The Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is a proud document that embodies the best of our democratic heritage. I recommend its early approval by the Congress."

Some fifty year have passed since Congress ratified the Constitution of Puerto Rico. I am very proud to represent my people and to recognize and celebrate this historic event through this resolution today. It is an honor to work with my colleagues in Congress and to celebrate with all Americans the Commonwealth Constitution and our ongoing commitment to democracy, liberty, progress and self-determination.

I thank my colleagues for their support of this Resolution.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, as the ranking Democrat on the Resources Committee I want to begin by thanking JIM HANSEN for his work in getting this important resolution celebrating the 50th Anniversary of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico before the House of Representatives.

While it is true that Chairman HANSEN and I often have a difference of opinion when it comes to issues involving Puerto Rico, on the matter before us today we stand united.

I also want to commend the gentleman from Puerto Rico, Mr. ACEVEDO-VILÁ, for his diligence in bringing this measure to our attention, and working to have it considered by the House of Representatives in a timely fashion.

During my tenure in Congress, I've come to appreciate the passionate deliberations over Puerto Rico's future political status. Anyone who is familiar with this history will recognize how studious one must be in crafting legislation, or otherwise, that makes mention of Puerto Rico's political status. In this regard, I offer my deep appreciation to Mr. ACEVEDO-VILÁ for working collaboratively with both Chairman HANSEN and myself to compose a nonpartisan and status-neutral resolution recognizing this milestone for Puerto Rico.

It is times such as this occasion that we are given good cause to step back and appreciate all that the relationship between Puerto Rico and the United States has meant to each other over the years. The U.S. has benefitted from Puerto Rican achievements in business, the arts, government, and athletics. More importantly, the U.S. has been enriched by Puerto Rican history, culture, and language. I would also emphasize the in time of war the people of Puerto Rico have also shed their blood in defense of the United States of America.

For her part, Puerto Rico has capitalized on the access to economic opportunities provided to her from the U.S. relationship. The result of this, being a prosperous economy and society.

The relationship will be perfected. The determination of the people of Puerto Rico will make it so. I have a special fondness for the people of Puerto Rico. I have found them to be a hard working and diligent people with deep passions. Today, I congratulate the people of Puerto Rico on this anniversary and encourage my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 395, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 4807, H. Con. Res. 408, and H. Con. Res. 395, the legislation just debated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL AVIATION CAPACITY EXPANSION ACT OF 2002

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3479) to expand aviation capacity in the Chicago area, as amended.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—NATIONAL AVIATION CAPACITY EXPANSION

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act of 2002".

(1) O'Hare International Airport consistently ranks as the Nation's first or second busiest airport with nearly 34,000,000 annual passengers enplanements, almost all of whom travel in inter-state or foreign commerce. The Federal Aviation Administration's most recent data, compiled in the Airport Capacity Benchmark Report 2001, projects demand at O'Hare to grow by 18 percent over the next decade. O'Hare handles 72,100,000 passengers annually, compared with 64,600,000 at London Heathrow International Airport, Europe's busiest airport, and 36,700,000 at Kimpo International Airport, Korea's busiest airport, 7,400,000 at Narita International Airport, Japan's busiest airport, 23,700,000 at Kingsford-Smith International Airport, Australia's busiest airport, and 6,200,000 at Ezeiza International Airport, Argentina's busiest airport, as well as South America's busiest airport.

(2) The Airport Capacity Benchmark Report 2001 ranks O'Hare as the third most delayed airport in the United States. Overall, slightly more than 6 percent of all flights at O'Hare are delayed significantly (more than 15 minutes). On good weather days, scheduled traffic is at or above capacity for 3½ hours of the day with about 2 percent of flights at O'Hare delayed significantly. In adverse weather, capacity is lower and scheduled traffic exceeds capacity for 8 hours of the day, with about 12 percent of the flights delayed.

(3) The city of Chicago, Illinois, which owns and operates O'Hare, has been unable to pursue projects to increase the operating capability of O'Hare runways and thereby reduce delays because the city of Chicago and the State of Illinois have been unable for more than 20 years to agree on a plan for runway reconfiguration and development. State law states that such projects at O'Hare require State approval.

(4) On December 5, 2001, the Governor of Illinois and the Mayor of Chicago reached an agreement to allow the city to go forward with a proposed capacity enhancement project for O'Hare which involves redesign of the airport's runway configuration.

(5) In furtherance of such agreement, the city, with approval of the State, applied for and received a master-planning grant from the Federal Aviation Administration for the capacity enhancement project.

(6) The agreement between the city and the State is not binding on future Governors of Illinois.

(7) Future Governors of Illinois could stop the O'Hare capacity enhancement project by refusing to issue a certificate required for such project under the Illinois Aeronautics Act, or by refusing to submit airport improvement grant requests for the project, or by improperly administering the State implementation plan process under the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7401 et seq.) to prevent construction and operation of the project.

(8) The city of Chicago is unwilling to continue to go forward with the project without assurance that future Governors of Illinois will not be able to stop the project, thereby endangering the value of the investment of city and Federal resources in the project.

(9) Because of the importance of O'Hare to the national air transportation system and the growing congestion at the airport and because of the expenditure of Federal funds for a master-planning grant for expansion of capacity at O'Hare, it is important to the national air transportation system, interstate commerce, and the efficient expenditure of Federal funds, that the city of Chicago's proposals to the Federal Aviation Administration have an opportunity to be considered for Federal approval and possible funding, that the city's requests for changes to the State implementation plan to allow such projects not be denied arbitrarily, and that, if the Federal Aviation Administration approves the project and funding for a portion of its cost, the city can implement and use the project.

(10) Any application submitted by the city of Chicago for expansion of O'Hare should be evaluated by the Federal Aviation Administration and other Federal agencies under all applicable Federal laws and regulations and should be approved only if the application meets all requirements imposed by such laws and regulations.

(11) As part of the agreement between the city and the State allowing the city to submit an application for improvement of O'Hare, there has been an agreement for the continued operation of Merrill C. Meigs Field by the city, and it has also been agreed that, if the city does not follow the agreement on Meigs Field, Federal airport improvement program funds should be withheld from the city for O'Hare.

(12) To facilitate implementation of the agreement allowing the city to submit an application for O'Hare, it is desirable to require by law that Federal airport improvement program funds for O'Hare be administered to require continued operation of Merrill C. Meigs Field by the city, as proposed in the agreement.

(13) To facilitate implementation of the agreement allowing the city to submit an application for O'Hare, it is desirable to enact into law provisions of the agreement relating to noise and public roadway access. These provisions are not inconsistent with Federal law.

(14) If the Federal Aviation Administration approves an airport layout plan for O'Hare directly related to the agreement reached on December 5, 2001, such approvals will constitute an action of the United States under Federal law and will be an important first step in the process by which the Government could decide that these plans should receive Federal assistance under chapter 471 of title 49, United States Code, relating to airport development.

(15) The agreement between the State of Illinois and the city of Chicago includes agreement that the construction of an airport in Peotone, Illinois, would be proposed by the State to the Federal Aviation Administration. Like the O'Hare expansion proposal, the Peotone proposal should receive full consideration by the Federal Aviation Administration under standard procedures for approving and funding an airport improvement project, including all applicable safety, utility and efficiency, and environmental review.

(16) Gary/Chicago Airport in Gary, Indiana, and the Greater Rockford Airport, Illinois, may alleviate congestion and provide additional capacity in the greater Chicago metropolitan region. Like the O'Hare airport expansion proposal, expansion efforts by Gary/Chicago and Greater Rockford airports should receive full consideration by the Federal Aviation Administration under standard procedures for approving and funding an airport capacity improvement project, including all applicable safety, utility and efficiency, and environmental reviews.

SEC. 103. STATE, CITY, AND FAA AUTHORITY.

(a) PROHIBITION.—In furtherance of the purpose of this Act to achieve significant air transportation benefits for interstate and foreign commerce, if the Federal Aviation Administration makes, or at any time after December 5, 2001 has made, a grant to the city of Chicago, Illinois, with the approval of the State of Illinois for planning or construction of runway improvements at O'Hare International Airport, the State of Illinois, and any instrumentality or political subdivision of the State, are prohibited from exercising authority under sections 38.01, 47, and 48 of the Illinois Aeronautics Act (620 ILCS 5/) to prevent, or have the effect of preventing—

(1) further consideration by the Federal Aviation Administration of an O'Hare airport layout plan directly related to the agreement reached by the State and the city on December 5, 2001, with respect to O'Hare;

(2) construction of projects approved by the Administration in such O'Hare airport layout plan; or

(3) application by the city of Chicago for Federal airport improvement program funding for projects approved by the Administration and shown on such O'Hare airport layout plan.

(b) APPLICATIONS FOR FEDERAL FUNDING.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the city of Chicago is authorized to submit directly to the Federal Aviation Administration without the approval of the State of Illinois, applications for Federal airport improvement program funding for planning and construction of a project shown on an O'Hare airport layout plan directly related to the agreement reached on December 5, 2001, and to accept, receive, and disburse such funds without the approval of the State of Illinois.

(c) LIMITATION.—If the Federal Aviation Administration determines that an O'Hare airport layout plan directly related to the agreement reached on December 5, 2001, will not be approved by the Administration, subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall expire and be of no further effect on the date of such determination.

(d) WESTERN PUBLIC ROADWAY ACCESS.—As provided in the December 5, 2001, agreement referred to in subsection (a), the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration shall not consider an airport layout plan submitted by the city of Chicago that includes the runway redesign plan, unless the airport layout plan includes public roadway access through the existing western boundary of O'Hare to passenger terminal and parking facilities located inside the boundary of O'Hare and reasonably accessible to such western access. Approval of western public roadway access shall be subject to the condition that the cost of construction be paid for from airport revenues consistent with Administration revenue use requirements.

(e) NOISE MITIGATION.—As provided in the December 5, 2001, agreement referred to in subsection (a), the following apply:

(1) Approval by the Administrator of an airport layout plan that includes the runway redesign plan shall require the city of Chicago to offer acoustical treatment of all single-family houses and schools located within the 65 DNL noise contour for each construction phase of the runway redesign plan, subject to Administration guidelines and specifications of general applicability. The Administrator may not approve the runway redesign plan unless the city provides the Administrator with information sufficient to demonstrate that the acoustical treatment required by this paragraph is feasible.

(2)(A) Approval by the Administrator of an airport layout plan that includes the runway redesign plan shall be subject to the condition that noise impact of aircraft operations at O'Hare in the calendar year immediately following the year in which the first new runway is first used and in each calendar year thereafter will be less than the noise impact in calendar year 2000.

(B) The Administrator shall make the determination described in subparagraph (A)—

(i) using, to the extent practicable, the procedures specified in part 150 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations;

(ii) using the same method for calendar year 2000 and for each forecast year; and

(iii) by determining noise impact solely in terms of the aggregate number of square miles and the aggregate number of single-family houses and schools exposed to 65 or greater decibels using the DNL metric, including only single-family houses and schools in existence on the last day of calendar year 2000. The Administrator shall make such determination based on information provided by the city of Chicago, which shall be independently verified by the Administrator.

(C) The conditions described in this subsection shall be enforceable exclusively through the submission and approval of a noise compatibility plan under part 150 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations. The noise compatibility plan submitted by the city of Chicago shall provide for compliance with this subsection. The Administrator shall approve measures sufficient for compliance with this subsection in accordance with procedures under such part 150. The United States shall have no financial responsibility or liability if operations at O'Hare in any year do not satisfy the conditions in this subsection.

(f) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—If the runway redesign plan described in this section has not received all Federal, State, and local permits and approvals necessary to begin construction by December 31, 2004, the Administrator shall submit a status report to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives within 120 days of such date identifying each permit and approval necessary for the project and the status of each such action.

(g) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—An order issued by the Administrator, in whole or in part, under this section shall be deemed to be an order issued under part A of subtitle VII of title 49, United States Code, and shall be reviewed in accordance with the procedure in section 46110 of such title.

(h) DEFINITION.—In this section, the terms "airport layout plan directly related to the agreement reached on December 5, 2001" and "such airport layout plan" mean a plan that shows—

(1) 6 parallel runways at O'Hare oriented in the east-west direction with the capability for 4 simultaneous independent visual aircraft arrivals in both directions, and all associated taxiways, navigational facilities, and other related facilities; and

(2) closure of existing runways 14L-32R, 14R-32L and 18-36 at O'Hare.

SEC. 104. CLEAN AIR ACT.

(a) IMPLEMENTATION PLAN.—An implementation plan shall be prepared by the State of Illinois under the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7401 et seq.) in accordance with the State's customary practices for accounting for and regulating emissions associated with activity at commercial service airports. The State shall not deviate from its customary practices under the Clean Air Act for the purpose of interfering with the construction of a runway pursuant to the redesign plan or the south suburban airport. At the request of the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall, in consultation with the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration, determine that the foregoing condition has been satisfied before approving an implementation plan. Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the obligations of the State under section 176(c) of the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7506(c)).

(b) LIMITATION ON APPROVAL.—The Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration shall not approve the runway redesign plan unless the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration determines that the construction and operation will include, to the maximum extent feasible, the best management practices then reasonably available to and used by operators of commercial service airports to mitigate emissions regulated under the implementation plan.

SEC. 105. MERRILL C. MEIGS FIELD.

The State of Illinois and the city of Chicago, Illinois, have agreed to the following:

(1) Until January 1, 2026, the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration shall withhold all Federal airport grant funds respecting O'Hare International Airport, other than grants involving national security and safety, unless the Administrator is reasonably satisfied that the following conditions have been met:

(A) Merrill C. Meigs Field in Chicago either is being operated by the city of Chicago as an airport or has been closed by the Administration for reasons beyond the city's control.

(B) The city of Chicago is providing, at its own expense, all off-airport roads and other access, services, equipment, and other personal property that the city provided in connection with the operation of Meigs Field on and prior to December 1, 2001.

(C) The city of Chicago is operating Meigs Field, at its own expense, at all times as a public airport in good condition and repair open to all users capable of utilizing the airport and is maintaining the airport for such public operations at least from 6:00 A.M. to 10:00 P.M. 7 days a week whenever weather conditions permit.

(D) The city of Chicago is providing or causing its agents or independent contractors to provide all services (including police and fire protection services) provided or offered at Meigs Field on or immediately prior to December 1, 2001, including tie-down, terminal, refueling, and repair services, at rates that reflect actual costs of providing such goods and services.

(2) If Meigs Field is closed by the Administration for reasons beyond the city of Chicago's control, the conditions described in subparagraphs (B) through (D) of paragraph (1) shall not apply.

(3) After January 1, 2006, the Administrator shall not withhold Federal airport grant funds to the extent the Administrator determines that withholding of such funds would create an unreasonable burden on interstate commerce.

(4) The Administrator shall not enforce the conditions listed in paragraph (1) if the State of Illinois enacts a law on or after January 1, 2006, authorizing the closure of Meigs Field.

(5) Net operating losses resulting from operation of Meigs Field, to the extent consistent with law, are expected to be paid by the 2 air carriers at O'Hare International Airport that paid the highest amount of airport fees and charges at O'Hare International Airport for the preceding calendar year. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the city of Chicago may use airport revenues generated at O'Hare International Airport to fund the operation of Meigs Field.

SEC. 106. APPLICATION WITH EXISTING LAW.

Nothing in this Act shall give any priority to or affect availability or amounts of funds under chapter 471 of title 49, United States Code, to pay the costs of O'Hare International Airport, improvements shown on an airport layout plan directly related to the agreement reached by the State of Illinois and the city of Chicago, Illinois, on December 5, 2001.

SEC. 107. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON QUIET AIRCRAFT TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.

It is the sense of the Congress that the Office of Environment and Energy of the Federal Aviation Administration should be funded to carry out noise mitigation programming and quiet aircraft technology research and development at a level of $37,000,000 for fiscal year 2004 and $47,000,000 for fiscal year 2005.

TITLE II—AIRPORT STREAMLINING APPROVAL PROCESS

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Airport Streamlining Approval Process Act of 2002".

SEC. 202. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) airports play a major role in interstate and foreign commerce;

(2) congestion and delays at our Nation's major airports have a significant negative impact on our Nation's economy;

(3) airport capacity enhancement projects at congested airports are a national priority and should be constructed on an expedited basis;

(4) airport capacity enhancement projects must include an environmental review process that provides local citizenry an opportunity for consideration of and appropriate action to address environmental concerns; and

(5) the Federal Aviation Administration, airport authorities, communities, and other Federal, State, and local government agencies must work together to develop a plan, set and honor milestones and deadlines, and work to protect the environment while sustaining the economic vitality that will result from the continued growth of aviation.

SEC. 203. PROMOTION OF NEW RUNWAYS.

Section 40104 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(c) AIRPORT CAPACITY ENHANCEMENT PROJECTS AT CONGESTED AIRPORTS.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Administrator shall take action to encourage the construction of airport capacity enhancement projects at congested airports as those terms are defined in section 47179."

SEC. 204. AIRPORT PROJECT STREAMLINING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 471 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 47153 the following:

"SUBCHAPTER III—AIRPORT PROJECT STREAMLINING

"§ 47171. DOT as lead agency

"(a) AIRPORT PROJECT REVIEW PROCESS.—The Secretary of Transportation shall develop and implement a coordinated review process for airport capacity enhancement projects at congested airports.

“(b) COORDINATED REVIEWS.—The coordinated review process under this section shall provide that all environmental reviews, analyses, opinions, permits, licenses, and approvals that must be issued or made by a Federal agency or airport sponsor for an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport will be conducted concurrently, to the maximum extent practicable, and completed within a time period established by the Secretary, in cooperation with the agencies identified under subsection (c) with respect to the project.

“(c) IDENTIFICATION OF JURISDICTIONAL AGENCIES.—With respect to each airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport, the Secretary shall identify, as soon as practicable, all Federal and State agencies that may have jurisdiction over environmental-related matters that may be affected by the project or may be required by law to conduct an environmental-related review or analysis of the project or determine whether to issue an environmental-related permit, license, or approval for the project.

“(d) STATE AUTHORITY.—If a coordinated review process is being implemented under this section by the Secretary with respect to a project at an airport within the boundaries of a State, the State, consistent with State law, may choose to participate in such process and provide that all State agencies that have jurisdiction over environmental-related matters that may be affected by the project or may be required by law to conduct an environmental-related review or analysis of the project or determine whether to issue an environmental-related permit, license, or approval for the project, be subject to the process.

“(e) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—The coordinated review process developed under this section may be incorporated into a memorandum of understanding for a project between the Secretary and the heads of other Federal and State agencies identified under subsection (c) with respect to the project and the airport sponsor.

“(f) EFFECT OF FAILURE TO MEET DEADLINE.—

“(1) NOTIFICATION OF CONGRESS AND CEQ.—If the Secretary determines that a Federal agency, State agency, or airport sponsor that is participating in a coordinated review process under this section with respect to a project has not met a deadline established under subsection (b) for the project, the Secretary shall notify, within 30 days of the date of such determination, the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, the Council on Environmental Quality, and the agency or sponsor involved about the failure to meet the deadline.

“(2) AGENCY REPORT.—Not later than 30 days after date of receipt of a notice under paragraph (1), the agency or sponsor involved shall submit a report to the Secretary, the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, and the Council on Environmental Quality explaining why the agency or sponsor did not meet the deadline and what actions it intends to take to complete or issue the required review, analysis, opinion, license, or approval.

“(g) PURPOSE AND NEED.—For any environmental review, analysis, opinion, permit, license, or approval that must be issued or made by a Federal or State agency that is participating in a coordinated review process under this section with respect to an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport and that requires an analysis of purpose and need for the project, the agency, notwithstanding any other provision of law, shall be bound by the project purpose and need as defined by the Secretary.

“(h) ALTERNATIVES ANALYSIS.—The Secretary shall determine the reasonable alternatives to an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport. Any other Federal or State agency that is participating in a coordinated review process under this section with respect to the project shall consider only those alternatives to the project that the Secretary has determined are reasonable.

“Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary of Transportation shall develop and publish a list of categorical exclusions from the requirement that an environmental assessment or an environmental impact statement be prepared under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) for projects at airports.

“§ 47173. Access restrictions to ease construction

“At the request of an airport sponsor for a congested airport, the Secretary of Transportation may approve a restriction on use of a runway to be constructed at the airport to minimize potentially significant adverse noise impacts from the runway only if the Secretary determines that imposition of the restriction—

“(1) is necessary to mitigate those impacts and expedite construction of the runway;

“(2) is the most appropriate and a cost-effective measure to mitigate those impacts, taking into consideration any environmental tradeoffs associated with the restriction; and

“(3) would not adversely affect service to small communities, adversely affect safety or efficiency of the national airspace system, unjustly discriminate against any class of user of the airport, or impose an undue burden on interstate or foreign commerce.

“§ 47174. Airport revenue to pay for mitigation

“(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 47107(b), section 47133, or any other provision of this title, the Secretary of Transportation may allow an airport sponsor carrying out an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport to make payments, out of revenues generated at the airport (including local taxes on aviation fuel), for measures to mitigate the environmental impacts of the project if the Secretary finds that—

“(1) the mitigation measures are included as part of, or are consistent with, the preferred alternative for the project in the documentation prepared pursuant to the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.);

“(2) the use of such revenues will provide a significant incentive for, or remove an impediment to, approval of the project by a State or local government; and

“(3) the cost of the mitigation measures is reasonable in relation to the mitigation that will be achieved.

“(b) MITIGATION OF AIRCRAFT NOISE.—Mitigation measures described in subsection (a) may include the insulation of residential buildings and buildings used primarily for educational or medical purposes to mitigate the effects of aircraft noise and the improvement of such buildings as required for the insulation of the buildings under local building codes.

“(a) ACCEPTANCE OF SPONSOR-PROVIDED FUNDS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration may accept funds from an airport sponsor, including funds provided to the sponsor under section 47114(c), to hire additional staff or obtain the services of consultants in order to facilitate the timely processing, review, and completion of environmental activities associated with an airport development project.

“(b) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISION.—Instead of payment from an airport sponsor from funds apportioned to the sponsor under section 47114, the Administrator, with agreement of the sponsor, may transfer funds that would otherwise be apportioned to the sponsor under section 47114 to the account used by the Administrator for activities described in subsection (a).

“(1) shall be credited as offsetting collections to the account that finances the activities and services for which the funds are accepted;

“(2) shall be available for expenditure only to pay the costs of activities and services for which the funds are accepted; and

“(3) shall remain available until expended.

“(d) MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT.—No funds may be accepted pursuant to subsection (a), or transferred pursuant to subsection (b), in any fiscal year in which the Federal Aviation Administration does not allocate at least the amount it expended in fiscal year 2002, excluding amounts accepted pursuant to section 337 of the Department of Transportation and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2002 (115 Stat. 862), for the activities described in subsection (a).

“In addition to the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 106(k), there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Transportation, out of the Airport and Airway Trust Fund established under section 9502 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 9502), $2,100,000 for fiscal year 2003 and $4,200,000 for each fiscal year thereafter to facilitate the timely processing, review, and completion of environmental activities associated with airport capacity enhancement projects at congested airports.

“(a) FILING AND VENUE.—A person disclosing a substantial interest in an order issued by the Secretary of Transportation or the head of any other Federal agency under this part or a person or agency relying on any determination made under this part may apply for review of the order by filing a petition for review in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or in the court of appeals of the United States for the circuit in which the person resides or has its principal place of business. The petition must be filed not later than 60 days after the order is issued. The court may allow the petition to be filed after the 60th day only if there are reasonable grounds for not filing by the 60th day.

“(b) JUDICIAL PROCEDURES.—When a petition is filed under subsection (a) of this section, the clerk of the court immediately shall send a copy of the petition to the Secretary or the head of any other Federal agency involved. The Secretary or the head of such other agency shall file with the court a record of any proceeding in which the order was issued.

“(c) AUTHORITY OF COURT.—When the petition is sent to the Secretary or the head of any other Federal agency involved, the court has exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, amend, modify, or set aside any part of the order and may order the Secretary or the head of such other agency to conduct further proceedings. After reasonable notice to the Secretary or the head of such other agency, the court may grant interim relief by staying the order or taking other appropriate action when good cause for its action exists. Findings of fact by the Secretary or the head of such other agency are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

“(d) REQUIREMENT FOR PRIOR OBJECTION.—In reviewing an order of the Secretary or the head of any other Federal agency under this section, the court may consider an objection to the action of the Secretary or the head of such other agency only if the objection was made in the proceeding conducted by the Secretary or the head of such other agency or if there was a reasonable ground for not making the objection in the proceeding.

“(f) ORDER DEFINED.—In this section, the term ‘order’ includes a record of decision or a finding of no significant impact.

“(1) AIRPORT SPONSOR.—The term ‘airport sponsor’ has the meaning given the term ‘sponsor’ under section 47102.

“(2) CONGESTED AIRPORT.—The term ‘congested airport’ means an airport that accounted for at least 1 percent of all delayed aircraft operations in the United States in the most recent year for which such data is available and an airport listed in table 1 of the Federal Aviation Administration’s Airport Capacity Benchmark Report 2001.

“(A) a project for construction or extension of a runway, including any land acquisition, taxiway, or safety area associated with the runway or runway extension; and

“(B) such other airport development projects as the Secretary may designate as facilitating a reduction in air traffic congestion and delays.”

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for chapter 471 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following:

SEC. 205. GOVERNOR’S CERTIFICATE.

Section 47106(c) of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by inserting “and” after the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (A)(ii);

(B) by striking subparagraph (B); and

(C) by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (B);

(2) in paragraph (2)(A) by striking “stage 2” and inserting “stage 3”;

(3) by striking paragraph (4); and

(4) by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (4).

SEC. 206. CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN AIRPORT CAPACITY PROJECTS.

(1) by striking “and” at the end of subparagraph (C);

(2) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (D) and inserting “; and”; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

“(E) to an airport operator of a congested airport (as defined in section 47178) and a unit of local government referred to in paragraph (1)(A) or (1)(B) of this subsection to carry out a project to mitigate noise in the area surrounding the airport if the project is included as a commitment in a record of decision of the Federal Aviation Administration for an airport capacity enhancement project (as defined in section 47178) even if that airport has not met the requirements of part 150 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations.”

SEC. 207. LIMITATIONS.

Nothing in this Act, including any amendment made by this Act, shall preempt or interfere with—

(1) any practice of seeking public comment; and

(2) any power, jurisdiction, or authority of a State agency or an airport sponsor has with respect to carrying out an airport capacity enhancement project.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) each will control 20 minutes.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I seek the time in true opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would inquire if the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) is opposed to the motion.

Mr. LIPINSKI. No, Mr. Speaker, I am not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under clause 1(c) of rule XV, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON) to control the time in opposition to the motion.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK).

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, out of deference to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), I would like him to control 10 minutes of the time available to me during the debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) will control 10 minutes of the time allotted to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) for this debate.

There was no objection.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am a proud cosponsor of this legislation. I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) for authoring it and Speaker HASTERT for calling it to the floor.

O’Hare is our Nation’s busiest airport. More passengers use O’Hare International Airport than New York’s LaGuardia, Washington’s Reagan, and Boston’s Logan Airports combined. O’Hare is an engine of economic growth, affecting jobs and income for thousands of Illinois families. Experts say when O’Hare gets a cold, other airports get pneumonia. Delays at O’Hare leave travelers stranded around the world. Today, scheduled departures at O’Hare have only a two-thirds chance of actually leaving on time. Without modernization, air travelers will continue to be delayed and Chicago’s economy will stall.

This legislation does not impose a Washington solution. Illinois is one of only two States that requires the Governor’s approval for runway modification. We have that approval. This legislation ratifies a historic agreement between Chicago’s Democratic mayor and the Republican Governor of Illinois. It represents a local agreement made by elected officials who showed leadership.

Enactment of this legislation unlocks over $6 billion in economic development, overwhelmingly paid for from private, not public, funds. The new airport will use parallel runways that are safer than the intersecting runways we use today. The new plan will help reduce airport noise over Arlington Heights, Mount Prospect and Palatine. To the leaders of the O’Hare Noise Compatibility Commission, Mayor Arlene Mulder and Mayor Rita Mullins, our plan opens the way for more work on enhanced noise control programs, soundproofing for schools, and research into super quiet Stage IV aircraft, issues for which they have fought for years.

Our plan upholds environmental safeguards and improves the quality of life for people in northern Illinois by reducing noise and making the airport more efficient. This legislation represents cooperation and collaboration between Republicans and Democrats, both in Illinois and in Washington. Tonight, half of the Congress will say “yes” to O’Hare and provide a strong impetus for the Senate to make this project a reality before Congress adjourns.

I urge adoption of this legislation, and I compliment the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), my partner on this effort.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 3479. Votes on the suspension calendar are supposed to be, by definition, noncontroversial. But to argue that H.R. 3479 is noncontroversial is like arguing that the elimination of estate taxes, gun control legislation, a patients’ bill of rights, and prescription drug benefits for seniors should all be put on the suspension calendar. H.R. 3479 is the most controversial of bills to come before the House this year. It has been extremely controversial in Chicago, in the northwest suburbs, in Illinois generally, in the Illinois congressional delegation where our two U.S. Senators are divided over it, in all House and Senate committees, in the full Senate, and if a full debate were held here on the House floor today, the Nation would actually see just how controversial this bill is.

This bill has already been delayed in the Senate with one virtual filibuster. It will be subjected to every parliamentary and tactical maneuver possible to try to stop it when it comes before the Senate again. Hardly noncontroversial. To tear down and rebuild O'Hare will cost taxpayers three times as much money as it will cost to build a third south suburban airport, 15 to $20 billion, not the $6.6 billion that has been floated about during this debate, versus the 5 to $7 billion to build a third airport. This bill, Mr. Speaker, is highly controversial. Tearing down and rebuilding O'Hare is estimated to take 15 to 20 years, assuming it proceeds on schedule, without lawsuits, which is not likely, while building a new south suburban airport would only take 5 years, it would expand thereafter as need arises and would be a more permanent solution to the capacity crisis. When the new O'Hare is completed, we will be in the same position we are today with regard to the air capacity crisis. How can that possibly not be seen as controversial?

This bill will increase environmental pollution. O'Hare already is the number one polluter in Illinois. Hardly noncontroversial. The Chicago Tribune won a Pulitzer Prize for documenting the sleaze surrounding Chicago O'Hare and its vendor and service contracts, hardly an uncontroversial bill for Congress to be considering without full debate.

But, Mr. Speaker, most importantly, H.R. 3479 falls woefully short of providing an adequate, equitable solution to a profound problem. Although I oppose this bill for many reasons, I rise today to discuss an important element of this bill, its constitutionality. By the attempt to rebuild and expand O'Hare Airport, Congress is inappropriately violating the 10th amendment. Under the framework of federalism established by the Federal Constitution, Congress is without power to dictate to the States how the States delegate power, or limit the delegation of that power, to their political subdivisions. Unless and until Congress decides that the Federal Government should build airports, airports will continue to be built by States or their delegated agents, State political subdivisions or other agents of State power, as an exercise of State law and State power.

Further compliance by the political subdivision of the oversight conditions imposed by the State legislature as a condition of delegating the State law authority to build airports is an essential element of that delegation of State power. If Congress strips away a key element of that State law delegation, it is highly unlikely that the political subdivision, the city of Chicago, would continue to have the power to build airports under State law. The political subdivision's attempts to build runways would likely be ultra vires, without authority, under State law.

Under the 10th amendment and the framework of federalism built into the Constitution, Congress cannot command the States to affirmatively undertake an activity. Nor can Congress intrude upon or dictate to the States the prerogatives of the States as to how to allocate and exercise their State power, either directly or by the State or by delegation of State authority to its political subdivisions.

It is increasingly clear, Mr. Speaker, that under New York v. United States, Printz v. United States, Gregory v. Ashcroft, and Reno v. Condon that this bill is without the authority of the Constitution of the United States, and our position is that we stand firmly on the side of our Founding Fathers when Congress seeks to impose upon the State of Illinois, ignoring the Illinois Aeronautics Act, this unconstitutional piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 3479.

Votes on the suspension calendar are supposed to be, by definition, noncontroversial. But to argue that H.R. 3479 is noncontroversial is like arguing that the elimination of estate taxes, gun control legislation, a patients bill of rights, and prescription drug benefits for seniors should all be on the suspension calendar. H.R. 3479 is one of the most controversial bills to come before the House this year. It has been extremely controversial in Chicago, in the northwest suburbs, in Illinois generally, in the Illinois congressional delegation (our two U.S. Senators are divided over it), in all House and Senate Committees, in the full Senate, and, if a full debate were held on the House floor today, the nation would see just how controversial this bill is.

This bill has already been delayed in the Senate with one virtual filibuster—and it will be subjected to every parliamentary and tactical maneuver possible to try to stop it when it comes before the Senate again. Hardly noncontroversial!

To tear down and rebuild O'Hare will cost taxpayers three times as much money as it will cost to build a third South Suburban airport—$15–20 billion (not the $6.6 billion generally used) versus $5–7 billion. This bill is hardly noncontroversial for taxpayers!

Tearing down and rebuilding O'Hare is estimated to take 15–20 years, assuming it proceeds on schedule, without lawsuits—not likely—while building a new South Suburban Airport would take five years, it would expand thereafter as need arises, and would be a more permanent solution to the capacity crisis. When the new O'Hare is completed, we will be in the same position we are today with regard to the air capacity crisis. How is that not controversial?

This bill will double the noise pollution in the suburban communities surrounding O'Hare. It is hardly noncontroversial in the polluted northwest suburbs of Chicago.

Doubling the traffic in the air space around O'Hare from 900,000 to 1.6 million operations will make flying into O'Hare less safe for the public—hardly noncontroversial for the flying public.

This bill will increase environmental pollution—O'Hare is already the number one polluter in Illinois—hardly noncontroversial for those having to live in the increased pollution.

The Chicago Tribune won a Pulitzer Prize for documenting “sleaze” surrounding the City of Chicago and past O'Hare construction, vendor, and service contracts. By passing this bill—and removing the Illinois Aeronautics Law and by-passing the Illinois General Assembly—we are virtually sanctioning more “sleaze” to be found around O'Hare construction, vendor, and service contracts. Since when has such potential “sleaze” become noncontroversial for Congress.

I don't consider the Federal Government running over any future Governor of Illinois, the Illinois General Assembly, the Illinois Aeronautics Law, and the 10th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution—to build an airport—noncontroversial.

Finally, we're already finding out how controversial this bill is as Judge Hollis Webster on July 9, 2002, stopped the City of Chicago from running rough-shod over their northwest suburban neighbors by illegally trying to buy up and tear down their homes and businesses to make room for O'Hare expansion. This is just one of many controversial lawsuits that have been and will be filed in the future if this bill passes and becomes law.

How is tearing down and rebuilding O'Hare—which will be three times as expensive, take three times longer, be less protective of the environment, make the skys less safe, and be a less permanent solution than building a third airport—noncontroversial? I say, solve the current air capacity crisis by building Peotone first, faster, cheaper, and safer, then evaluate what needs to be done with O'Hare.

H.R. 3479 fall woefully short of providing an adequate, equitable solution.

Please know that I do not oppose fixing the current air capacity crisis surrounding O'Hare. But I have many, many grave concerns about this specific expansion plan. Concerns about cost. About safety. About environmental impact. About federal precedence—and I associate myself completely with the remarks of my good friend, Mr. HYDE.

Although I oppose this bill for many reasons, I rise today to discuss an important element of this bill—constitutionality.

The attempt to rebuild and expand O'Hare Airport—Congress is inappropriately violating the Tenth Amendment.

In other contexts—specifically with regard to certain human rights—I believe that the Tenth Amendment serves to place limitations on the federal government with which I disagree. Indeed, in the area of human rights, I believe new amendments must be added to the Constitution to overcome the limitations of the Tenth Amendment. However, building airports is not a human right. Therefore, in the present context, I agree that building airports is appropriately within the purview of the states.

I believe attempts by Congress to strip the authority of Governor Ryan and the Illinois Legislature over the delegation and authorization to Chicago of state power to build airports—along with the authority of governors and state legislatures in a host of other states such as Massachusetts (Logan), New York (LaGuardia and JFK), New Jersey (Newark), California (San Francisco airport), and the State of Washington (Seattle)—raise serious constitutional questions.

Under the framework of federalism established by the federal constitution, Congress is without power to dictate to the states how the states delegate power—or limit the delegation of that power—to their political subdivisions. Unless and until Congress decides that the federal government should build airports, airports will continue to be built by states or their delegated agents (state political subdivisions or other agents of state power) as an exercise of state law and state power. Further compliance by the political subdivision of the oversight conditions imposed by the State legislature as a condition of delegating the state law authority to build airports is an essential element of that delegation of state power. If Congress strips away a key element of that state law delegation, it is highly unlikely that the political subdivision would continue to have the power to build airports under state law. The political subdivision's attempts to build runways would likely be ultra vires (without authority) under state law.

Under the Tenth Amendment and the framework of federalism built into the Constitution, Congress cannot command the States to affirmatively undertake an activity. Nor can Congress intrude upon or dictate to the states, the prerogatives of the states as to how to allocate and exercise state power—either directly by the state or by delegation of state authority to its political subdivisions.

As stated by the United States Supreme Court:

[T]he Framers explicitly chose a Constitution that confers upon Congress the power to regulate individuals, not States. . . . We have always understood that even where Congress has the authority under the Constitution to pass laws requiring or prohibiting certain acts, it lacks the power directly to compel the States to require or prohibit those acts. New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144, at 166 (1992) (emphasis added)

It is incontestable that the Constitution established a system of "dual sovereignty." Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898, 981 (1997) (emphasis added)

Although the States surrendered many of their powers to the new Federal Government, they retained "a residuary and inviolable sovereignty." The Federalist No. 39, at 245 (J. Madison). This is reflected throughout the Constitution's text.

Residual state sovereignty was also implicit, of course, in the Constitution's conferral upon Congress of not all governmental powers, but only discrete, enumerated ones, Art. I, Sec. 8, which implication was rendered express by the Tenth Amendment's assertion that "[t]he powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." Id. at 918-919.

This separation of the two spheres is one of the Constitution's structural protections of liberty. "Just as the separation and independence of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government serve to prevent the accumulation of excessive power in any one branch, a health balance of power between the States and the Federal Government will reduce the risk of tyranny and abuse from either front. Id. at 921 quoting Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452 at 458 (1991)

The Supreme Court in Printz went on to emphasize that this constitutional structural barrier to the Congress introducing on the States' sovereignty could not be avoided by claiming either (a) that the congressional authority was pursuant to the Commerce Power and the "necessary and proper clause of the Constitution or (b) that the federal law 'preempted' state law under the Supremacy Clause. 521 U.S. at 923-924.

It is important to note that Congress can regulate—but not affirmatively command—the states when the state decides to engage in interstate commerce. See Reno v. Condon, 528 U.S. 141 (2002). Thus in Reno, the Court upheld an act of Congress that restricted the ability of the state to distribute personal drivers' license information. But Reno did not involve an affirmative command of Congress to a state to affirmatively undertake an activity desired by Congress. Nor did Reno involve (as proposed here) an intrusion by the federal government into the delegation of state power by a state legislature—and the state legislature's express limits on that delegation of state power—to a state political subdivision.

H.R. 3479 would involve a federal law which would prohibit a state from restricting or limiting the delegated exercise of state power by a state's political subdivision. In this case, the proposed federal law would seek to bar the Illinois Legislature from deciding the allocation of the state's power to build an airport or runways—and especially the limits and conditions imposed by the State of Illinois on the delegation of that power to Chicago. The law is clear that Congress has no power to intrude upon or interfere with a state's decision as to how to allocate state power.

A state's authority to create, modify, or even eliminate the structure and power of the state's political subdivision—whether that subdivision be Chicago, Bensenville, or Elmhurst—is a matter left by our system of federalism and our federal Constitution to the exclusive authority of the states. As stated by the Seventh Circuit in Commissioners of Highways v. United States, 653 F.2d 292 (7th Cir. 1981) (quoting Hunter v. City of Pittsburgh, 207 U.S. 161, 178 (1907)):

Municipal corporations are political subdivisions of the State, created as convenient agencies for exercising such of the governmental powers of the State as may be entrusted to them. For the purpose of executing these powers properly and efficiently they usually are given the power to acquire, hold, and manage personal and real property. The number, nature and duration of the powers conferred upon these corporations and the territory over which they shall be exercised rests in the absolute discretion of the State. . . . The State, therefore, at its pleasure may modify or withdraw all such power, may take without compensation such property, hold it itself, or vest it in other agencies, expand or contract the territorial area, unite the whole or a part of it with another municipality, repeal the charter and destroy the corporation. All this may be done, conditionally or unconditionally, with or without the consent of the citizens, or even against their protest. In all these respects the State is supreme, and its legislative body, conforming its action to the state constitution, may do as it will, unrestrained by any provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Commissioners of Highways, 653 F.2d at 297 Chicago has acknowledged that Illinois has delegated its power to build and operate airports to its political subdivisions by express statutory delegation. 65 ILCS 5/11-102-1, 11-102-2 and 11-102-5. These state law delegations of the power to build airports and runways are subject to the Illinois Aeronautics Act requirements—including the requirement that the State approve any alterations of the airport—by their express terms. Any attempt by Congress to remove a condition or limitation imposed by the Illinois Legislature on the terms of that state law delegation of authority would likely destroy the delegation of state authority to build airports by the Illinois Legislature to Chicago—leaving Chicago without delegated state legislative authority to build runways and terminals at O'Hare or midway. The requirement that Chicago receive a state permit is an express condition of the grant of state authority and an attempt by Congress to remove that condition or limitation would mean that there was no continuing valid state delegation of authority to Chicago to build airports. Chicago's attempts to build new runways would be ultra vires under state law as being without the required state legislative authority.

Clearly this bill sets dangerous precedence by stating that Congress—not the FAA, not Departments of Transportation, not aviation experts—but Congress shall plan and build airports.

Further, it ignores the 10th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. It guts and/or undermines state laws and environmental protections. And it sidesteps the checks-and-balances and the public hearing process.

My focus today is the same as it's always been. Finding the best fix. And that best fix is the construction of a third Chicago airport near Peotone, Illinois. The plain truth is Peotone could be built in one-third the time at one-third the cost. For taxpayers and travelers, it's a no-brainer.

Unfortunately, this bill mandates expansion of O'Hare yet pays mere lip service to Peotone. It puts the projects on two separate and unequal tracks. That is my opinion. That is also the opinion of the Congressional Research Service, whose analysis I will provide for the record.

What we don't need at this critical juncture is favoritism or interference from politicians and profit-oriented airlines to stack the deck against Peotone. What we don't need is a bill that increases the likelihood of a constitutional challenge that prolongs the debate and delays the fix.

Thus, I urge members to reject this unprecedented, unwise, and unconstitutional bill.

Re: Proposed federal legislation granting new powers to the city of Chicago.

Hon. JESSE L. JACKSON, JR.,

House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN JACKSON. As you know, I serve as the Albert E. Jenner Professor of Law at the University of Illinois Law School. I have authored a leading course book on Constitutional Law, published by West Publishing Company. In addition, I co-author, along with my colleague John Nowak, the widely-used multi-volume Treatise on Constitutional Law, published by West Publishing Company. In addition to my books, I have taught and researched in the area of Constitutional Law since 1974.

I have been asked to give my opinion on the constitutionality of proposed federal legislation entitled "National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act," identical versions of which have been introduced in both the Senate and the House of Representatives by Senator Durbin and Congressman Lipinski (S. 1786, HR 3479), hereafter the "Durbin-Lipinski legislation."

The Durbin-Lipinski legislation seeks to enact Congressional approval of a proposal to construct a major alteration of O'Hare Airport in Chicago. While this legislation focuses on Chicago and the State of Illinois, the issues raised by the legislation have serious constitutional implications for all 50 States.

There are two key components of the legislation that have been the subject of my examination.

First Section 3(a)(3) attempts to give the City of Chicago (a political subdivision and instrumentality of the State of Illinois) the legal power and authority to build a proposed major alteration of O'Hare even though state law does not authorize Chicago to build the alteration without first receiving a permit from the State of Illinois. Chicago, as a legal entity, is entirely a creation of state—not federal law—and Chicago's authority to build airports is essentially an exercise of state law power delegated to Chicago by the Illinois General Assembly.

The requirement that Chicago first obtain a state permit is an integral and essential element of that delegation of state power. The U.S. Constitution prohibits Congress (1) from invading and commandeering the exercise of state power to build airports, and (2) from changing the allocation of state-created power between the State of Illinois and its political subdivisions. The U.S. Constitution, in short, prohibits Congress from essentially rewriting state law dealing with the delegation of state power by eliminating the conditions, restrictions, and prohibitions imposed by the Illinois General Assembly on that delegation. These constitutional restrictions on Congress' power—which prohibit Congress from requiring states to change their state laws governing cities—are often termed Tenth Amendment restrictions.

Similarly, the provisions of Section 3(f) of the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation are necessarily conditioned upon the existence of state law authority of Chicago to enter into agreements for a third party (the FAA) to alter O'Hare without first obtaining a permit from the State of Illinois. But Chicago has no state law authority (under the delegation of state power to build and alter airports) to enter into an agreement to engage in a massive alteration of O'Hare without a state permit. Congress cannot confer powers on a political subdivision of a State where the State has expressly limited its delegation of state power to build airports to require a state permit. Congress has no constitutional authority to create powers in an instrumentality of State law (Chicago) when the very authority and power of Chicago to undertake the actions proposed by Congress depends on compliance with—and is contrary to—the mandates of the Illinois General Assembly.

For the reasons discussed below, it is my opinion that the proposed legislation is unconstitutional.

1. Under the governing United States Supreme Court decisions of New York v. United States and Printz v. United States, which are discussed below, the proposed legislation is not supported by any enumerated power and thus violates the limitations of the Tenth Amendment of the Constitution. In these decisions, the Supreme Court held that legislation passed by Congress, purportedly relying on its exercise of the Commerce Power (nuclear waste legislation in New York and gun control legislation in Printz) was unconstitutional because the federal laws essentially commandeered state law powers of the States as instrumentalities of federal policy.

2. The same constitutional flaws afflict the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation. Central to the Durbin-Lipinski legislation are two provisions [sections 3(a)(3) and 3(f)] that purport to empower or authorize Chicago (a political instrumentality of the State of Illinois, and thus a city that has no authority or even legal existence independent of state law) to undertake actions for which Chicago has not received any delegation of authority from the State of Illinois and that, in fact, are directly prohibited by Illinois law when the conditions and limitations of the State delegation of authority have not been satisfied.

3. Under Illinois law, Chicago (like any other political subdivision of a State) has no authority to undertake any activity (including constructing airports) without a grant of state authority from the State of Illinois. Under Illinois law, actions taken by political subdivisions of the State (e.g., Chicago) without a grant of authority from the State, or actions taken by political subdivision in violation of the conditions, limitations or prohibitions imposed by the State in delegating the state authority, are plainly ultra vires, illegal, and unenforceable. The City of Chicago is a creature of state law, not federal law.

4. The power exercised by any state political subdivision (e.g., the power to construct airports) is in reality a power of the State—not inherent in the existence of the political subdivision. For the political subdivision to have the legal authority to exercise that state power, there must be a delegation of that state power by the State to the political subdivision. Further, it is axiomatic that any such delegation of state power to a political subdivision must be exercised in accordance with the conditions, limitations, and prohibitions accompanying the State's delegation of that power.

5. In the case of airport construction, the Illinois General Assembly has enacted a statute that delegated to Chicago (and other municipalities) the state law power to construct airports explicitly and specifically subject to certain limits and conditions that the General Assembly imposed. One basic requirement is that Chicago must first comply with all of the requirements of the Illinois Aeronautics Act—including the requirement that Chicago first receive a permit (a certificate of approval) from the State of Illinois. The Illinois General Assembly has expressly provided that municipal construction or alteration of an airport without such a state permit is unlawful and ultra vires.

6. Section 3(a)(3) of the Durbin-Lipinski legislation expressly authorizes Chicago to proceed with the "runway redesign plan" (a multi-billion dollar modification of O'Hare) without regard to the clear delegation limitations and prohibitions imposed by the Illinois General Assembly on the state statutory delegation to Chicago of the state law power to construct airports. Illinois law explicitly says Chicago has no state law authority to build or alter airports without first complying with the Illinois Aeronautics Act, including the state permitting requirements of §47 of that Act. Even though Chicago (a political creation and instrumentality of the State of Illinois) has no power to build or modify airports (a state law power) unless Chicago obtains State approval, Section 3(a)(3) purports to infuse Chicago (which has no legal existence independent of state law) with a federal power to build airports and to disregard Chicago's fundamental lack of power under state law to undertake such actions (absent compliance with state law). Like New York v. United States and Printz v. United States the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation involved Congress attempting to use a legal instrumentality of a State (i.e., the state power to build airports exercised through its delegated state-created instrumentality, the city of Chicago) as an instrument of federal power. As the Supreme Court held in New York and Printz, the Tenth Amendment—and the structure of "dual sovereignty" it represents under our constitutional structure of federalism—prohibits the federal government from using the Commerce power to conscript state instrumentalities as its agents.

7. Similar problems articulated in New York and Printz fatally afflict Section 3(f) of the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation. That section provides that, if (for whatever reason) construction of the "runway design plan" is not underway by July 1, 2004, then the FAA Administrator (a federal agency) shall construct the "runway redesign plan" as a "Federal Project". But, Section 3(f)(1) then provides that this "federal project" must obtain several agreements and undertakings from Chicago—agreements and undertakings that are controlled by state law, which limits Chicago's authority to enter into such agreements or accept such undertakings. Chicago has no authority under the state law (which confers upon Chicago the state power to construct airports) to enter into agreements with any third party (be it the United States or a private party) to make alterations of an airport without the state permit required by state statute. Thus, Chicago has no authority under state law to enter into an agreement with the FAA Administrator to have the runway redesign plan constructed by the Federal government because Chicago has not received approval from the State of Illinois under the Illinois Aeronautics Act—a specific condition and prohibition of the delegation of state power (to build airports) to Chicago by the Illinois General Assembly. Just as Chicago (a creation and instrumentality of the State of Illinois) has no power or authority under state law (absent compliance with the Illinois Aeronautics Act) to enter into an agreement for the FAA to construct the runway redesign plan, Chicago also has no power or authority (absent compliance with the Illinois Aeronautics Act) to enter into the other agreements provided for in Sections 3(f)(1)(B) of the Durbin-Lipinski legislation. Again, Section 3(f) is an attempt to have Congress use the Commerce power to conscript state instrumentalities as its agents. Instead of Congress regulating interstate commerce directly (which both New York v. United States and Printz allow), the Durbin-Lipinski legislation seeks to regulate how the State regulates one of its cities (which both New York v. United States and Printz do not allow).

8. The Durbin-Lipinski legislation is not a law of "general application". There is a line of Supreme Court decisions which allow Congress to use the Commerce Power to impose obligations on the States when the obligations imposed on the States are part of laws which are "generally applicable" i.e., that impose obligations on the States and on private parties alike. See e.g., Reno v. Condon, 528 U.S. 141 (2000) (Federal rule protecting privacy of drivers' records upheld because they do not apply solely to the State), South Carolina v. Baker, 485 U.S. 505 (1988); (state bond interest not immune from nondiscriminatory federal income tax); Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528, (1985) (law of general applicability, binding on States and private parties, upheld). But these cases have no application where, as here and in New York and Printz, the Congressional statute is not one of general application but a specifically directed at the States to use state law instrumentalities as tools to implement federal policy. Here the Durbin-Lipinski legislation is doubly unconstitutional, because it does not apply to private parties or even to all States but only to one State (Illinois) and its relationship to one city (Chicago). The Durbin-Lipinski legislation proposes to use Chicago (an instrumentality of state power whose authority to construct airports is an exercise of state power expressly limited and conditioned on the limits and prohibitions imposed on that delegation by the Illinois legislature) as a federal instrumentality to implement federal policy. Congress is commandeering a state instrumentality of a single State (Illinois) against the express statutory will of the Illinois Legislature, which has refused to confer on Chicago (an instrumentality of the State) the state law power and authority to build airports unless Chicago first obtains a permit from the State of Illinois. This is an unconstitutional use of the Commerce Power under the holdings New York and Printz and does not fall within the "general applicability" line of cases such as Reno v. Condon, South Carolina v. Baker, and Garcia.

Before discussing any further the specific provisions of the Durbin-Lipinski legislation, let us review some important background law.

A. The basic legal principles

Cities are Creatures of the States and State Law—Not Instrumentalities of Federal Power. Normally, this controversy surrounding the proposed expansion of O'Hare Airport would be left to the state political process. Under Illinois law, the cities in this state have only the power that the State Constitution or the legislature grants to them, subject to whatever limits the State imposes. This legal principle has long been settled.

Nearly a century ago, the U.S. Supreme Court, in Hunter v. City of Pittsburgh, 207

U.S. 161, 28 S.Ct. 40, 52 L.Ed. 151 (1907) held that, under the U.S. Constitution, cities are merely creatures of the State and have only those powers that the State decides to give them, subject to whatever limits the States choose to impose:

"This court has many times had occasion to consider and decide the nature of municipal corporations, their rights and duties, and the rights of their citizens and creditors. [Citations omitted.] It would be unnecessary and unprofitable to analyze these decisions or quote from the opinions rendered. We think the following principles have been established by them and have become settled doctrines of this court, to be acted upon wherever they are applicable. Municipal corporations are political subdivisions of the state, created as convenient agencies for exercising such of the governmental powers of the state as may be [e]ntrusted to them. . . . The number, nature, and duration of the powers conferred upon these corporations and the territory over which they shall be exercised rests in the absolute discretion of the state. . . . The state, therefore, at its pleasure, may modify or withdraw all such powers, may take without compensation such property, hold it itself, or vest it in other agencies, expand or contract the territorial area, unite the whole or a part of it with another municipality, repeal the charter and destroy the corporation. All this may be done, conditionally or unconditionally, with or without the consent of the citizens, or even against their protest. In all these respects the state is supreme, and its legislative body, conforming its action to the state Constitution, may do as it will, unrestrained by any provision of the Constitution of the United States."

Hunter held that a State that simply takes the property of municipalities without their consent and without just compensation did not violate due process. While Hunter is an old case, it still is the law, and the Seventh Circuit recently quoted with approval the language reprinted here.

The Illinois Aeronautics Act Expressly Limits Chicago's Power to Build and Alter. The State of Illinois has delegated to Chicago the power to build and alter airports. But that power is expressly limited by the requirement that Chicago must comply with the Illinois Aeronautics Act. And the Illinois Aeronautics Act provides that Chicago has no power to make "any alteration" to an airport unless it first obtains a permit, a "certificate of approval," from the State of Illinois. Finally, Chicago has not obtained this certificate of approval. That fact is what has led to the proposed federal intervention.

B. The federalism problem

As mentioned above, section 3(a)(3) of the proposed federal law overrides the licensing requirements of §47 of the Illinois Aeronautics Act. This section states:

"(3) The State shall not enact or enforce any law respecting aeronautics that interferes with, or has the effect of interfering with, implementation of Federal policy with respect to the runway redesign plan including sections 38.01, 47, and 48 of the Illinois Aeronautics Act."

In addition, section 3(f) authorizes Chicago to enter into an agreement with the federal government to construct the O'Hare Airport expansion. This project is called a "Federal project," but Chicago must agree to construct the "runway redesign as a Federal Project," and Chicago provides the necessary land, easements, etc., "without cost to the United States."

What this proposed legislation does is authorize the City of Chicago to implement an airport expansion approved by the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration. But, under state law, Chicago cannot expand O'Hare because it does not have the required state permit.

There is no doubt that the O'Hare Airport is a means of interstate commerce, and Congress may certainly impose various rules and regulations on airports, including O'Hare. Congress, for example, may decide to require airport security and require that the security agents be federal employees. Or, Congress could provide that it would build and takeover the O'Hare Airport and construct expansion if the State of Illinois refused to do so.

Congress may also use its spending power to take land by eminent domain and then construct or expand an airport, no matter that the state law provides. The limits on the spending clause are few.

But, the proposed law does not take such alternatives. It does not impose regulations on airports in general, nor does it exercise the very broad federal spending power. Nor does the proposed law authorize the federal government take over ownership and control of O'Hare Airport. Instead, it seeks to use an instrumentality of state power (i.e., the state law power to build airports as delegated to a state instrumentality, the city of Chicago) as an exercise of federal power.

The proposed federal law is stating that it is creating a federal authorization or empowerment to the City of Chicago to do that which state law provides that Chicago may not do—expand O'Hare Airport without complying with state laws that create the City of Chicago and delegate to it certain limited powers that can be exercised only if within the limits of the authorizing state legislation.

New York v. United States

The proposed federal law is very similar to the law that the Supreme Court invalidated a decade ago in New York v. United States. The law that New York invalidated singled out states for special legislation and regulated that states' regulation of interstate commerce. The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation singles out a State (Illinois) for special legislation and regulates the State's regulation of interstate commerce dealing with O'Hare Airport.

While the law in this area has shifted a bit over the last few decades, it is now clear that Congress can use the Interstate Commerce Clause to impose various burdens on States as long as those laws are "generally applicable." The federal law may not single out the State for special burdens. For example, Congress may impose a minimum wage on state employees in, or affecting, interstate commerce as long as Congress imposes the same minimum wage requirements on non-state workers in, or affecting, interstate commerce. Congress can regulate the States using the Commerce Clause if it imposes requirements on the States that are generally applicable—that is, if it imposes the same burdens on private employers. Congress cannot single out the States for special burdens; it cannot commandeer or take control over the States or order a state legislature to increase the home rule powers of the City of Chicago; it cannot enact federal legislation that adds to or revises Chicago's state created and limited delegated powers.

The leading case, New York v. United States, held that the Commerce Clause does not authorize the Federal Government to conscript state governments as its agents.

"Where a federal interest is sufficiently strong to cause Congress to legislate, it must do so directly; it may not conscript state governments as its agents." The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation will do exactly what New York prohibits: it will conscript the City of Chicago as its agent and interfere with the relationship between the State of Illinois and the entity it created, the City of Chicago.

New York invalidated a legislative provision that is strikingly similar to the proposed federal Durbin-Lipinski legislation. The Court, in the New York case, considered the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Amendments Act of 1985. Congress was concerned with a shortage of disposal sites for low level radioactive waste. The transfer of waste from one State to another is obviously interstate commerce. Congress, in order to deal with the waste disposal problem, crafted a complex statute with three parts, only one of which was unconstitutional. There were a series of monetary incentives, which the Court unanimously upheld under Congress' broad spending powers. Congress also authorized States that adopted radioactive waste and storage disposal guidelines to bar waste imported from States that had not adopted certain storage and disposal programs. The Court, again unanimously, relied on long-settled precedent that approves of Congress creating such trade barriers in interstate commerce.

Then the Court turned to the "take title" provisions and held (six to three) that they were unconstitutional. The "take title" provision in effect required a State to enact certain regulations and, if the State did not do so, it must (upon the request of the waste's generator or owner), take title to and possession of the waste and become liable for all damages suffered by the generator or owner as a result of the State's failure to promptly take possession.

The Court explained that Congress could, if it wished, preempt entirely state regulation in this area and take over the radioactive waste problem. But Congress could not order the States to change their regulations in this area. Congress lacks the power, under the Constitution, to regulate the State's regulation of interstate commerce. This is what the proposed federal O'Hare Airport bill will do: it will regulate the State's regulation of interstate commerce by telling the State that it must act as if the City of Chicago has complied with the Illinois Aeronautics Act and other state rules.

In a nutshell, Congress cannot constitutionally commandeer the legislative or executive branches. The Court pointed out that this commandeering is not only unconstitutional (because nothing in our Constitution authorizes it) but also bad policy, because federal commandeering serves to muddy responsibility, undermine political accountability, and increase federal power.

The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation prohibits Illinois from applying its laws regulating one of its cities. The proposed federal law also authorizes the federal government to make an agreement with Chicago, pursuant to which Chicago will assume some significant obligations, even though present state law gives Chicago no authority to engage in this activity. As the six to three New York decision made clear:

"A State may not decline to administer the federal program. No matter which path the State chooses, it must follow the direction of Congress. . . . No other federal statute has been cited which offers a state government no option other than that of implementing legislation enacted by Congress. Whether one views the take title provision as lying outside Congress' enumerated powers, or as infringing upon the core of state sovereignty reserved by the Tenth Amendment, the provision is inconsistent with the federal structure of our Government established by the Constitution."

The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation is very much like the law that six justices invalidated in New York. The O'Hare bill provides that, no matter what the State chooses, "it must follow the direction of Congress." The State has "no option other than that of implementing legislation enacted by Congress."

The Court in New York went on to explain that there are legitimate ways that Congress can impose its will on the states:

"This is not to say that Congress lacks the ability to encourage a State to regulate in a particular way, or that Congress may not hold out incentives to the States as a method of influencing a State's policy choices. Our cases have identified a variety of methods, short of outright coercion, by which Congress may urge a State to adopt a legislative program consistent with federal interests. Two of these methods are of particular relevance here."

The Court then discussed those two alternatives. First, there is the spending power, with Congress attaching conditions to the receipt of federal funds. The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation rejects the spending power alternative. Second, "where Congress has the authority to regulate private activity under the Commerce Clause, we have recognized Congress' power to offer States the choice of regulating that activity according to federal standards or having state law preempted by federal regulation." The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation rejects that alternative as well. It does not propose that Congress directly takeover and expand O'Hare Airport. Instead, it proposes that the City of Chicago be allowed to exercise power that the State does not allow the City to exercise.

New York v. United States did not question "the authority of Congress to subject state governments to generally applicable laws." But Congress cannot discriminate against the States and place on them special burdens. It cannot commandeer or command state legislatures or executive branch officials to enforce federal law. Congress can regulate interstate commerce and States are not immune from such regulation just because they are States. For example, Congress can forbid employers from hiring child labor to work in coal mines, whether a private company or a State owns the coal mine and employs the workers.

Printz v. United States. Following the New York decision, the Court invalidated another federal statute imposing certain administrative duties on local law enforcement officials, in Printz v. United States. The Brady Act, for a temporary period of time, required local law enforcement officials to use "reasonable efforts" to determine if certain gun sales were lawful under federal law. The federal law also "empowered" these local officers to grant waivers of the federally prescribed 5-day waiting period for handgun purchases. Note that the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation will also "empower" the City of Chicago to do that which Illinois does not authorize the city to do.

To make the analogy even more compelling, the chief law enforcement personal suing in the Printz case said that state law prohibited them from undertaking these federal responsibilities. That, of course, is the exact position in which Chicago finds itself. State law prohibits Chicago from entering into and committing to these federal responsibilities (e.g., the agreements between Chicago and the FAA in §3(f) of the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation call for construction as a "federal project" but then require Chicago to either construct or allow construction without a permit from the State of Illinois).

We should realize that the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation—in commanding and singling out the State of Illinois to, in effect, repeal its legislation governing the powers delegated to the City of Chicago—is quite unusual and not at all in the tradition of federal legislation. For most of our history, Congress would explicitly only "recommend" or "request" the assistance of the governors and state legislatures in implementing federal policy. It is only in very recent times that Congress has sought explicitly to commandeer or order the legislative and executive branches of the States to implement federal policies. Because such federal legislative activity is recent, the case law in this area is recent, but the case law is clear in prohibiting this type of federal assertion of power.

New York v. United States held that Congress cannot "command a State government to enact state regulation." Congress may regulate interstate commerce directly, but it may not "regulate state governments' regulation of interstate commerce." The Federal Government may not "conscript state governments as its agents." Congress has the "power to regulate individuals, not States."

In short, there are important limits on the power of the federal government to commandeer the state legislature or state executive branch officials for federal purposes. Another way to think about this issue is that, to a certain extent, the Constitution forbids Congress from imposing what recently have been called "unfunded mandates" on state officials. Congress cannot simply order the States or state officials or a city to take care of a problem. Congress can use its spending power to persuade the States by using the carrot instead of the stick.

While there are those who have attacked the restrictions that New York v. United States have imposed on the Federal Government, it is worth remembering the line-up of the Court in Maryland v. Wirtz when the justices first considered this issue. That case rejected the applicability of the Tenth Amendment and held that it was constitutional for Congress to set the wages, hours, and working conditions of employees, including state employees in interstate commerce. However, Justice Douglas, who was joined by Justice Stewart, dissented. Douglas found the law to be a "serious invasion of state sovereignty protected by the Tenth Amendment" and "not consistent with our constitutional federalism." He objected that Congress, using the broad commerce power, could "virtually draw up each State's budget to avoid 'disruptive effect[s]' on interstate commerce. New York v. United States prevents this result.

The "generally applicable" restriction is important, and it explains Reno v. Condon. Congress enacted the Driver's Privacy Protection Act (DPPA), which limited the ability of the States to sell or disclose a driver's personal information to third parties without the driver's consent. Chief Justice Rehnquist, for a unanimous Court, upheld the law as a proper regulation of interstate commerce and not violating any principles of federalism found in New York v. United

Reno grew out of a congressional effort to protect the privacy of drivers' records. As a condition of obtaining a driver's license or registering a car, many States require drivers to provide personal information, such as name, address, social security number, medical information, and a photograph. Some States then sell this personal information to businesses and individuals, generating significant revenue. To limit such sales, Congress enacted the DPPA, which governs any state department of motor vehicles (DMV), or state officer, employee, or contractor thereof, and any resale or re-disclosure of drivers' personal information by private persons who obtained the information from a state DMV. The Court concluded: "The DPPA's provisions do not apply solely to States." Private parties also could not buy the information for certain prohibited purposes nor could they resell the information to other parties for prohibited purposes, and the States could not sell the information to the private parties for certain purposes if the private parties could not buy it for those purposes.

Unlike the law in New York, the Court concluded that the DPPA does not control or regulate the manner in which States regulate private parties, it does not require the States to regulate their own citizens, and it does not require the state legislatures to enact any laws or regulations. Unlike the law in Printz, the DPPA does not require state officials to assist in enforcing federal statutes regulating private individuals. This DMV information is an article of commerce and its sale or release into the interstate stream of business is sufficient to support federal regulation.

The DPPA is a "generally applicable" federal law regulating commerce because it regulates the universe of entities that participate as suppliers to the market for motor vehicle information—the states as initial suppliers and the private resellers or redisclosers of this information. "South Carolina has not asserted that it does not participate in the interstate market for personal information. Rather, South Carolina asks that the DPPA be invalidated in its entirety, even as applied to the States acting purely as commercial sellers."

CONCLUSION

The proposed federal law dealing with the O'Hare Airport expansion is most likely unconstitutional because it imposes federal rules on the relationship between a city and the State that created the city. It subjects Illinois to special burdens that are not generally applicable to private parties or even to other States. It authorizes the City of Chicago to do that which Illinois now prohibits.

There is no escape from the conclusion that the proposed federal law does not regulate the behavior of private parties in interstate commerce. It does not subject the State of Illinois to "generally applicable" legislation. Instead, Congress is regulating the state's regulation of interstate commerce. Congress may not conscript the instrumentalities of state government and state power as tools of federal power. The case law is clear that Congress does not have this power.

Sincerely,

RONALD D. ROTUNDA,

The Albert E. Jenner, Jr. Professor of Law.

CHICAGO IS NOT AN AGENCY OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

(By Ronald D. Rotunda)

Congress is at it again. The Senate Commerce Committee has cleared a bill that would, in effect, enlist Chicago as an agency of the federal government. The immediate dispute involves O'Hare Airport, but the underlying constitutional issue affects us all. The question is whether there should be a major expansion of O'Hare, or a new airport. That decision has been entrusted to Chicago, a city created under Illinois law. But the state placed an important condition on Chicago's power to expand O'Hare. First, the city has to secure a state permit.

That's the rub. Some people who favor the expansion don't want Chicago to comply with the state permit requirement, so they urged Congress to enact legislation that authorizes Chicago to do what state law forbids. Enter the U.S. Constitution. For over two centuries, the federal government has had the power to regulate interstate commerce. After the terrorist attacks, for example, Congress relied on that power to federalize airport security. Notably, Congress didn't deal with the problem by ordering state and city police to take over security and pay the bills. That's because the federal government knew it could not regulate by conscripting state or city governments as its agents.

Congress acknowledged that fundamental principle in 1789, the very year that the Constitution was ratified. The First Congress enacted a law that requested state assistance to hold federal prisoners in state jails at federal expense. The law did not command the states' executives, but merely recommended to their legislatures, and offered to pay 50 cents per month for each prisoner. When Georgia refused, Congress authorized the U.S. marshal to rent a temporary jail until a permanent one could be found. It never occurred to Congress that it could make city or state officials its minions by instructing them to act as if they were federal employees.

All this changed a little over a decade ago, when Congress had to decide how to dispose of radioactive waste. Rather than handle the matter directly, it chose a low-cost solution: it simply ordered the states to take care of the problem. The law required the states to take title to radioactive waste that private parties had generated, and be responsible for its disposal, at not cost to the federal government. In 1992, the Supreme Court invalidated the law, calling it an unprecedented effort by the federal government to co-opt legislative and executive branch officials of state government.

A few years later, Congress mandated background checks in connection with gun purchases. It didn't want to spend federal money for bureaucrats to enforce the new law, so it told city and state law enforcement personnel to carry out the background checks. Printz v. United States invalidated that portion of the federal law. The Supreme Court explained that city and state officials do not work for the federal government; they work for the state. Cities are creatures of state law, and they have only the powers that the state chooses to give them.

Federalism, the Court tells us, exists to protect the people by dividing power between the states and the federal government. That protection is undermined if Congress can bypass the federal bureaucracy by directing state or city officials to do its bidding. The Court added that allowing Congress to treat state officials as its worker bees is bad policy because it muddies responsibility, weakens political accountability, and increases federal power.

The Constitution gives Congress plenty of ways to deal with O'Hare, but they all cost money: Congress can use its spending power to expand the airport; it can give the state money on the condition that it expand the airport; it can order federal officials (the Army Corps of Engineers) to build the O'Hare expansion. But Congress may not simply order or authorize state or city officials to violate state law and act like federal employees. The proposed federal law dealing with the expansion of O'Hare Airport subjects Illinois to special burdens that are not applicable to other states or to private parties, and it authorizes Chicago, a city created by the state, to do that which Illinois law prohibits.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, speaking for the Court in 1992, put it bluntly: "Where a federal interest is sufficiently strong to cause Congress to legislate, it must do so directly; it may not conscript state [or city] governments as its agents."

A CONTROLLER'S VIEW

Ladies and gentlemen; I have proudly served the FAA for the past 14 years as an Air Traffic Controller. I have been employed at several air traffic control facilities throughout the Chicagoland area, and feel that I have a unique perspective on enhancing future airport development.

To date, most of you have heard numerous insights on a proposed third major airport for Chicago. Let me offer another perspective from a "controller's viewpoint". Within a small twenty-mile radius of the Chicagoland area, lie four of the busiest airports in the country. Approximately one and one half million airplanes take off and land at Palwaukee, Dupage, Midway, and O'Hare Airports yearly! This puts a tremendous strain on the Air Traffic Controllers who struggle to keep this area safe and without significant delay. With air travel continuously increasing, delays and safety will become a nearly impossible challenge.

Plans for expansion at the two major Chicago airports will not be enough to meet demands. O'Hare airport has reached its maximum capacity creating consequential delays. There are not enough available gates, runways, and taxiways to serve all the aircraft. Although there are plans to add additional gates and another runway, this will not address the taxiway problem. Due to the layout of O'Hare airport, in my opinion there is no effective way to construct additional taxiways that will have a positive impact on airport operations. Thus making any other method to increase capacity ineffective.

The problems that face O'Hare are some of the same problems facing Midway Airport. Midway boasts as being aviation's busiest square mile. Nowhere else are there more commercial airplanes landing and departing in such a condensed area. Unfortunately, Midway Airport is very condensed. Due to runway lengths, it can only handle the smallest commercial aircraft. The airport is severely landlocked with major streets, houses and businesses immediately surrounding the field. Even with the current terminal expansion project in effect, an insufficient number of taxiways and the size of the runways, in my opinion limit any significant increase in traffic.

The need for a third major airport is loud and clear. With the projections of air traffic on the rise, additional airports must become available. In my opinion, Peotone is an excellent location for a major commercial airport. Peotone is located just outside the main flow of air traffic in and out of Chicago. Any additional airplanes created by the third airport would not adversely effect air traffic facilities located east, south, and west of Peotone. A third airport located in Peotone would not be significantly effected by Chicago's air traffic, which is rapidly reaching a saturation point, but instead would aid in alleviating the congestion heading into Chicago.

Another point of interest, which may have been overlooked, is corporate aircraft. The use of corporate aircraft is one of the fastest growing fields in aviation. There are very few, if any airports that can accommodate corporate aircraft in the south Chicagoland area. With the pending closure of Meigs Field in Chicago, the Petone airport would fill the need for another corporate airport crucial to south Chicagoland businesses. Furthermore, suggestions that a third major airport being located in the immediate Chicagoland area, namely Gary, Indiana, would not alleviate the saturation problem Chicago is already facing.

In closure, I would like to thank all those involved with the Petone Airport project. I am greatly anticipating the future events surrounding this project.

JOHN W. TEERLING,
Lockport, IL, January 18, 1999.

Re: A Third Chicago Airport.
Governor GEORGE RYAN,
State Capitol, Springfield, IL.

DEAR GOVERNOR RYAN: My name is John Teerling and I recently retired, after 31.5 years with American Airlines as a Captain, flying international routes in Boeing 767 and 757's. I was based at Chicago's O'Hare my entire career. I have seen the volume of traffic at O'Hare pick up and exceed anyone's expectations, so much so, that on occasion mid-air were only seconds apart. O'Hare is at maximum capacity, if not over capacity. It is my opinion that it is only a matter of time until two airliners collide making disastrous headlines.

Cities like Atlanta, Dallas and especially Miami continue to increase their traffic flow, some months exceeding Chicago, and at some point could supersede Chicago permanently. If Chicago and Illinois are to remain as the major Hub for airline traffic, a third major airport has to be built, and built now. Midway, with its location and shorter runways will never fill this void. A large international airport located in the Petone area, complete with good ground infrastructure (rail and highway) to serve Chicago, Kankakee, Joliet, Indiana and the Southwest suburbs, would be win, win situation for all. The jobs created for housing, offices, hotels, shopping, manufacturing and light industry could produce three to four hundred thousand jobs. Good paying jobs.

Another item to consider, which I feel is extremely important, is whether. I have frequently observed that there are two distinct weather patterns between O'Hare and Kankakee. Very often when one is receiving snow, fog or rain the other is not. These conditions affect the visibility and ceiling conditions determining whether the airports operate normally or not. Because of the difference in weather patterns when one airport, say O'Hare, is experiencing a hampered operation, an airport in Peotone, in all probability, could be having more normal operations. Airliners could then divert to the "other" Chicago Airport, saving time and money as well as causing less inconvenience to the public. (It's better to be in Peotone than in Detroit).

It is well known that American and United, who literally control O'Hare with their massive presence, are against a third airport. Why? It is called market share competition and greed. A new airport in the Peotone area would allow other airlines to service Chicago and be competition. American and United are of course dead set against that. What they are not considering is that their presence at a third airport would afford them an even greater share of the Chicago regional pie as well as put them in a great position for future expansion.

You also have Mayor Daley against a third airport because he feels a loss of control and possible revenue for the city. This third airport, if built, and it should be, should be classified as the Northern Illinois Regional Airport, controlled by a Board with representatives from Chicago and the surrounding areas. That way all would share in the prestige of a new major international airport along with its revenues and expanding revenue base.

The demand in airline traffic could easily expand by 30% during the next decade. Where does this leaves Illinois and Chicago? It leaves us with no growth in the industry if we have no place to land more airplanes. If Indiana were ever to get smart and construct a major airport to the East of Peotone, imagine the damaging economic impact it would have on Northern Illinois!

Sincerely,

JOHN W. TEERLING.

THE FUTURE OF THE CHICAGO REGION: SMART GROWTH, INFILL REDEVELOPMENT AND REGIONAL BALANCE

The Midwest and, in particular, the Chicago Metropolitan Area, has had a remarkable turnaround in economic fortune over the past decade. It has shed its "rust-belt" image and has produced remarkable economic growth.

Between 1990 and 1998, the six-county Chicago area grew by 505,500 persons, a 7 percent increase. While this percent increase is moderate, the numerical increase is equivalent to a city larger than Denver.

Between 1990 and 1997, the six-county area grew by 275,000 jobs, a 9 percent increase. Between 1970 and 1996, the region (Kenosha to Michigan City) grew by 1.310 million jobs, the fifth largest increase in the nation.

Between 1996 and 2020, the Chicago region is projected to grow by 785,000 persons. This is a city the size of San Francisco.

Between 1996 and 2020, the Chicago region is projected to have the largest growth of any metro area in the U.S., adding 1.118 million jobs.

In spite of these significant regional turnarounds, the City of Chicago continued to lose ground. Between 1991 and 1997, the City of Chicago lost over 27,000 jobs; 11,000 were from the South Loop. Every one of the City's eight major community areas experienced losses, with the exception of North Michigan Avenue and the Northwest area around O'Hare International Airport. The Far South, Southwest and South communities experienced the greatest losses.

This development trend extended to the suburban area. While the six-county Chicago Area grew by 275,000, the north and northwest suburbs were the major beneficiaries. DuPage, Lake and Northwest Suburban Cook (around O'Hare) Counties contributed 194,000 jobs, or 71 percent of the net growth. With 500,000 jobs in Chicago's Central Business District versus 450,000 in North Suburban Cook County and 150,000 in Northeast DuPage County, the economic center of the region has shifted from downtown to O'Hare.

O'Hare International Airport is, undoubtedly, the great economic engine it is portrayed. But, it has run out of space, both in the air and on the ground. Its enormous attraction, to business and industry, has brought thousands of enterprises, hundreds of thousands of jobs, millions of visitors and billions of dollars, annually, to the Chicago region. On this, we all agree. But, the area surrounding it is choking on the development. Other areas, particularly the South Side, are in great need of both jobs and better airport access. In fact, the two issues are closely related.

The massive development attracted by O'Hare Airport makes airport expansion there costly, time-consuming, difficult and intrusive. Traffic often is brought to a near halt on the expressways leading to O'Hare; future traffic problems would be compounded many times over. O'Hare's neighbors—well-aware of its many economic contributions—also are wary of expansion, weary of noise and traffic, and fearful of possible future compromises on safety. On the opposite side of the region—and the other side of the ledger—are the communities of the Chicago South Side and the South Suburbs. By all accounts, these areas find themselves overlooked and under-served—primarily due to their distance from the region's airports. This economic disparity is clearly evident from the following maps, which show job concentrations in 1960 and 1990. This period marked major declines in manufacturing jobs in the region's South Side; and a rise in both manufacturing and service jobs in the North/Northwest, around O'Hare. Airport access was the difference.

The solution to the region's needs is the Third Chicago Airport. Development of the Third Chicago Airport is a true urbanist's dream: obtaining multiple benefits from one investment. Why, then, is it being ignored? When you have two powerful and thoughtful representatives of the people—Congressman Henry Hyde saying "we've had enough," and Congressman Jesse Jackson, Jr. saying "let us have some—perhaps we should listen to them. Other representatives—Congressmen Jerry Weller, Bobby Rush, and Tom Ewing, Senator Peter Fitzgerald, Governor George Ryan, Senate President Pate Phillip—plus scores of local mayors, hundreds of local businesses and hundreds of thousands of residents, have joined in the effort to bring the airport to the South Suburbs. Perhaps, with the airport in place, we can begin to truly balance growth, encourage infill development and share the wealth of the region.

THE PLANNING PROCESS: TWELVE YEARS OF FINDINGS

The state agency responsible for planning the region's transportation infrastructure, the Illinois Department of Transportation (IDOT), has been planning for the region's aviation needs for the past twelve years. IDOT, and its aviation consultants, are convinced, without a doubt, that Chicago's aviation demands will more than double by 2020. The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), the Airports Council International (ACI) and other industry groups have forecasted national growth of similar magnitude. For a brief time, the City of Chicago agreed, as well. The Chicagoland Chamber study predicts a five-fold increase in international traffic. IDOT's studies support the contention that Chicago has an excellent opportunity to be the dominant North American hub for international flights, as well as its premier domestic hub, into the next century. That point has been stated and documented on many occasions by IDOT. The State's forecasts have been corroborated, independently, by a decade of observations. They are reinforced in the latest study for the Chicagoland Chamber of Commerce. It is agreed, by all key interest groups, that the Chicago region must increase its aviation capacity.

The region cannot double its aviation service without building major new airport capacity. O'Hare and Midway are now at capacity. Enplanements already are being affected, with growth limited to increases in plane size or load factor; neither is expected to increase further. The City's $1.8 billion investment in terminals will not increase capacity. But, the adverse impact on the region already is evident. Businesses and residents are witnessing major increases in fares in the Chicago region, according to IDOT, the USDOT, the GAO and the FAA, itself. Perhaps in response to these obvious constraints, both the Chicagoland Chamber and the Commercial Club of Chicago have begun to address the region's aviation issues. The Chamber calls for O'Hare expansion. The "Metropolis 2020" study also recognizes the need for additional aviation capacity, with a call for expansion of O'Hare and land banking of the Third Airport site in Peotone. This call for action comes none too soon. There are many indications that the Chicago region has begun to suffer from capacity constraints.

Ten years ago, Chicago was one of the nation's least expensive regions to fly to, due to its central location. Obviously, its location has not changed; however, now, due to O'Hare's capacity overload and higher fares, it is cheaper to fly from all around the country to many other cities than to Chicago. For instance, according to data supplied by the airlines to the U.S. Department of Transportation, it is now cheaper to fly from Green Bay to Las Vegas than from Green Bay to Chicago. It is cheaper to fly from Seattle to Orlando than from Seattle to Chicago. Something is wrong. Due to capacity constraints, O'Hare's airlines are overcharging their patrons by $750 million, annually (the difference between average fares for large U.S. airports and those at O'Hare). This fact is beginning to affect regional development—especially conventions and tourism—but, it also affects every major and start-up business, every individual with family and friends in far-flung places. As is well-known, access to a major airport is one of the top three requirements of a locating or expanding business. But, access must be at competitive fares. Expanding O'Hare will simply buttress the monopolistic behavior of its airlines. Such monopolistic practices currently are a major concern of Congress.

THE DEVELOPMENT ALTERNATIVES

Aviation infrastructure must be expanded—and expanded soon—to bring true competition, lower fares and increased service to the region. The alternatives are two: adding runways to O'Hare; or building the Third Chicago Airport. The two alternatives have far different consequences. The question is: "Will we continue to spend great outlays of public-private funds on an area that is overwhelmed with both riches and the congestion those riches bring; or do we make those investments in mature urban areas that are wanting for jobs and economic development?"

As is clearly documented by a recent Chamber study, O'Hare's benefits are conferred, primarily, on the west, north and northwest suburbs. Virtually all of O'Hare's employees reside near it. In addition, it has garnered high concentrations of development. These concentrations, however, have led to congestion and increased land values. High land prices have forced businesses and developers to plan future growth on the most environmentally-sensitive fringes of the region and in areas farther removed from the region's central core.

THE TWO SIDES OF THE COIN

While unprecedented growth takes place around O'Hare, to the north, the three million residents of the region who reside south of McCormick Place are left with long trips to the airport for flights and out of the running for the many jobs it produces. The consequences, for South Side/South Suburban residents and the dwindling businesses that serve them, are the highest property tax rates in the State. Because jobs have disappeared, residents have some of the longest trips to work in the nation. Because transit only to the Loop is convenient, recent job losses in that area, as well, (11,000 since 1991; 25,000 since 1983) have compounded the job searches of the South Side's residents. For decades, regional planning agencies have called for the development of moderate-income housing near job concentrations. Instead, let us bring the jobs to the residents.

Recent public forums on the disparity of property tax rates in Cook County's north and south communities have led to the South's designation as the "Red Zone," signifying its concentration of highest property tax rates. This disparity was not always so. It has occurred over the last three decades and proliferated in the last two, as shown below. The "Metropolis 2020" study addresses this disparity issue by calling for a sharing of revenues with the "lesser haves." The more-responsive, enduring and—ultimately—more-equitable solution is to provide the South Side with the Economic opportunities generated by the Third Chicago Airport.

Whether the region expands O'Hare or builds a supplemental airport, O'Hare's riches will remain and grow. It is currently enjoying a $1 billion public investment to upgrade its terminals. Midway, as well, will continue to thrive, as the recipient of an $800-million-publicly-funded new terminal. However, this $1.8 billion investment will not increase capacity. The initial infrastructure investment of $500 million ($2.5 billion through 2010) to build the Third Chicago Airport, will. And, it will produce more than just added aviation capacity. The Third Chicago Airport will provide 235,000 airport-related jobs—in the right places—by 2020. Additional airport access jobs will benefit the entire region. In addition, it will reinforce the City of Chicago's role as the center of the region's growth.

Spokesmen for the incumbent airlines claim that other airlines will not invest in the Third Chicago Airport; this is a traditional response to discourage competition. Furthermore, the financing of any airport comes, principally, from its users. The Third Chicago Airport market comprises 16.5 percent of the region's current air trip users, with a potential for contributing 20 percent. They should not be left behind. Upfront airport development costs, for planning and engineering and land acquisition traditionally have come from the federal government. In this "Year of Aviation", these funds are expected to increase by 50 percent; and Passenger Facility Charges (PFC's) are expected to increase from $3 to $6. Currently, $1 in PFC's at O'Hare yields $37 million per year. At the Full-Build forecast and $6 rate, the Third Chicago Airport will generate $100 million in PFC's annually by 2010. The FAA must provide the needed approvals and normal up-front funding. A Third Airport development in the Sought Suburbs can provide social and economic parity; and it can do it with a hand-up rather than a hand-out.

THE ARGUMENT FOR SMART GROWTH WITH CHICAGO'S THIRD AIRPORT

Independent studies have demonstrated overwhelmingly, the need for expanded aviation capacity in the Chicago region.

Demand will more than double by 2020.

Needed is a Third Airport that can grow as future demand dictates.

The need is now. The region is beginning to experience the costs of capacity constraints. These are:

Dampened aviation growth.

Increased and non-competitive fares.

Lost jobs, conventions and other opportunities.

There are two alternatives for meeting the region's demand:

Adding runways at O'Hare—an area already well-served and suffering the effects of overdevelopment and congestion, or;

Building the Third Chicago Airport—investing in an existing, mature part of the region suffering losses due to changes in the national/regional economies and lack of access to a major airport.

Doubling traffic at O'Hare drives new development farther away from the region's core—the Chicago Central Area—and its residents and businesses to the South.

It will encroach on environmentally-sensitive areas.

It will compound noise, pollution and traffic congestion; and impose these on hundreds of thousands of additional residents.

It will buttress monopolistic behavior by major airlines.

Building the Third Chicago Airport is a true urbanist's dream. It solves multiple problems with one investment.

It develops an environmentally-sensitive, new airport, that can provide increased capacity for decades to come.

It provides nearby, inexpensive land for development.

It brings jobs and development to mature portions of the region.

It allows three airport facilities to function at optimal capacity.

It maintains the Chicago region as the nation's aviation capital.

Because of planning already completed, the Third Chicago Airport can be built before additional runways at O'Hare.

Resources are available to build the airport.

Federal Funds for airport development will increase by 50 percent.

The U.S. Congress, many businesses and consumers are demanding access to and through the Chicago area.

Ultimately, the passenger pays through Passenger Facility Charges.

THE GROWING IMBALANCE IN THE REGION'S GROWTH, AND ACCESS TO JOBS

1. The Chicago region has grown robustly over the past 25-30 years.

Over 1.310 million jobs (1970-96) for the consolidated area.

Over 275,000 jobs between 1990 and 1997, alone, for the six-county area.

2. This growth has been very uneven. The North has prospered, while the South has languished.

3. The region's center has migrated from Downtown Chicago (with its excellent public transportation access) to the area around O'Hare (dependent on autos).

4. The City of Chicago lost over 27,000 jobs between 1991 and 1997; 11,000 of these losses were from the South Loop.

5. The suburbs grew by 300,000 jobs. The areas to the north, northwest and west (O'Hare-influenced) contributed nearly 200,000 of this growth.

6. With 500,000 jobs in Chicago's CBD, versus 450,000 in North Suburban Cook and 150,000 in Northeast DuPage, the economic center of the region has shifted from Downtown to O'Hare.

7. Consequently, residents of the South Side and South Suburbs have commutes to work that are among the nation's longest. There is little public transit between suburbs.

8. These same residents do have the region's highest tax rates, however; without businesses and industries, the residents, alone, must pay for all their services.

9. New businesses and industries want access to major airports. O'Hare's nearby communities have run out of space to offer. The South Side has ample land, but no airport. The ample land also allows the construction of an environmentally-sensitive airport.

10. To accommodate the economic growth anticipated over the next 20 years, the Chicago region needs additional airport capacity. To balance the economic growth, it needs a South Suburban Airport.

SOUTH SUBURBAN AIRPORT: AVIATION DEMAND IN THE CHICAGO REGION

Background Assumptions for Demand Forecasts

Aviation demand is derived from a few basic factors:

The national/international growth in aviation.

The socio-economic dynamics and growth of the region.

The ability of the region to accommodate this demand depends on:

The capacity of its airports.

The competitiveness of its fares.

National/International Aviation Growth

The FAA forecasts a doubling in aviation growth over a 15 year period.

International enplanements and freight are growing even more rapidly.

The FAA and the Airports Council International have equated this growth to 10 O'Hare Airports.

By 2012, there will be more than 1 billion enplanements, 2 billion passengers in the U.S..

Socio-Economics Create Demand

Since the original aviation forecasts, made in 1994, the socio-economic performance of the Chicago region has matched or exceeded expectations:

In 1990-1996, population and employment for the 14- and 9-County regions grew at rates and volumes slightly above those forecast.

The Chicago Consolidated Area (Kenosha to Michigan City) produced 1,311,000 jobs between 1970 and 1996; and added 617,260 persons.

The regional planning agencies have increased their 2020 forecasts, to reflect this growth. So has NPA, author of forecasts used by City of Chicago.

Woods & Poole Economics (the national forecast used by IDOT), in its 1999 edition, expects the Chicago region to produce the largest volume growth in employment of any metropolitan region in the U.S.:—for 1996-2020, a 1,118,660 job growth—for 1990-2020, a 1,635,570 job growth

Chicago's economy can continue its robust growth only if it can provide excellent aviation access. And it, can serve the region fairly, only if it provides that access to the south suburbs.

Location Drives Connecting Flights

Because of its central location and high concentration of jobs and population, the Chicago region is a critical location for connecting flights:

The recent Booz-Allen study, prepared for the City, forecasts an international growth that is higher than IDOT's; and claims that high ratios of connecting to O/D are not just desirable, but necessary.

The City of Chicago, in 1998, forecast connecting enplanements based on regional location; their connecting forecasts were higher than IDOT's.

O'Hare's current connecting is 54.7%, slightly under its past average. IDOT assumed 50% connecting for O'Hare in 2001; 51% for the region.

Aviation Growth Parallels IDOT Forecasts

Since their national forecasts of 1994 (base for IDOT forecast), the FAA has generated five 12-year forecasts, five long-range national forecasts through 2020, and five terminal area forecasts.

All the FAA national forecasts are higher than the study's base forecast.

Although it continues to contest IDOT's forecasts, the City and Chicago and its consultants are using forecasts that are nearly identical.

The City and State are using IDOT socio-economic and aviation forecasts for all short- and long-term regional transportation planning.

Other aviation plans (Gary Airport Master Plan; Booz-Allen forecasts for O'Hare International) are consistent with IDOT forecasts. Capacity Constraints Jeopardize Economic and Aviation Growth

The ability of the region's airports to accommodate demand is a most-serious concern. The Chicago region has reached aviation capacity. These aviation capacity constraints have dampened regional growth:

Since 1995, O'Hare's growth in commercial operations has stopped.

Domestic enplanements at O'Hare have declined this year.

Small cities have been dropped from service.

Booz-Allen says the international market is not being well served.

Fares at O'Hare have risen above the average for large airports.

O'Hare's delays have been much greater this year than last; O'Hare's delays are among the nation's highest and cascade throughout the nation's airports.

The FAA has long forecasted such capacity problems and resultant delays. In 1992 it forecasted a doubling of airports with delay problems by 2001.

The forecasts have arrived a bit ahead of schedule. Without additional capacity, the economic well-being of both Chicago and the nation are jeopardized.

NIPC FINDINGS—NOVEMBER 1996

TALKING ABOUT THE REGION'S FUTURE

We recently asked a cross-section of the region's leaders:

Should water quality protection measures for our rivers, lakes, and streams be implemented even if this means placing development limits on presently undeveloped high-quality watersheds?

Should the region pursue infill and redevelopment strategies that lead to employment and income growth in older communities that have experienced diminished tax base and disinvestment?

Should priority in transportation funding be given to maintenance of the existing system?

Should measures to encourage reclamation of contaminated properties, including tax credits and limits on liability, be enacted?

Yes, said strong majorities of participants in two public workshops conducted by NIPC in June and September of this year. The workshops were held as part of an effort to engage the region in a discussion of growth choices facing us. Participants representing local governments, state and federal agencies, and civic and community organizations were asked to respond to possible future development patterns, their probable consequences, and the tools it would take to bring them about. The broad choice which framed the discussions was this: should anticipated future growth continue along the path of past trends or should efforts should be made to moderate the physical decentralization of the region?

NIPC is not alone in the region in raising these issues. In fact, it is hard to remember a time when the future development of the region has been discussed more widely or fervently. Numerous civic and community organizations have been developing analyses and recommendations on transportation and development and encouraging discussion of regional issues by their members and constituents.

The Commission's immediate purpose in conducting the workshops was to seek public guidance in the development of new demographic forecasts for the region. These forecasts will be used in the preparation of the Regional Transportation Plan for 2020. Draft forecasts will be completed by early 1997. At the same time, the Chicago Area Transportation Study (CATS) will complete a draft transportation plan. After a period of public review, the transportation plan will be tested for conformity with the requirements of the Clean Air Act. Following additional opportunity for public comment, final forecasts will be endorsed and the Regional Transportation Plan for 2020 will be adopted. These actions are scheduled for June 1997.

Beyond the immediate need to support the transportation planning process, this regional discussion advances NIPC's mission of striving for consensus on policies and plans for action which will promote the sound and orderly development of the northeastern Illinois area. The purpose of this newsletter is to inform the region of what we have heard and to encourage continuing deliberation on what kind of region we want to be in the next century.

What We Have Heard

Several general conclusions emerged from the workshops. The first is that there is widespread, though by no means unanimous, belief that the past trend of dispersed, low-density residential and employment growth has had unintended negative consequences which must be moderated to some degree in the interests of environmental quality, prudent public investment, and social equity. There is also substantial support for some public policy measures which could help achieve that moderated growth. These will be described in more detail below. Some measures which could be highly effective in moderating past trends are widely agreed to lack political acceptability in this region. Finally, there is broad support for measures which would improve the quality of local planning and development within either a continued trends or moderated trend approach.

The Forecast: A Growing Region

of NIPC's most important responsibilities. These are not simply forecasts of the numbers of people, households and jobs which will be in the region in a future year. People, households, and jobs imply houses, roads, sewers, and parks. The forecasts thus represent the Commission's best estimate of how activities and facilities will be distributed across the region: where new housing will be necessary and old housing may become vacant, where new or expanded streets and sewers will be required, and where streams and wetlands will come under pressure from growing population. The forecasts thus have implicit in them a generalized land use plan for the region. It is critical that they be as realistic as possible in reflecting the trends and constraints of the market, the influences of public policy, and expectations of local governments.

We have previously described the process being used to develop forecasts for the year 2020 (NIPC Reports, January 5, 1996). In March 1994, the Commission endorsed regional forecast totals of 9 million people, 3.4 million households, and 5.3 million jobs in 2020. These figures represent a 25 percent increase in population and a 37 percent increase in employment from 1990 to 2020. By way of comparison, between 1970 and 1990 the region's population increased by only four percent and employment by 21 percent. The amount of land devoted to urban uses, however, increased by 34 percent during that twenty-year period. In view of this finding about land consumption, the forecasted future growth has the potential to add seriously to pressures on the transportation system, air and water quality, and agricultural land. The Commission thus concluded that alternatives to past patterns of growth had to be presented to the region for discussion. A Preferred Development Pattern in Northwestern Illinois

On June 26, 1996, the Commission conducted the first of two regional workshops on alternative growth scenarios and their implications. The intent was to assess how much support there might be for different development patterns and how much acceptance of their probable costs. It was hoped that participants would set aside issues of feasibility for the time being and respond to the question of what is the most desirable future for the region. The workshop was attended by 127 people representing a broad spectrum of organizations and interests.

Three general scenarios were presented. Each was designed to illustrate the outcome of a unique combination of public policies with respect to transportation and community development. The broad patterns of new household and job growth to which these scenarios would lead are shown in the maps below. Participants were not asked to express a preference among the scenarios themselves, but to evaluate the relative importance of the impacts which each would have on communities and the natural environment. Questions to the participants concerned the importance of land development patterns which would (1) help preserve farmland, (2) encourage the use of public transit, (3) protect high-quality watersheds from the impacts of urbanization, and (4) promote affordable housing close to centers of job growth.

Continued Trends. This is the "baseline" scenario which assumes the least change, in terms of public policy, from recent conditions. Only limited highway and rail transit capacity would be built beyond what is currently committed for funding. Future demand for aviation service would be met at O'Hare and Midway. The broad pattern of low-density dispersal of jobs and households would continue. Households and jobs in Chicago and some inner suburbs would continue to decline while they would increase in the rest of the region. The largest number of new jobs would be located in suburban Cook County, and DuPage County would gain jobs but at a slower rate. The four outer counties would show the greatest percentage gains in employment. Household growth would be strongest in the middle ring of suburbs. The loss of farmland would be substantial, as would the negative impact of urban densities on lakes and streams. Automobile use would continue to increase and transit use to decline. The separation of affordable housing from low-income jobs would continue to increase.

South Suburban Airport. The central assumption of this scenario is that future need for additional aviation capacity would be provided at the proposed south suburban airport. Otherwise, the scenario makes essentially the same land use and transportation policy assumption as the trends alternative. Employment and population in Chicago would increase, although the city's regional share would decline slightly. Job growth would be lower than under existing trends in the northern and western parts of the region and substantially higher in south Cook and Will counties. Household growth would be similar to that expected under a continuation of trends. Conversion of agricultural land would be extensive, particularly in Will County, as would development pressure on lakes and streams. The development of the airport could have a positive effect on jobs-housing balance and on redevelopment by bringing employment to a portion of the region which is now relatively job-poor.

Redevelopment and Infill. This scenario represents a deliberate attempt to moderate the trend of dispersed development and to encourage reinvestment in mature communities. Like the trends scenario, this alternative assumes limited investment in new surface transportation and satisfaction of future aviation requirements at the existing regional airports. In addition, the scenario assumes (1) implementation of very strong farmland protection policies in the agricultural protection zones in Kane, McHenry and Will counties, (2) intensive population and employment growth within walking distance of selected transit stops in Chicago and the inner suburbs, and (3) high employment growth through redevelopment in certain built-up areas in Chicago, the inner suburbs, Waukegan, and Joliet. Under this scenario, Chicago's loss of population and employment would be reversed. At the same time, the other sectors of the region would all gain both people and jobs, though their rates of growth would be lower than under a continuation of trends. Conversion of farmland for development and urban stress on water resources would be at lower levels than the other two scenarios, but still significant. Similarly, automobile use would increase and transit ridership decrease, but at lower rates. Because both jobs and population would increase in the communities with the greatest low-income population, jobs-housing balance would change only slightly.

The redevelopment scenario was designed to simulate the effect of efforts to moderate the worst unintended consequences of recent trends. Two important conclusions emerge from an examination of the scenario results:

Given NIPC's overall forecasts, economic growth in northeastern Illinois need not be an either-or situation. Even with deliberate efforts to encourage reinvestment in the mature core communities, the balance of the region can sustain a relatively high level of growth.

Under conditions of high overall growth, managing negative environmental consequences will be very difficult even if the trend of decentralized, low-density development is moderated.

Following the presentation of the scenarios, a panel of five experts on aspects of the region's development commented on the alternatives and on issues related to their implementation. These are some of the highlights of their comments:

Barry Hokanson, Director of Planning, Lake County: Lake County is expected to experience high growth under any one of the scenarios. While the county has programs to meet the demands on resources and services generated by growth, the multiplicity of local governments makes the translation of regional projections into coordinated local planning difficult. There are strong voices in Lake County advocating constraint on new transportation capacity as a means of limiting growth and encouraging mature-area reinvestment.

David Schulz, Director, Infrastructure Technology Institute, Northwestern University: The outward movement of households is driven by a variety of forces having to do with the quality of schools, perceptions of safety, tax levels, and job availability. Transportation systems do not induce people to move but influence where they move. Constraining the transportation system will simply force people to move farther out past the perceived zone of congestion and will thus worsen the problem of dispersal rather than curing it.

Rusty Erickson, Director of Development, City of Aurora: Aurora has benefited from the decentralizing trend in the region. Continued growth is necessary to provide quality schools and other services to residents. It is important that new suburban growth be concentrated in areas with full public services. Low-density development in rural areas will destroy the open countryside which is a strong quality-of-life value.

Frank Martin, President, Shaw Homes Inc.: There is a market for residential development which integrates the natural and built environments and which provides the resource efficiency and quality of life of a dense community, including access to public transportation, while preserving high-quality natural surroundings. However, developers will find this kind of balanced development hard to do successfully if local government does not address inefficiencies in public services and excessive regulations which work against affordability by raising land values and construction costs.

Benjamin Tuggle, Field Office Supervisor, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service: Making maximum use of existing infrastructure and established urban areas is an important way of preserving high-quality air, surface water, and wetlands in . . .

IF YOU BUILD IT, WE WON'T COME—THE COLLECTIVE REFUSAL OF THE MAJOR AIRLINES TO COMPETE IN THE CHICAGO AIR TRAVEL MARKET

AN ANALYSIS OF THE PER SE VIOLATIONS OF FEDERAL ANTITRUST LAWS BY MAJOR AIRLINES IN THEIR REFUSAL TO COMPETE WITH EACH OTHER IN FORTRESS HUB MARKETS—WITH METROPOLITAN CHICAGO AS A CASE EXAMPLE—MAY 2000

The Suburban O'Hare Commission

The Suburban O'Hare Commission (SOC) is an inter-governmental agency representing more than one million residents who live in communities surrounding O'Hare Airport. SOC's leadership is made up of mayors and other officials who are both advocates for the quality of life and health of their communities and business persons who are concerned about the economic health of the region. Over the past several years SOC has conducted a number of studies relating to the environmental, safety, public health, and economic issues surrounding air transportation in the Chicago metropolitan region.

This current (SOC) report focuses on one of the significant economic issues relating to air transportation—monopoly power and high monopoly-supported air fares—and the legality of the Fortress Hub system under the nation's antitrust laws. However, as is discussed in the report, the major airlines' drive for preservation and expansion of their Fortress Hub system (especially at Fortress O'Hare)—and their corresponding refusal to compete in each other's Fortress Hub markets—creates serious economic, social, and environmental harm in broad areas of the metro Chicago region.

In the past several years there have been numerous congressional hearings and media stories about a phenomenon in the airline industry known as "Fortress Hubs" and the problem of high monopoly supported airfares charged to airline passengers traveling from or through these Fortress Hubs.

However, most of the attention of Congress, the Administration, and the media has focused on two narrow facets of the Fortress Hub problem (1) restrictions on access by so-called "low cost" "new entrant" carriers to a few of the Fortress Hubs, and (2) the allegations of predatory pricing by a dominant major airline against a new low-cost entrant. But this narrow focus has ignored a much more fundamental question: Does the Big Seven Airlines Fortress Hub geographic allocation of markets—and their corresponding refusal to compete in each other's Fortress Hub markets—violate federal antitrust laws?

Virtually ignored by Congress and the Administration has been the concerted refusal of the major airlines—the so-called "Big Seven" (Northwest, United, American, Delta, US Air, Continental, and Trans World)—to compete with their fellow major airlines in each other's Fortress Hub cities. This study, prepared by the Suburban O'Hare Commission (SOC), focuses on the collective refusal of the Big Seven to compete with each other and examines the question as to whether this geographic allocation of Fortress Hub markets by the Big Seven violates federal antitrust laws. Does the Big Seven's refusal to compete in Metropolitan Chicago—their refusal to use the South Suburban Airport: "If you build it, we won't come."—violate federal anti-trust law?

The SOC study also focus on the Metropolitan Chicago market as a case study of the Big Seven's de facto arrangement not to compete with their fellow major airlines in each other's Fortress Hub cities. A glaring example of this concerted refusal by the major airlines to compete in the fellow major airlines' Fortress Hub markets can be found in the decision of the major airlines to boycott the proposed new South Suburban Airport in metropolitan Chicago. The major airlines' "If you build it, we won't come" argument is simply a manifestation of the majors' overall horizontal geographic restraint of major markets across the nation—and particularly in metropolitan Chicago.

THE FINDINGS OF THIS STUDY

The study's findings include:

1. De Facto Geographic Allocation of Fortress Hub Markets by the Big Seven. The heart of the monopoly problem in Fortress Hub markets—and the resultant high monopoly-induced air fares—has been the de facto agreement among the Big Seven to stay out of each other's Fortress Hub markets with any competitively significant level of entry into that market.

2. The Fortress Hub Monopoly Dominance Geographic Allocation by the Big Seven is Likely Costing the Nation's Air Travelers Billions of Dollars Annually. There is an overwhelming body of evidence that—because of the Fortress Hub monopoly dominance of one of two of the Big Seven at many metropolitan areas across the country—the Big Seven airlines are able to charge excessive air fares totaling billions of dollars a year. The principal victims of this monopoly-induced Fortress Hub excess fares are: (1) the time-sensitive business traveler who pays unrestricted coach fares and (2) the so-called "spoke" passenger who must connect through one of the "Fortress Hubs" monopoly tithe American consumer: billions of dollars per year in excess fares—hundreds of millions per year in metropolitan Chicago alone.

3. The Big Seven's De Facto Geographic Allocation of Major Air Travel Markets in the Nation through the Development of "Fortress Hubs" Constitutes a Per Se Violation of Federal Antitrust laws. Little discussion or analysis has been undertaken by Congress or the Administration as to whether this concerted refusal by the Big Seven to compete in their fellow major airlines' Fortress Hub markets—which costs consumers billions annually—constitutes a violation of federal antitrust laws. Based on clear and repeated Supreme Court precedent, it clearly does. The Big Seven's de facto geographic allocation of major air travel markets in the Fortress Hub through the development of "Fortress Hubs" constitutes a per se violation of the antitrust laws. The Supreme Court has uniformly condemned arrangements to carve up horizontal markets as per se violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act. See e.g., Palmer v. BRG Group of Georgia, 498 U.S. 46, 49 (1990); United States v Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 607–609 (1972).

4. The Big Seven's Explicit Refusal to Compete in Metropolitan Chicago: If You Build It, We Won't Come. In the metropolitan Chicago air travel market, the illegal collective refusal of the Big Seven to compete is manifested by two actions: (1) the de facto abandonment by members of the Big Seven (other than United and American) of any significant role at O'Hare Airport and (2) the announcement by the Big Seven and its allied in the Air Transport Association that they would refuse to use a new South Suburban Regional Airport. In the popular jargon of the media, the Big Seven have said "If you build it, we won't come."

In reality, this collective refusal to use a new regional airport is nothing more than a manifestation of the Big Seven's horizontal market agreement not to compete in any significant way with United and American in their dominant Chicago market. This refusal by major airlines such as Delta, Northwest, USAir, and Continental to use new metropolitan Chicago airport capacity to compete in metropolitan Chicago is but an individual example of the per se antitrust violation of allocating geographic markets by the major airlines. "If you build it, we won't come" is a blatant violation of the federal antitrust laws.

5. The City of Chicago's Participation in Opposing New Capacity and in Assisting Big Seven in Their Refusal to Use the New South Suburban Airport is Not Immune from Antitrust Law Prosecution. The available evidence is clear that the City of Chicago and its agents have been active participants in helping the Big Seven Airlines in their refusal to compete in the Chicago market and their refusal to use the proposed South Suburban Airport. Absent express approval by the State of the monopolistic practice, political subdivisions of the State—like the City of Chicago—are not free to violate the antitrust laws under the guise of state action.

While Congress has made municipalities immune from damages for violations of the antitrust laws, Chicago and its officials are not immune from prosecution for their attempts to assist the Big Seven in their refusal to compete in the metro Chicago market and in United and American's attempts to monopolize that market.

6. It Appears That Federal Taxpayer Funds May Have Been Used to Suppress Competition and Violate the Antitrust Laws in the Chicago Market. United and American (the dominant carriers at O'Hare)—along with other major airlines through the Air Transport Association—have engaged in a concerted effort to defeat construction of a new South Suburban Airport, an airport that would provide significant capacity opportunities for major new competition to enter the Chicago market. United executives have stated their goal as "Kill Peotone".

United and American have been assisted in their "Kill Peotone" (and thus kill new competitive capacity) campaign by representatives of the City of Chicago—including Chicago's consultants have been paid several million dollars in fees to assist Chicago and United and American in expanding O'Hare and in obstructing development of a new South Suburban Airport.

Much of the money paid to these consultants has come from either: (1) federal Passenger Facility Charge (PFC) funds, (2) federal Airport Improvement Program (AIP) funds, or (3) federally subsidized municipal airport bonds ("GARBS" General Airport Revenue Bonds). Thus, we have the following spectacle—not only are the airlines and Chicago engaged in a monopolistic arrangement designed to prevent new competition from entering the Chicago market (i.e., through the new airport)—but much of the money to implement this illegal arrangement is coming from federal taxpayer dollars. The GAO and the Department of Justice should be asked to conduct an independent audit of all PFC, AIP, and GARB expenditures at O'Hare to determine if any federal funds were used as part of a campaign to "Kill Petone"—i.e., a campaign to oppose construction of a new South Suburban Airport.

7. Federal Officials Have Participated in and Supported the Big Seven's Illegal Monopolistic Arrangement to Refuse to Compete in the Chicago Market. Not only have federal funds been used to support the major airlines illegal monopolistic arrangement to refuse to compete in the Chicago market, but it appears that federal officials within the Administration have worked with the major airlines and Chicago to assist in this antitrust arrangement to prevent the development of a new airport in metropolitan Chicago. For the last several years, federal administration officials—several of whom are former Chicago officials who worked for the City of Chicago—have blocked development of the new South Suburban Airport through a series of spurious legal claims that federal law requires that there be a "consensus" between the State of Illinois and the City of Chicago before a new metropolitan airport can be constructed. No such legal requirement exists.

Because of the active participation of key figures in the current administration in promoting and supporting the continued blockage of new airport development in metropolitan Chicago—in concert with the illegal refusal of the major airlines to compete in the Chicago market by using the new airport—the impartiality and lack of bias of the Administration in conducting law enforcement in this area is legitimately suspect. The Attorney General should be asked to appoint an independent prosecutor to conduct the antitrust investigation and to undertake all appropriate civil legal actions needed to correct the ongoing antitrust violations.

8. Defining the Market Under Monopoly Control and in Need of New Competition—The Hub-and-Spoke Market. The heart of the monopoly overcharges to travelers in the Chicago market is the absence of competition in the "hub-and-spoke" market in Chicago. None of the other Big Seven will come into the Chicago market to establish a competitive hub-and-spoke operation.

In an attempt to expand their monopoly and prevent new competition from entering the Chicago market, United and American—along with their surrogate allies—have sought to distract attention by suggesting a south suburban airport in metro Chicago as a "point-to-point" airport—not unlike Midway. United and American argue that O'Hare should be the only "hub-and-spoke" airport in metropolitan Chicago.

By shaping the argument in this fashion, United and American guarantee that they will be allowed to continue and dramatically expand their Fortress Hub monopoly at O'Hare. According to their arguments, the lion's share of all the origin-destination traffic in the region—and all of the connecting and international traffic—should go to the sole hub-and-spoke airport in the region: O'Hare. Any minor overflow of "point-to-point" origin-destination traffic that a dramatically expanded O'Hare and Midway could not handle (if any) could be addressed in a small "point-to-point" airport like the South Suburban Airport or Gary.

What United and American gloss over is the fact that there is plenty of competition in the Chicago market in point-to-point service. The real lack of competition in the Chicago market is in the lack of additional hub-and-spoke competition to challenge the hub-and-spoke duopoly of United and American at Fortress O'Hare. It is this market dominance of the hub-and-spoke market—not the point-to-point—where lack of competition gouges the business traveler and those travelers from "spoke" cities who must use a single Fortress Hub. There is a desperate need for new competitive hub-and-spoke service in the Chicago market and the place to put that hub-and-spoke is the new South Suburban Airport.

9. Beyond Antitrust Law Enforcement, Federal Transportation Officials Play a Major Antitrust Policy Role—In Either Promoting Monopoly Abuses or Encouraging Competition—By Their Decisions on the Use of Federal Taxpayer Funds. Not only have federal officials blocked development of new competition by blocking a new airport, federal approval of federal expenditures for major physical changes at O'Hare will exacerbate the monopoly power of American and United in this region.

Chicago's so-called "World Gateway" program has been designed in consultation with United and American to enhance and expand United and American's hub-and-spoke system at O'Hare. Chicago's World Gateway proposal is not designed to bring new hub-and-spoke competition into O'Hare or the Chicago market to compete with United and American.

Thus, Chicago's World Gateway proposal will enhance and expand United and American's Fortress Hub monopoly in the Chicago market. Since the physical design proposed by United and American and Chicago can only go forward if federal Transportation Department officials approve federal taxpayer funds to subsidize the project, federal officials are being asked to use billions of dollars in federal taxpayer funds to expand and enhance the illegal Fortress Hub monopoly of American and United at O'Hare. No federal officials appear to be examining whether spending 10 billion dollars (much of it from federal taxpayers) at O'Hare makes economic sense when much more new capacity to support competitive hub-and-spoke operations can be constructed at a new metropolitan airport for less than half the cost. Nor are federal officials examining whether the use of billions of dollars of federal taxpayer funds to expand United and American's hub-and-spoke duopoly at Fortress O'Hare—essentially using federal taxpayer funds to subsidize expansion of monopoly power—is a proper use of federal funds.

10. The Lifting of the Slot Limits at O'Hare Will Not Provide Sufficient Capacity to Allow Significant New Competition to Enter the Chicago Area Market. Much of the debate over the recent passage of the federal reauthorization of the Federal Aviation Program involved the issue of lifting "slot restrictions" at LaGuardia and Kennedy airports in New York and O'Hare in Chicago. One of the principal asserted justifications for lifting the slots was to provide access to so-called "new entrant" carriers that would presumably provide competition for the dominant carriers at O'Hare and force prices down. Yet FAA's own capacity studies at O'Hare demonstrate that O'Hare is already beyond acceptable limits of capacity and can provide only marginal capacity access—if any.

In addition, as predicted by Senator Peter Fitzgerald and Congressman Henry Hyde, any arguable incremental theoretical capacity at O'Hare will rapidly be consumed by United and American—expanding their monopoly. As stated by the Illinois Department of Transportation, the only effective way to provide sufficient capacity for major new competition in the Chicago market is to build major new capacity in the metropolitan Chicago area.

11. A New Runway at O'Hare is Intended to Increase Capacity to Expand United and American's Monopoly Power. The airlines' current public relations argument is that the lion's share of all the origin-destination traffic in the region (and all of the connecting and international traffic) should go to the sole hub-and-spoke airport in the region (O'Hare). Any minor overflow of point-to-point origin-destination traffic that a dramatically expanded O'Hare and Midway could not handle (if any) could be addressed in a small point-to-point airport like the South Suburban Airport or Gary.

Paralleling this argument is the claim by the airlines' allies that a new runway at O'Hare is needed to "reduce delays." They claim that a new runway would not increase O'Hare capacity but simply reduce delays.

Yet an analysis using FAA's own capacity analysis standards and criteria demonstrates that a new runway at O'Hare would substantially increase the capacity of the airport. This capacity increase at O'Hare would dramatically expand American's and United's hub-and-spoke monopoly at Fortress O'Hare. Further, it would virtually doom the economic justification for the new south suburban airport because the new "delay" runway—once built—could easily be used to carry the new additional traffic for which the new airport was intended. Simply by piecemealing incremental expansion at O'Hare, Chicago and American and United can keep the region under the thumb of the Fortress O'Hare monopoly.

12. United's and American's Fight to Preserve and Expand Fortress Hub Monopoly Power at O'Hare Has Grave Social, Economic, Public Health, and Quality of Life Consequences for the Region. Much of the discussion in this paper focuses on the billions of dollars in monopoly induced overcharges inflicted on air travelers—particularly the business traveler—as a result of the Fortress Hub monopoly system. But these monopoly abuses also inflict other serious harm on a variety of important public and social interests.

O'Hare area communities will be subjected to more noise, more air pollution, and more safety hazards because—under the United, American, and Chicago proposal—all the international, all the transfer traffic, and the lion's share of the origin-destination traffic are jammed into an already over-stuffed O'Hare. Any new airport—even if built—will simply receive the origin-destination overflow (if any) from a vastly expanded O'Hare and Midway.

South Chicago and south suburban communities will continue to suffer serious economic decline because the South Suburban Airport—which should have been built years ago—lies hostage to the unholy alliance struck between the monopoly interest of United and American and the political pique of Chicago's mayor.

Based on the facts and the antitrust law analysis contained in this report, the Suburban O'Hare Commission recommends the following actions:

1. The United States Attorney General and the United States Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois should initiate an investigation into the collective refusal of the Big Seven airlines to compete against each other in each other's Fortress Hub Markets. Included in the investigation should be an examination of the role of third party collaborators in the antitrust violations—including the City of Chicago and other private organizations and individuals who have assisted the Big Seven (including United and American) in perpetrating these violations. Because of the involvement by federal officials in affirmatively assisting the Big Seven and the City of Chicago in keeping significant competition out of Chicago, the Attorney General should be asked to consider the appointment of independent counsel.

2. The United States Attorney General and the United States Attorney should bring a civil action in federal court to enjoin and break up the illegal Fortress Hub geographic market allocation by the Big Seven and prohibit the collective refusal by the Big Seven to compete in each other's Fortress Hub markets. Included in the relief should be a requirement that members of the Big Seven halt their collective refusal to use a new South Suburban Airport in metropolitan Chicago and a requirement that competitive hub-and-spoke operations be established in metro Chicago to compete with United and American.

3. The State Attorneys General should initiate civil damage actions to recover treble damages for the billions of dollars per year in excess monopoly profits in airfare overcharges that have been charged at the Big Seven's Fortress Hubs. The Illinois Attorney General should bring suit to recover treble damages for the hundreds of millions of dollars in monopoly overcharges by American and United at Fortress O'Hare. On a multiple year basis in Illinois alone, the treble damages recoverable for consumers would exceed several billion dollars.

4. The GAO and the Department of Justice should undertake an immediate and detailed audit of all federal funds that may have been used to further the refusal of the other members of the Big Seven to compete with United and American in metropolitan Chicago—particularly the campaign by the airlines and Chicago to "Kill Peotone."

5. The United States Department of Transportation should withhold any further approvals of federal funds for expansion of the United and American duopoly at Fortress O'Hare.

6. The House and Senate Judiciary Committees should conduct immediate hearings on these issues.

7. Our Governor and our two United States Senators, the Speaker of the House, and our Illinois Attorney General should be respectfully asked what specific actions they will take to (1) break up the Fortress Hub system—particularly Fortress O'Hare; (2) bring new hub-and-spoke competitors into the Chicago market; (3) recover the billions in excess monopoly profits from the Fortress O'Hare overcharges; (4) prevent the Big Seven from continuing to refuse to use the new capacity provided to the South Suburban Airport; and (5) assemble the federal and state resources needed to rapidly build the South Suburban Airport.

8. Our Governor should hold fast to his promise not to permit any additional runways at O'Hare. To do otherwise would simply enhance and expand the monopoly power of Fortress O'Hare and doom the opportunity to bring new competition into the region at the South Suburban Airport.

9. The two candidates for President of the United States—both of whom have likely received large campaign contributions from the Big Seven—should be respectfully asked what they will do to break up the Fortress Hub system nationally and Fortress O'Hare in particular. Vice President Gore in particular should be asked why his administration has for the past eight years looked the other way while the Big Seven has used violations of the nation's antitrust laws to literally steal billions of dollars from American consumers. Mr. Gore should also be asked to explain why his administration has literally blocked development of new competitive capacity in metro Chicago—i.e., a new South Suburban Airport—at every turn. Finally, Mr. Bush should be asked specifically what he will do to build the South Suburban Airport and break up Fortress O'Hare.

Alfred Kahn, the "father" of airlines deregulation:

Anyone who says applying antitrust laws is the same as re-regulation is simply ignorant. To preserve competition we need the antitrust laws and vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws.

When we deregulated the airlines, we certainly did not intend to exempt them from the antitrust laws.

Gordon Bethune, Chairman and CEO, Continental Airlines:

"Continental chief says hub competition over."

Competition among airlines for dominance at major U.S. airports is virtually a thing of the past, the chairman of Continental Airlines said on Monday.

Continental chief executive Gordon Bethune, in a break from the usual industry line that competition reigns supreme, said the large air carriers have staked out their respective hubs and will be difficult to dislodge.

"In the last 20 years, the marketplace of the United States has been sorted out. American (Airlines) kind of controls Dallas-Fort Worth and Miami and we've got Newark, Houston and Cleveland. Delta's got Atlanta," Bethune said in remarks to the National Defense Transportation Association annual conference.

U.S. Senator Mike DeWine:

During the last year, there has been rising concern among some of the smaller airlines that the seven largest passenger carriers in the U.S. are no longer competing against each other. Essentially, the argument goes, the "Big Seven" have carved up the U.S. aviation market . . .

CEOs of 16 major airlines tell Illinois' Governor that they will not use new airport in metropolitan Chicago:

We are writing to express our concerns about further planning and development of the so-called Third Chicago Airport. It is our understanding that the State of Illinois will not proceed with the construction of a third airport without the support of the airlines. This letter is intended to inform you that the airlines oppose further planning and construction of this facility. . .

USA Today:

In the two decades since deregulation forced the government to stop telling carriers what fares to charge and which cities to serve, the big airlines have built up "fortress hubs" where, without meaningful competition, they alone decide where to go, how often to go there and how much to charge.

What travelers suspect is true: Airfares are climbing fast, and nowhere is the situation worse than at the hubs for the nation's largest airlines.

And almost everywhere, hub fares, especially for business fliers, are soaring.

Even when low-fare carriers enter a hub market, they usually control so little of the traffic that they can't do much to bring fares down.

New York Times:

Business travelers feel particularly abused because they account for more than half of airline revenue. For in the through-the-looking-glass world of airline pricing, the fares paid by leisure travelers, who book as long as a month in advance and stay over a weekend night, have in many cases declined, while last-minute fully refundable fares, which are most often paid by business travelers, are skyrocketing.

"The carriers always say that the business traveler is inelastic," said Peter M. Buchheit, director of travel and meeting services for the Black & Decker Corporation, which spent $18 million on air tickets for its American employees last year. "We need to travel so we will pay whatever it costs. But it has reached a point where we can't pay it anymore."

The burden of high fares is even greater on small companies. John W. Galbraith, president of Twin Advertising, a small company based in Rochester that had $2 million in billings last year, said he was thinking about dropping clients outside the city because the high cost of visiting them cancels out the profit he makes from having their business.

"Basically, what the airlines have done to companies like ours is kept us from growing," he said. (New York Times January 11, 1998)

United States Supreme Court on horizontal market allocations as per se violations of federal antitrust law:

One of the classic examples of a per se violation of §1 [of the Sherman Antitrust Act] is an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition. . . . This Court has reiterated time and time again that '[h]orizontal territorial limitations . . . are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition.' Such limitations are per se violations of the Sherman Act. (The United States Supreme Court in the 1990 decision in Palmer v. BRG Group of Georgia, 498 U.S. 46, 49 (1990).)

Relevant Provisions of The Sherman Act:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court. (Title 15 United States Code §1)

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court. (Title 15 United States Code §2)

The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of sections 1 to 7 of this title; and it shall be the duty of the several United States attorneys, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. (Title 15 United States Code §4)

[A]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. (Title 15 United States Code §15)

1. Focusing on the Elephant in the Corner.

Over the last decade there have been extensive congressional hearings and much media coverage of so-called "Fortress Hubs." But much of the attention has focused on two aspects of the Fortress Hub phenomenon:

Various "constraints" that the so-called "low-cost" "new-entrant" airlines (e.g., Spirit Vanguard) say have prevented these new entrants from entering and competing in Fortress Hub markets; and

In those instances where the new low-cost airlines could physically enter the Fortress Hub market, the dominant hub airlines are alleged to have engaged in predatory pricing to drive the so-called "low-cost" "new-entrant" competitors out of the market.

But while Congress and the Administration have focused on these elements, they have ignored what might be called "the elephant in the corner" aspect of the Fortress Hub issue. Virtually ignored in these debates has been the role of the so-called "major" airlines—i.e., the so-called "Big Seven" controlling members of the trade group known as the Air Transport Association (ATA)—in creating and maintaining the Fortress Hub system. While Congress and the U.S. DOT talked about the anti-competitive aspects of keeping the new "low-cost" airlines out of the Fortress Hub market, little attention has been directed toward the issue of whether the Big Seven's Fortress Hub system is itself a violation of the nation's antitrust laws.

The purpose of this study is to: (1) analyze the known facts of the Fortress Hub system; (2) determine if the known facts demonstrate the existence of a violation of federal antitrust laws, (3) examine the role of the "Big Seven's" conduct in the Chicago air travel market as a case study illustration of their collaborative conduct nationally in maintaining the national Fortress Hub network, and (4) propose remedial action.

The findings of this study unequivocally demonstrate that the Fortress Hub system maintained by the Big Seven—alone and through their trade organizations, the Air Transport Association—is an illegal cartel in violation of the Nation's antitrust laws.

2. Geographic Market Allocation through Fortress Hubs—Mutual Protection of Fortress Hub Dominance Against New Competition from Other Big Seven Airlines.

There is overwhelming and incontrovertible evidence that, since "deregulation" in 1978, the market airlines have carved up major areas of the Nation into territories of geographic market dominance known as "Fortress Hubs". Under this Fortress Hub arrangement, one or two major airlines are ceded geographic market dominance and other major airlines tactically agree not to compete in that geographic market.

Thus Delta has Fortress Hubs at Atlanta and Cincinnati, USAir at Pittsburgh, Northwest at Minneapolis and Detroit, American at Dallas-Ft. Worth, American and United at Chicago O'Hare, etc. The other Big Seven airlines—either implicitly or by explicit agreement—have agreed to stay out of each other's Fortress Hub markets in any significant way. Thus, for example, Delta remains unchallenged by United, Northwest, and others in Atlanta. In turn, Delta doesn't provide significant challenge to United States and American at O'Hare or to Northwest at Minneapolis and Detroit. Similar de facto, quid pro quo non-compete accommodations by the major airlines can be found at virtually every Fortress Hub where one or two airlines have dominant control of the local market.

As stated by one congressional witness:

"The major airlines * * * developed high market share hubs in large sections of the country. Given the market power that they have developed, the major airlines have raised prices far above the competitive level in their market hubs (as study after study has shown). Furthermore, the major airlines defend their high price hub markets with predatory pricing. These markets are descriptively called 'fortress hub's'.

"There are two things the major airlines are doing to monopolize large segments of the country. First, they work hard to see that entry to their large markets remains closed or difficult. Second, if a discounter enters a few of their markets they use predatory pricing to drive the discounters out of business."

The broad reach of this Fortress Hub system is illustrated in a table prepared by the National Association of Attorneys General.

CITIES WHERE FORTRESS HUBS ARE LOCATED City and Dominant Airline

Atlanta, Delta; Chicago O'Hare, United and American; Cincinnati, Delta; Dallas, American; Detroit, Northwest; Houston International, Continental; Minneapolis/St. Paul, Northwest; Denver, United; Pittsburgh, US Air; St. Louis, TWA.

3. Monopoly Fare Premiums at Fortress Hubs.

There is a large body of evidence and expert opinion—as articulated by the General Accounting Office, USDOT, business travel organizations, and the Illinois Department of Transportation—that the dominance of these major markets by one or two carriers results in a monopolistic ability to raise fares beyond the air fares that would exist if there was strong competition in these Fortress Hub markets. As stated by the GAO as far back as 1990:

"Airports where one or two carriers handle most of the enplaning traffic have higher fares than airports where the traffic is less concentrated. Moreover, the data show that fares tend to rise as concentration increases. While many factors can influence fare changes, the evidence that we have collected strongly suggests that fares and concentration at an airport are related. Fares are higher at concentrated airports than at relatively less concentrated ones, and the evidence suggests that the gap is increasing."

Subsequent studies by GAO since 1990 have confirmed the problem of higher fares at Fortress Hubs—higher than would exist in a competitive environment. See e.g., Barriers to Entry Continue in Some Markets (GAO/RCED-98-112; March 5, 1998); Airline Deregulation: Barriers to Entry Continue to Limit Competition in Several Key Domestic Markets (GAO/RCED-97-4, Oct. 18, 1996); Domestic Aviation: Barriers to Entry Continue to Limit Benefits of Airline Deregulation (GAO/RCED-97-120, May, 13, 1997); Airline Competition: Higher Fares and Less Competition Continue at Concentrated Airports (GAO/RCED-93-141, July 15, 1993); Airline Competition: Effects of Airline Market Concentration and Barriers to Entry on Airfares (GAO/RCED-91-101, Apr. 26, 1991).

While repeatedly emphasizing the problem of higher monopoly fares caused by lack of competition, GAO continued to emphasize the lifting of slot restrictions at three of the nation's airports as a partial solution to the problem. GAO's prime emphasis has been to obtain access to airport capacity for the so-called "low-cost" new entrant airlines into the Fortress Hub markets.

But GAO has never analyzed the issue of the "capacity" of these slot-restricted airports to service new competition—even if the slot restrictions were lifted. As discussed below, the FAA has repeatedly emphasized that the practical capacity of an airport is limited (see discussion, infra.) and that as traffic growth approaches the physical limits of the airport's capacity, aircraft delays rise geometrically—essentially leading to gridlock.

As the analysis contained in the 1995 DOT report A Study of the High Density Rule, and this study show, there simply is not enough capacity at O'Hare—even with the slots lifted—to all significant new competition to enter the Chicago market. This is why the Big Seven's collective refusal (discussed infra.) to use and support the major new capacity that would be provided by the new South Suburban Airport is a central component in the preservation of the Fortress Hub problem in metropolitan Chicago. Moreover, any arguable minor increment of available capacity at O'Hare will rapidly be consumed by United and American. There simply is not enough room at O'Hare to allow a major new competitor to gain the "critical mass" to compete with United and American.

The Illinois Department of Transportation has repeatedly emphasized its opinion that monopoly dominance at O'Hare results in higher airfares paid by Chicago area travelers and that major new regional airport capacity is essential to breaking the monopoly stranglehold of Fortress O'Hare:

"There are numerous examples besides these to demonstrate that without the competition of a new entrant, the fares at Chicago are increasing or remain inordinately high."

"We encourage and support your [USDOT's] focus on anticompetitive practices that are injuring commerce, smaller cities, and consumers in Illinois and throughout the region serviced by O'Hare Airport as the hub of United Airlines and American Airlines. We strongly urge, however, that the enforcement policies should be part of a broader initiative that will insure that there will be airport capacity available in the Chicago area that will provide new airline entrants the opportunity to compete with United and American. Additional airport capacity is vital to restoring airline competition in the Chicago, Illinois, and Midwestern markets."

"There is simply no room at O'Hare for new entrant airlines to pose competitive challenges to the dominant airlines."

4. Time Sensitive Business Traveler Biggest Loser in Fortress Hub Monopoly System.

The air travel consumer most seriously harmed by this horizontal Fortress Hub market allocation is the business traveler—particularly the small to medium size business traveler who cannot negotiate bulk fare discounts and who must make time sensitive business trips at unrestricted coach fares.

The Illinois Department of Transportation estimates this monopoly based fare penalty at O'Hare alone exceeds several hundred million dollars per year. Nationally, the loss to the traveling public from these monopoly premiums at Fortress Hubs is likely to exceed several billion dollars annually.

As stated in major articles on the subject by USA Today and the New York Times:

What travelers suspect is true: Airfares are climbing fast, and nowhere is the situation worse than at the hubs for the nation's largest airlines.

And almost everywhere, hub fares, especially for business fliers, are soaring. (USA Today February 23, 1998)

Business travelers feel particularly abused because they account for more than half of airline revenue. For in the through-the-looking-glass world of airline pricing, the fares paid by leisure travelers, who book as long as a month in advance and stay over a weekend night, have in many cases declined, while last-minute fully refundable fares, which are most often paid by business travelers, are skyrocketing.

"The carriers always say that the business traveler is inelastic," said Peter M. Buchheit, director of travel and meeting services for the Black & Decker Corporation, which spent $18 million on air tickets for its American employees last year. "We need to travel so we will pay whatever it costs. But it has reached a point where we can't pay it anymore."

The burden of high fares is even greater on small companies. John W. Galbraith, president of Twin Advertising, a small company based in Rochester that had $2 million in billings last year, said he was thinking about dropping clients outside the city because the high cost of visiting them cancels out the profit he makes from having their business.

"Basically, what the airlines have done to companies like ours is kept us from growing," he said. (New York Times January 11, 1998)

Put bluntly, the Big Seven has used their monopoly power at Fortress Hubs to literally extort billions of dollars annually from captive travelers—most often time sensitive business travelers living in these airlines' own Fortress Hub communities.

5. The Second Biggest Loser in the Fortress Hub Monopoly System is the "Spoke" Passenger.

The second biggest loser from this Fortress Hub monopoly system is the so-called "spoke" passenger in the small to medium size community that serves as the "spoke" to a single large metropolitan Fortress Hub. Because the dominant Big Seven airline at a Fortress Hub has no competition at its hub, it is free to charge the spoke passenger—who must use the hub to get to his or her destination—excessive monopoly fares.

The Illinois Department of Transportation—again emphasizing the lack of capacity to handle both new competition and service to smaller and mid-size communities—has stated the problem as follows:

"The dominant airlines are diminishing and even abandoning service to smaller Illinois and Midwestern cities in favor of routes that are more lucrative or that increase the power of their hub networks."

Because the dominant O'Hare airlines prioritize the limited capacity at O'Hare to service the flight operations with the highest profitability, the small community "spoke" traveler gets harmed on two levels. First, he loses service when the dominant airlines cut small community service to use the limited capacity to service more lucrative long-haul or international traffic—eliminating less profitable small community service. Second, as to the small community traffic that the dominant airlines still service, they are able to charge exorbitant rates—knowing that the small community spoke traveler is at their mercy.

6. The Big Seven's Fortress Hub Geographic Market Allocation is a Per Se Violation of the Antitrust laws.

Neither the Administration nor the Congress appears to have critically examined a central question: Does the Big Seven's Fortress Hub geographic market allocation violate the Nation's antitrust laws? Based on clear and repeated Supreme Court precedent, it clearly does.

The major airlines general de facto geographic allocation of major air travel markets in the nation through the development of "Fortress Hubs" constitutes a per se violation of the antitrust laws. The Supreme Court has uniformly condemned arrangements to carve up horizontal markets as per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. See e.g., Palmer v. BRG Group of Georgia, 498 U.S. 46, 49 (1990); United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 607–609 (1972).

Virtually all laymen and most lawyers shy away from antitrust law as an economic morass difficult to understand. But there is one area where the United States Supreme Court has been clear and unequivocal: horizontal arrangements to carve up geographic markets are an automatic—a "per se"—violation of the federal antitrust laws. Because this law is so-clear and unambiguous—and recognizing that the airlines will claim that the law can be ignored—we believe it important to quote the United States Supreme Court on this subject:

"While the Court has utilized the 'rule of reason' in evaluating the legality of most restraints alleged to be violative of the Sherman Act, it has also developed the doctrine that certain business relationships are per se violations of the Act without regard to a consideration of their reasonableness. In Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S.Ct. 514, 518, 2 L.Ed.2d 545 (1958), Mr. Justice Black explained the appropriateness of, and the need for, per se rules:"

"(T)here are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. This principle of per se unreasonableness not only makes the type of restraints which are prescribed by the Sherman Act more certain to the benefit of everyone concerned, but it also avoids the necessity for an incredibly complicated and prolonged economic investigation into the entire history of the industry involved, as well as related industries, in an effort to determine at large whether a particular restraint has been unreasonable—an inquiry so often wholly fruitless when undertaken."

"It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act. See generally Van Cise, The Future of Per Se in Antitrust Law, 50 Va.L.Rev. 1165 (1964). One of the classic examples of a per se violation of §1 is an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition. Such concerted action is usually termed a 'horizontal' restraint, in contradistinction to combinations of persons at different levels of the market structure, e.g., manufacturers and distributors, which are termed 'vertical' restraints. The Court has reiterated time and time again that '(h)orizontal territorial limitations . . . are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition.' White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263, 83 S. Ct. 696, 702, 9 L.Ed.2d 738 (1963). Such limitations are per se violations of the Sherman Act. See Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 20 S.Ct. 44 L.Ed.136 (1989), aff'g 85 F. 271 (C.A.6 1898) (Taft, J.); United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U.S. 319, 67 S.Ct. 1634, 91 L.Ed. 2077 (1947); Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 71 S.Ct. 971, 95 L.Ed. 1199 (1951); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, supra; Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131, 89 S.Ct. 927, 22 L.Ed.2d 148 (1969); United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350, 87 S.Ct. 1847, 28 L.Ed.2d 1238 (1967); United States v. Arnold, Schwinn &

Co., 388 U.S. 365, 390, 87 S.Ct. 1856, 1871, 18 L.Ed.2d 1249 (1967) (Stewart, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); Serta Associates, Inc. v. United States, 393 U.S. 534, 89 S.Ct. 870, 21 L.Ed.2d 753 (1969), aff'g 296 F.Supp. 1121, 1128 (N.D.Del.1968)." (United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. at 607–608 (emphasis added))

The Big Seven's carving up of geographic markets into the current Fortress Hub system is nothing more than a naked horizontal restraint repeatedly condemned by the Supreme Court as a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

Put in terms the average citizen understands—Could McDonald's tell Burger King: We won't compete in Atlanta if you won't compete in Chicago? Could Ford tell GM: We won't sell Fords in Michigan if you won't sell Chevys in Illinois? The answer is clearly no. Each would be a horizontal market restraint and a per se violation of the Sherman Act just as the Big Seven's Fortress Hub system—and their refusal to compete in each other's hub market—is a horizontal market restraint and a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

The law is equally clear it is not necessary to demonstrate a formal written agreement among the Big Seven to carve up the geographic Fortress Hub market in order to find a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act. The existence of such an agreement or arrangement can be inferred from the course of conduct of the members of the industry. Norfolk Monument Company v. Woodlawn Memorial Gardens, 394 U.S. 700, 704 (1969); American Tobacco Company v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 809–810 (1946); Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 221, 226–227 (1939).

7. The Metropolitan Chicago Market: An Egregious Example of the Geographic Market Allocation and Refusal to Compete—"If You Build It, We Won't Come."

A particularly egregious implementation of this horizontal agreement not to compete in each other's Fortress Hub markets can be found in the major airlines' announced refusal to use a new major airport in the metropolitan Chicago. The most visible manifestation of their refusal to compete in the Chicago market can be found in letters written by sixteen Chief Executive Officers (CEOs) of the major airlines to Illinois Governor Jim Edgar and his successor George Ryan. In those letters—drafted in coordination with representatives of the City of Chicago and the Air Transport Association—the major airlines tell the Illinois Governor that they will refuse to use the proposed new metropolitan Chicago airport:

"We are writing to express our concerns about further planning and development of the so-called Third Chicago Airport. It is our understanding that the State of Illinois will not proceed with the construction of a third airport without the support of the airlines. This letter is intended to inform you that the airlines oppose further planning and construction of this facility . . ."

Chicago area news media have characterized the major airlines' refusal to use a new airport as "If you build it, we won't come." In reality, this collective refusal to use a new regional airport is nothing more than a manifestation of the major airlines' horizontal market agreement not to compete in any significant way with United and American in their dominant Chicago market. This refusal by major airlines such as Delta, Northwest, USAir, and Continental to use new metropolitan Chicago airport capacity to compete in metropolitan Chicago is but an individual example of the per se antitrust violation of allocating geographic markets by the major airlines.

8. The Fortress Hub System and the Big Seven's Collective Refusal to Compete in Each Other's Fortress Hub Markets—as Illustrated by Their Collective Refusal to Use the New South Suburban Airport—Represent Serious Violations of Federal Law.

These clear violations by the Big Seven airlines in creating and maintaining the Fortress Hub system and the refusal of the Big Seven to compete in each other's markets represent serious violations of the antitrust laws. If the GAO and IDOT estimates are accurate, nationally the Fortress Hub system literally illegally steals several billion dollars per year from the nation's air travelers—several hundred million dollars in the Chicago area alone.

Because these antitrust violations are so blatant, it is important for the public to know the significant sanctions and remedies available to cure these violations.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court. (Title 15 United States Code §1 (emphasis added))

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court. (Title 15 United States Code §2 (emphasis added))

Section 4 of the Act provides civil injunction remedies and mandates the Department of Justice to “institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations”:

The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of sections 1 to 7 of this title; and it shall be the duty of the several United States attorneys, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. (Title 15 United States Code §4 (emphasis added))

Section 15 provides that any person injured by the violations of the antitrust laws can recover treble (triple) damages for the monetary losses caused by the violations.

[A]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefore in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. (Title 15 United States Code §15).

In summary, the statutory sanctions for these antitrust violations are significant.

Thus far, federal Department of Justice officials have been unwilling to initiate antitrust enforcement proceedings to break up the Fortress Hub monopoly of the Big Seven.

9. The Major Airlines Geographic Market Allocation—A Per Se Violation of the Antitrust Laws—Is Not Immunized by the “Noerr-Pennington” Doctrine.

The major airlines have engaged in this de facto Fortress Hub geographic market allocation scheme for more than a decade. It is likely that the airlines will assert that their collective refusal to compete in the metropolitan Chicago market—and the manifestation of that refusal by their letters to Governors Edgar and Ryan—is immunized from antitrust law enforcement by the “Noerr-Pennington” doctrine. That doctrine immunizes antitrust violations where the principal vehicle for achieving the monopolistic goal is political expression—i.e., lobbying government.

But the post-Noerr-Pennington case law makes clear that where a business arrangement—that otherwise violates the antitrust laws—has one component that involves the exercise of First Amendment speech, there is no immunity from antitrust enforcement under the “Noerr-Pennington” doctrine. See Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 505–506 (1988); FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 423–426 (1990); Sandy River Nursing Care v. Aetna Casualty, 985 F.2d 1138, 1142–43 (1st Cir. 1993); In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 186 F.3d 781, 788–789 (7th Cir. 1999).

It is common for those accused of antitrust violations to claim that their monopolistic practices are immunized from antitrust liability under the so-called “state action” doctrine of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341 (1943). The Supreme Court's rationale in Parker for “state action” immunity was the Congress had not intended in the Sherman Act to control the activities of states in engaging in conduct directed by the state legislature. 317 U.S. at 351–352.

But the Supreme Court has severely limited the availability of “state action” immunity when invoked by private parties such as the airlines in an attempt to immunize conduct clearly violative of the antitrust laws. The Supreme Court has established two requirements for “state action” immunity where private parties participate in the antitrust violation: (1) the monopolistic activity must be clearly expressed and affirmatively adopted as being the policy of the State, and (2) the monopolistic activity must be actively supervised by the State itself. Federal Trade Commission v. Ticor Title Insurance Co., 504 U.S. 621, 633–634 (1992); Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 101–102 (1988); California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105–106 (1980).

In the case of Fortress O'Hare and the collective campaign of United, American and Chicago to keep significant new hub-and-spoke competition from coming into the metro Chicago market, there is no question that the “state action” defense does not apply. First, the State of Illinois has not authorized the Fortress O'Hare monopoly maintained by United and American and has actively spoken out against the monopoly problem there. Second, the State is not actively supervising and approving the anti-competitive conduct by United and United and American and Chicago.

11. Federal Taxpayer Funds May Have Been Used to Suppress Competition and Violate the Antitrust Laws in the Chicago Market.

As stated above, other major airlines through the (ATA), United and American (the dominant carriers at O'Hare) have engaged in a concerted effort to defeat construction of a new South Suburban Airport, an airport that would provide significant capacity opportunities for major new competition to enter the Chicago market. United executives have privately stated their goal as “Kill Peotone”.

United and American have been assisted in their “Kill Peotone” (and thus kill new competitive capacity) campaign by representatives of the City of Chicago—including Chicago's consultants. Chicago's consultants have been paid several million dollars in consulting fees to assist Chicago and United and American in expanding O'Hare and in obstructing development of a new South Suburban Airport.

Much of the money paid to these consultants has come from either: (1) federal Passenger Facility Charge (PFC) funds (2) federal Airport Improvement Program (AIP) funds, or (3) federal tax subsidies for municipal airport bonds (“GARBS” General Airport Revenue Bonds). Not only are the airlines and Chicago engaged in a monopolistic arrangement designed to prevent new competition from entering the Chicago market (i.e., through the new airport), but much of the money to implement this illegal arrangement is coming from federal taxpayer dollars. The GAO and the Department of Justice should be asked to conduct an independent audit of all PFC, AIP, and GARB expenditures at O'Hare to determine if any federal funds were used as part of a campaign to “Kill Peotone” and to assist in the violation of federal antitrust laws.

12. Federal Officials Have Participated in and Supported the Big Seven's Illegal Monopolistic Arrangement to Refuse to Compete in the Chicago Market.

Not only have federal funds been used to support the major airlines illegal monopolistic arrangement to refuse to compete in the Chicago market, but it appears that federal officials within the Administration have worked with the major airlines and Chicago to assist in this antitrust arrangement to prevent the development of a new airport in metropolitan Chicago. For the last several years, federal administration officials—several of whom are former Chicago officials who worked for the Chicago Aviation Department—have blocked development of the new South Suburban Airport through a series of spurious legal claims that federal law requires that a “consensus” must exist between the State of Illinois and the City of Chicago before a new metropolitan airport can be constructed. No such legal requirement exists.

Because of the active participation of key figures in the current administration in promoting and supporting the continued blockage of new airport development in metropolitan Chicago—in concert with the illegal refusal of the major airlines to compete in the Chicago market by using the new airport—and impartiality and lack of bias of the Administration in conducting law enforcement in this area is suspect. The Attorney General should be asked to appoint an independent prosecutor to conduct the antitrust investigation and to undertake all appropriate actions needed to correct the ongoing antitrust violations.

13. Defining Essential Remedies—A New Regional Airport With Sufficient Capacity to Support New Competitive Hub-And-Spoke Operations.

There have been two "remedies" asserted to eliminate the monopoly dominance of Fortress O'Hare in the Chicago market. The first—eliminating slot restrictions at O'Hare—was proposed and passed by Congress this year. According to proponents of lifting the slot limits, elimination of slot controls would bring new competition into O'Hare.

A. Lifting the Slot Limits Was an Unmitigated Disaster.

At the time the federal laws lifting the slot limits was passed, Illinois Senator Peter Fitzgerald and Congressman Henry Hyde both voted against the bill. They argued that the slot limitations were not an artificial constraint but a recognition of the already exhausted limited capacity of O'Hare. They argued that lifting the slots would be a disaster because: (1) added flights should lead to a massive delay gridlock at O'Hare, and (2) that even if there were any additional capacity, that capacity would be rapidly consumed by American and United. Under these circumstances, they argued that lifting the slot limits would simply expand United's and American's monopoly—not increase competition.

Senator Fitzgerald and Congressman Hyde can rightfully say: I told you so. On April 20, 2000 United and American announced their intent to add 400 new daily flights to O'Hare. The sad reality is that O'Hare does not have the capacity for these 400 new flights. But Fitzgerald's and Hyde's point was made; whatever arguable minor incremental capacity exists at O'Hare (if any), it has been rapidly consumed by United and American—not used by new competition. Instead of reducing the monopoly, the new federal law has helped United and American expand the monopoly.

United's and American's actions—coupled with the limited capacity of O'Hare—illustrates a salient point. There simply is not enough capacity at O'Hare to bring any significant new competition into O'Hare. Any new competitive entry will be token at best and not provide meaningful competition to the hub-and-spoke dominance of United and American.

Lifting the slot limit, coupled with United and American's actions to jam more than 400 new flights into O'Hare also means massive new delay increases for the traveling public this Summer. To illustrate these points and to demonstrate why the recently passed federal legislation makes matters much worse at O'Hare requires a brief analysis of the related issues of capacity and delay at airports—particularly O'Hare.

FAA, the airlines, Chicago and IDOT define capacity as the number of operations that can be processed at an airport at an acceptable level of delay. There is a recognition that there is a difference between absolute maximum physical throughput and a lower level of operations that can be put through without experiencing intolerable levels of delay and cancellations. As stated by the City of Chicago:

"The practical capacity of an airfield will be defined as the maximum level of average all-weather throughput achievable while maintaining an acceptable level of delay."

"Ten minutes per aircraft operation will be used as the maximum level of acceptable delay for the assessment of the existing airfield's capacity, subject to future levels of forecast demand. This level of delay represents an upper bound for acceptable delays at major hub airports."

This relationship between maximum physical throughput and practical, delay-sensitive capacity is illustrated in an FAA chart copied from an FAA report on the subject, Airfield and Airspace Capacity/Delay Policy Analysis, FAA-AP0-81-14.

This relationship holds true whatever the input data as to the level of demand or whatever the capacity of the airport under study. Once the demand reaches a point approaching the physical capacity of the airport the delay levels for all traffic at the airport rise geometrically. The acceptable or "practical capacity" of the airport is that level where delays are acceptable. To push more traffic beyond that point is a certain invitation to massive delays, major cancellations, and gridlock.

At one point FAA defined the acceptable level for practical capacity of an airport as four minutes average annual delay. That translated into about a 30-minute delay in peak periods. Now FAA, IDOT and Chicago defined the acceptable level of delay to define practical capacity as 10 minutes average annual delay. This translates (in equivalent terms) into more than an hour delay in peak periods.

What is important to emphasize is that all FAA and Chicago—and most likely Booz-Allen and United and American—runs of the SIMMOD model for O'Hare show average annual delay at O'Hare is currently in excess of 10 minutes average annual delay—already above acceptable capacity limits without adding more flights. FAA and Chicago and United and American all know that a push 400-500 new flights per day into O'Hare is going to lead to: (1) massive increases in delays and (2) widespread cancellations. FAA (USDOT) A Study of the High Density Rule illustrates the massive delay increase that adding just a few flights at O'Hare beyond the slot limits will do to all passengers at O'Hare. This analysis shows that adding 400-500 flights per day will lead to disastrous delays for all passengers—more than doubling the delays for all passengers, not just those who are on the new additional flights.

We anticipate that FAA and United and American will claim that the delay and capacity results of DOT in 1995 have been changed because of capacity improvements at O'Hare in intervening years. But if so, a few questions need answering. What are the capacity improvements since 1995? How much new capacity has been provided? What will be the capacity/delay numbers (comparable to DOT's 1995 analysis) with the new capacity? Why were there no public hearings and environmental disclosure on these capacity improvements?

We suspect the answer is that there have not been any capacity changes at O'Hare since 1995 and DOT's numbers remain valid. Conversely, if there have been capacity changes, FAA has failed to inform both affected elected officials (e.g., Congressman Hyde and Senator Fitzgerald) and they have failed to tell the public and give the public an opportunity to be heard.

There is another important point to emphasize about this throughput/delay relationship shown on the FAA charts. Where the airport is at the limits of acceptable delays—i.e., the practical capacity limit—very small shifts in either traffic demand or capacity can dramatically increase delays for all passengers. Thus a small increase in traffic demand beyond the practical capacity limit will generate huge increases in delays for all passengers. Similarly, a slight decrease in capacity—such as experienced this past year when regional jet pilots were refusing Land-And-Hold-Short for safety reasons—can dramatically increase delays with little or no increase in throughput. The point here is that O'Hare is already at the breaking point—brought there by the resistance of Chicago and the Fortress Hub airlines at O'Hare (United and American) to the building of a new regional airport. O'Hare cannot handle 400-500 new flights per day and United and American know it. Their own SIMMOD analysis tells them that.

Why then do United and American announce a literally foolhardy plan to jam 400-500 flights into O'Hare—an announcement made the same day that United's and American's front organization (the Civic Committee) calls for a new runway at O'Hare? By deliberately creating chaos at O'Hare, United and American will then be able to say that delays are at crisis levels and we must immediately build a new runway at O'Hare.

B. The "Point-To-Point" Shell Game: Building the South Suburban Airport as a "Point-To-Point" Airport Will Not Break the Hub-And-Spoke Monopoly of Fortress O'Hare.

The heart of the monopoly overcharges to travelers in the Chicago market is the absence of competition in the hub-and-spoke market in Chicago. None of the other Big Seven will come into the Chicago market to establish a competitive hub-and-spoke operation.

United and American propose using close to 10 billion dollars (much of it in federal funds) to expand United and American's hub-and-spoke empire at Fortress O'Hare. In an attempt to expand their monopoly and prevent new competition from entering the Chicago market, United and American (along with the "Civic Committee" and the Chicagoland Chamber) have sought to distract attention by suggesting a south suburban airport in Chicago as a "point-to-point" airport—not unlike Midway. United and American argues that O'Hare should be the only "hub-and-spoke" airport in metropolitan Chicago.

By shaping the argument in this fashion, United and American guarantee that they will be allowed to continue and dramatically expand their Fortress Hub monopoly at O'Hare. According to their arguments, the lion's share of all the origin-destination traffic in the region—and all of the connecting and international traffic—should go to the sole hub-and-spoke airport in the region: O'Hare. Any minor overflow of "point-to-point" origin-destination traffic that Midway could not handle could be addressed in a small "point-to-point" airport like the South Suburban Airport or Gary.

What United and American gloss over is the fact there is plenty of competition in the Chicago market in point-to-point service. The real lack of competition in the Chicago market is in the lack of additional hub-and-spoke competition to challenge the hub-and-spoke duopoly of United and American at Fortress O'Hare. It is this market dominance of the hub-and-spoke market—not the point-to-point—where lack of competition gouges the business traveler and the traveler from "spoke" cities. There is a desperate need for new competitive hub-and-spoke service in the Chicago market and the place to put that hub-and-spoke is the new South Suburban Airport.

No federal administration officials appear to be examining whether spending 10 billion dollars (much of it from federal taxpayers) at O'Hare makes economic sense when much more new capacity to support competitive hub-and-spoke operations can be constructed at a new metropolitan airport for less than half the cost. Nor are federal officials examining whether the use of billions of dollars of federal taxpayer funds to expand United and American's hub-and-spoke duopoly at Fortress O'Hare—essentially using billions of dollars of federal taxpayer funds to subsidize expansion of monopoly power—is proper use of federal funds.

C. A New Runway at O'Hare is Intended to Increase Capacity to Expand United and American's Monopoly Power.

As discussed above, the airlines' current public relations argument is that the lion's share of all the origin-destination traffic in the region (and all of the connecting and international traffic) should go to the sole hub-and-spoke airport in the region (O'Hare). Any minor overflow of point-to-point origin-destination traffic that a dramatically expanded O'Hare and Midway could not handle (if any) could be addressed in a small point-to-point airport like the South Suburban Airport or Gary.

Paralleling this argument is the claim by the airlines allies that a new runway at O'Hare is needed to "reduce delays". They claim that a new runway would not increase O'Hare capacity but simply reduce delays.

Yet an analysis using FAA's own capacity analysis standards and criteria demonstrates that a new runway at O'Hare would substantially increase the capacity of the airport. As discussed above, the concepts of capacity and delay are closely interrelated. The FAA and Chicago both define capacity as that level of aircraft operations that can be processed at an airport at an acceptable level of delay.

The FAA's published graphic showing the relationship of capacity and delay illustrates a how a so-called "delay reduction" at one level of traffic results in an increase in capacity at the airport to accommodate additional levels of traffic.

This capacity increase at O'Hare—by building a runway to "reduce delay"—would dramatically expand American's and United's hub-and-spoke monopoly at Fortress O'Hare. Further, it would virtually doom the economic justification for the new south suburban airport because the new "delay" runway—once built—could easily be used to carry the new additional traffic for which the new airport was intended. Simply by piecemealing incremental expansion at O'Hare, Chicago and American and United can keep the region under the thumb of the Fortress O'Hare monopoly.

14. United's and American's Fight to Preserve and Expand Fortress Hub Monopoly Power at O'Hare has Grave Social, Economic, Public Health, and Quality of Life Consequences for the Region.

In their passion to expand Fortress O'Hare and defeat the prospect of new hub-and-spoke competition coming into a new airport, United and American have disregarded safety, public health, and quality of life for the communities around O'Hare. All parties are in agreement that growth in air traffic should be accommodated with major increases in new airport capacity in the metropolitan Chicago region.

The choices are stark: (1) a new regional airport which will have an environmental land buffer three times the size of O'Hare and plenty of capacity to accommodate new hub-and-spoke competition or (2) an over-stuffed O'Hare with no land buffer and continued dominance of the metropolitan hub-and-spoke market by United and American. But for the addiction to monopoly revenues at Fortress O'Hare, the decision is simple—send the traffic growth to a new environmentally sound, competitively open new regional airport.

Instead we have United and American and their political surrogates urging more air pollution, more noise, and more safety hazards be imposed on O'Hare area communities—simply to protect and expand the Fortress O'Hare monopoly. We now live in a bizarre world where the desire to protect and expand violations of antitrust law and illegal overcharges trumps protection of public health, safety and quality of life.

O'Hare area communities will be subjected to more noise, more air pollution, and more safety hazards because—under the United, American, and Chicago proposal—all the international, all the transfer traffic, and the lion's share of the origin-destination traffic are jammed into an already over-stuffed O'Hare. Any new airport—even if built—will simply receive the origin-destination overflow (if any) from a vastly expanded O'Hare and Midway.

South Chicago and south suburban communities will continue to suffer serious economic decline because the South Suburban Airport—which should have been built years ago—lies hostage to the unholy alliance struck between the monopoly interest of United and American and the political pique of Chicago's mayor. Residents of South and South Suburban Chicago legitimately ask why United and American oppose the hundreds of thousands of jobs and billions in economic benefits that would accrue to this area if the new airport is built. Some attribute United and American's position to racial intent. More accurately, United and American are willing to ignore the severe economic harm their monopolistic position inflicts on an area with a significant African-American population if that harm is a necessary consequence of preserving and expanding their monopoly at Fortress O'Hare. In a world of pure economic rationality, monopoly power and the social and economic injustices incident to that monopoly power might be excused as central to the maximization of profit. However, in a world of law and justice—where political leaders must account for their failure to correct these abuses—such destructive monopoly power should not be tolerated.

Based on the facts and the antitrust law analysis contained in this report, the Suburban O'Hare Commission recommends the following actions:

The United States Attorney General and the United States Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois should initiate an investigation into the collective refusal of the Big Seven airlines to compete against each other in each other's Fortress Hub Markets. Included in the investigation should be an examination of the role of third party collaborators in the antitrust violations—including the City of Chicago and other private organizations and individuals who have assisted the Big Seven (including United and American) in perpetrating these violations. Because of the involvement by federal officials in affirmatively assisting the Big Seven and the City of Chicago in keeping significant competition out of Chicago, the Attorney General should be asked to consider the appointment of independent counsel.

The United States Attorney General and the United States Attorney should bring a civil action in federal court to enjoin and break up the illegal Fortress Hub geographic market allocation by the Big Seven and prohibit the collective refusal by the Big Seven to compete in each other's Fortress Hub markets. Included in the relief should be a requirement that members of the Big Seven halt their collective refusal to use a new South Suburban Airport in metropolitan Chicago and a requirement that competitive hub-and-spoke operations be established in metro Chicago to compete with United and American.

The State Attorneys General should initiate civil damage actions to recover treble damages for the billions of dollars per year in excess monopoly profits in airfare overcharges that have been charged at the Big Seven's Fortress Hubs. The Illinois Attorney General should bring suit to recover treble damages for the hundreds of millions of dollars in monopoly overcharges by American and United at Fortress O'Hare. On a multiple year basis in Illinois alone, the treble damages recoverable for consumers would exceed several billion dollars.

The GAO and the Department of Justice should undertake an immediate and detailed audit of all federal funds that may have been used to further the refusal of the other members of the Big Seven to compete with United and American in metropolitan Chicago—particularly the campaign by the airlines and Chicago to "Kill Peotone".

The United States Department of Transportation should withhold any further approvals of federal funds for expansion of the United and American duopoly at Fortress O'Hare.

The House and Senate Judiciary Committees should conduct immediate hearings on these issues.

Our Governor and our two United States Senators, the Speaker of the House, and our Illinois Attorney General should be respectfully asked what specific actions they will take to (1) break up the Fortress Hub system—particularly Fortress O'Hare; (2) bring new hub-and-spoke competitors into the Chicago market; (3) recover the billions in excess monopoly profits from the Fortress O'Hare overcharges; (4) prevent the Big Seven from continuing to refuse to use the new capacity provided by the South Suburban Airport; and (5) assemble the federal and state resources needed to rapidly build the South Suburban Airport.

Our Governor should hold fast to his promise not to permit any additional runways at O'Hare. To do otherwise would simply enhance and expand the monopoly power of Fortress O'Hare and doom the opportunity to bring in new competition into the region at the South Suburban Airport.

The two candidates for President of the United States—both of whom have likely received large campaign contributions from the Big Seven—should be respectfully asked what they will do to break up the Fortress Hub system nationally and Fortress O'Hare in particular. Vice President Gore in particular should be asked why his administration has for the past eight years looked the other way while the Big Seven has used violations of the nation's antitrust laws to literally steal billions of dollars from American consumers. Mr. Gore should also be asked to explain why his administration has blocked development of new competitive capacity in metro Chicago—i.e. a new South Suburban Airport—at every turn. Finally, Mr. Bush should be asked specifically what he will do to build the South Suburban Airport.

CONCLUSION

The monopoly abuses of the Fortress Hub system—and especially the abuses of Fortress O'Hare and the refusal of the Big Seven to compete in metropolitan Chicago—are a national disgrace. It's time to end it.

SUBURBAN O'HARE COMMISSION—EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

A study prepared by the Suburban O'Hare Commission concludes that the major airlines have committed per se violations of federal antitrust laws by refusing to compete with each other in Fortress Hub markets, such as in the metro Chicago region now dominated by "Fortress O'Hare".

The glaring example of these monopolistic practices are documented by the major airline's letter to former Illinois Gov. Jim Edgar which, in effect, said if the state builds a new airport in Chicago's southern suburbs, "we won't come."

That leaves United and American airlines, which control over 80 percent of the air traffic at O'Hare in an unchallenged market position. It would be as if Ford Motor Company told General Motors, "If you agree not to sell cars in Chicago, we will agree not to compete with you in Los Angeles."

SOC's major findings include:

The de facto agreement among the "Big Seven" airlines—Northwest, United, American, Delta, US Air, Continental and Trans World—not to compete in each others hub market is the heart of the monopoly problem.

The resulting fortress hub monopolies are costing American air travelers billions of dollars annually in monopoly induced higher fares, especially the fares charged to time-sensitive business travelers and "spoke" passenger who must connect through the hub to get to their ultimate destinations.

The Big Seven's geographic market allocation violates the nation's antitrust laws, based on clear and repeated Supreme Court decisions which have roundly condemned arrangements to carve up geographic markets horizontally.

In Chicago, the clear violation of the antitrust law is demonstrated by the abandonment by major airlines of meaningful competition to United and American at O'Hare and the announcement that they would not use a South Suburban Airport if built.

The airlines can't defend their anti-competitive practices with the "Noerr-Pennington" doctrine, which asserts that petitioning the government to help the industry engage in antitrust actions is protected under Free Speech guarantees. Case law doesn't protect anti-competitive practices that have evolved independent of any government authorization, as in the present case.

Nor can the airlines or Chicago defend themselves by the "state action" doctrine, which allows states, as a matter of federalism, to consciously participate in monopoly practices. For this defense to succeed, Supreme Court decisions require that the state must clearly endorse and supervise the monopoly practices. Here there has been no such approval of the Fortress Hub monopoly abuses by the State of Illinois.

Chicago and its officials are not immune from antitrust law liability for helping the major airlines avoid competing with the United/American cartel at O'Hare.

Federal taxpayer funds may have been used to suppress competition and violate antitrust laws in the Chicago market.

The Clinton administration has not only looked the other way in not bringing antitrust enforcement action to break up the Fortress Hub system, but has affirmatively assisted Chicago and United and American in blocking significant new competition from entering the region by blocking development of a new regional airport in metro Chicago.

The lifting of slot limitations will not allow significant competition to enter the Chicago market. Instead—as predicted by Senator Fitzgerald and Congressman Hyde—the lifting of the slots will be accompanied by massive increase in delays and by United and American simply expanding their monopoly control at the airport.

Construction of a new runway for "delay reduction" is simply subterfuge to expand the size of United and American's Fortress Hub operation at O'Hare. Building a new runway at O'Hare will make the monopoly problem—and resultant air fare overcharges—even worse. Moreover, it will doom the economic viability of the New South Suburban Airport.

Recommendations

Based on these findings, SOC recommends: Investigations by the U.S. Attorney General and U.S. Attorney for Northern Illinois into activities by the airlines, the city of Chicago, consultants and other third parties which have been used to protect and expand the Fortress Hub system nationally—and in particular to prevent new airport development in the metro Chicago region.

Civil action by the Attorney General and U.S. Attorney here to break up the Fortress Hub system and to compel the major airlines to stop their refusal to compete in metro Chicago.

Action by state attorneys general to recover treble damages for fliers who were charged billions of dollars in excess fares as a result of the Fortress Hub system.

A Government Accounting Office and Department of Justice audit of federal taxpayer funds to subsidies that abetted the antitrust violations, particularly efforts to kill the South Suburban Airport.

Governor Ryan should hold fast to his promise not to permit any additional runways at O'Hare. To allow additional runways would simply enhance and expand the monopoly power of Fortress O'Hare and doom the opportunity to bring in new competition into the region by the South Suburban Airport.

The withholding of U.S. Transportation Department of any more federal funds for expansion of the United and American duopoly at Fortress O'Hare.

An explanation and action by Illinois' highest elected officials as to what they will do to break up the Fortress O'Hare monopoly and provide for a new south suburban airport.

A clear statement by Republican and Democratic candidates for president to state their positions on Fortress Hubs, especially O'Hare and the role of the federal government in either breaking up Fortress O'Hare or building new capacity for new competition at the South Suburban Airport.

STUDY FINDS MAJOR AIRLINES AND CHICAGO VIOLATE FEDERAL ANTITRUST LAWS TO SUPPORT HIGH MONOPOLY FARES AND BLOCK NEW COMPETITION

BENSENVILLE, IL, May 21, 2000.—The nation's major airlines have committed serious violations of U.S. antitrust laws by refusing to compete with each other in "Fortress Hub" markets, including Chicago, a study by the Suburban O'Hare Commission concludes.

The study (entitled "If You Build It, We Won't Come: The Collective Refusal of the Major Airlines to Compete in the Chicago Air Travel Market") calls for an investigation by the Justice Department into the anti-competitive practices by the airlines, and also by the city of Chicago, its consultants and third party allies, which have been complicit in the antitrust violations. Based on the study, SOC officials also called for:

U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno to begin civil action to break up the hub monopolies.

State attorneys general to recover treble damages for fliers who have been billed billions of dollars in excessive fares made possible by the monopolistic practices. The U.S. Transportation Department to withhold any more federal funds for the expansion, and further strengthening, of the United and American airlines' cartel at O'Hare Airport in Chicago.

General Accounting Office and Department of Justice audits of funds that have been used to abet the antitrust violations, including the airlines' and Chicago Mayor Richard M. Daley's efforts to kill a proposed hub airport in Chicago's south suburbs.

Governor Ryan to hold to his firm commitment not to permit new runways at O'Hare since such runways would expand United's and American's Fortress Hub monopoly at O'Hare and would doom the economic justification for the new South Suburban Airport.

SOC is a government agency representing more than 1 million residents who live in communities surrounding O'Hare airport. The study alleges that the airlines, the city of Chicago, its consultants and allies have used millions of dollars of taxpayers' money to thwart a south suburban airport that would bring competition to the United and American airlines' cartel at O'Hare and to expand the Fortress Hub monopoly at O'Hare.

"The antitrust violations are as clear and as egregious as if Ford said to General Motors, 'We won't compete against you in Chicago, if you agree not to compete against us by selling cars in Los Angeles'" said John Geils, SOC chairman and mayor of Bensenville, which borders O'Hare Airport. "The major airlines even went so far as to write two governors of Illinois, in their infamous 'If you build it, we won't come' letters that they would not use a south suburban airport. This extraordinarily public flaunting of the nation's antitrust laws simply cannot be tolerated."

The heart of the antitrust violations, according to the study, is found in the de facto agreement among the big seven airlines—Northwest, United, American, Delta, US Air, Continental and Trans World—to not significantly compete in each others' hub markets. The resulting domination by these airlines of their "own" airports (such as Delta in Atlanta, TWA in St. Louis and Northwest in the Twin Cities), forces fliers, especially time-sensitive business travelers, billions of dollars in unwarranted and additional fares, government studies have shown.

"Taxpayers should be concerned that millions of dollars of federal money, raised in part through taxes on every passenger using O'Hare, among other airports, have gone towards financing costly public relations and political lobbying campaigns to support this restraint of trade," said Craig Johnson, vice president of SOC and mayor of Elk Grove Village. "At every turn, the recommendation of expert panels to relieve the pressure on O'Hare and the national aviation system by building an airport in Chicago's south suburbs has been stymied by this campaign. It begins with two airlines' insatiable desire to dominate the Chicago market and is abetted by other major airlines interested in protecting their own turf. And it is carried out by a compliant Chicago mayor who is dependent on the political spoils of a monopolistic O'Hare airport and those who share in those spoils—contractors, political consultants, big public relations firms, concessionaires and their friends in corporate board rooms and the media.”

Said Geils: “The antitrust movement 100 hundred years ago was aimed at breaking up precisely this sort of attack on the public and consumers. After a century, we don’t need new laws. What we need are responsible public officials who won’t look the other way, who will carry out the sworn duties of their office.”

The hub-and-spoke airline market was made possible by aviation deregulation two decades ago, which gave commercial carriers the right to compete where, when and at what price they wanted. But instead of the robust competition that deregulation was intended to spawn, it led to increasing concentrations of power of separate airlines at separate “Fortress Hub” airports. While the industry will argue that this leads to economies of scales that are passed along to some air travelers in the form of price savings, government and independent studies show that large numbers of travelers—especially time-sensitive business travelers—are actually paying billions more.

The costs, said Geils, are paid in more than just higher fares. “They come in the form of more air pollution, more noise and more safety hazards that the airlines are willing to impose on O’Hare area communities—simply to protect and expand the Fortress O’Hare monopoly. We now live in a bizarre world where the desire to protect and profit from illegal overcharges trump the protection of public health, safety and quality of life.”

GORE’S INTEREST HARDLY PUBLIC

At a recent Democratic fund-raiser hosted by Mayor Daley, Al Gore, the vice president and presumptive Democratic nominee, said: “The Department of Transportation has said at the present time it’s a bit premature to build a third airport . . . and I have agreed with that. What happens in the future depends on the best public interest. I know there is a strong public interest in making sure that the health of O’Hare remains very strong.”

Let’s look at Gore, O’Hare and the public interest.

First, is the “best public interest” served through local or national control of federal transportation policy? Gore came before the Congressional Black Caucus and said that “federalism” would be an important issue in the 2000 campaign. Since George W. Bush is openly a “states’ righter,” I assumed that the vice president was appealing to us for support by saying, as president, he would fight for federal policies that contributed to the public interest. Gore did that in the South Carolina flag issue, but in the case of Elian Gonzalez in Florida and a third airport in Chicago he, too, deferred to the locals.

Gore is right that the DOT has recommended against building a third airport now. However, Gore did not share the rationale for the DOT’s recommendation. Did he draw his conclusion after a thoughtful series of dispassionate, hard-nosed government studies? Or were 2000 political considerations uppermost? President Clinton has told some Chicagoans privately that, “Jesse Jr. may be right about the airport, but this is an election year.” However, at Daley’s request, the Clinton-Gore administration in 1997 took Peotone off the nation’s planning list, making it ineligible for federal funds. Thus, one is led to conclude that, in Chicago, local politics control federal aviation policy, rather than the public interest. O’Hare is the new patronage system in Chicago—which includes lucrative no-bid contracts, jobs and vendor access.

Is unbalanced growth in the public interest? Chicago eventually plans to spend at least $15 billion to gold-plate O’Hare (and Midway) and build additional runways at O’Hare. For considerably less money—$2.3 billion—one could build four runways and 140 gates and, more important, achieve balanced economic growth. A recent downtown business study said current plans will add $10 billion to the economy around O’Hare and 110,000 new jobs. Such a plan will meet Chicago’s transportation needs for the foreseeable future and “keep the health of O’Hare . . . very strong,” as Gore desires. But such a policy will kill Peotone and its potential 236,000 new jobs, and will lead to increased class and caste segregation in the Chicago metropolitan area—a community already well known for such patterns. Was that understanding part of Gore’s calculation of the “public interest” when he affirmed O’Hare and negated Peotone?

The top 11 businesses in the 2nd Congressional District, with nearly 600,000 residents, employ a mere 11,000 people—one job for every 60 people. By contrast, more than 100,000 people go to work in Elk Grove Village, a city of 36,000 people—three jobs for every person. The effect of Gore’s position on O’Hare will only add to this disparity. Apparently, Gore sees the option as either a “zero sum” game—if we build Peotone it will hurt O’Hare—or he is willing to accept the consequences of unbalanced growth that would make the southern part of Chicago and Cook County even poorer, blacker, more segregated and dependent on government and taxpayers. Is Gore claiming that such economic imbalance and racial segregation are in the public interest?

Are increased class and caste disparities in the political interests of Gore? Quite naturally, politicians representing areas of excess private jobs will want lower taxes and less government—the Republican agenda. My area, in desperation, will turn to the government as the lifeboat of last resort to keep it afloat at a subsistence level, even as crime soars, social needs rise, services fail and hardworking, middle-class taxpayers revolt against “welfare cheats and free-loaders.” With nowhere else to go, these African Americans and poor people who vote will turn to Democrats to save them. Thus, it will perpetuate a Democratic image as the party of big government and undermine Gore’s efforts to downsize and “reinvent” government.

Balanced economic growth better serves the entire region. In Gore’s own political interests, he should look anew at O’Hare and Peotone and make another assessment of what is truly in the public interest.

To: Senator Peter Fitzgerald, Congressman Henry Hyde, Congressman Jesse Jackson, Jr.

From: Joe Karaganis.

Re: Impact of the Lipinski/Oberstar Bill on Illinois Law and Unchecked Condemnation Powers for Chicago to Condemn Land in Other Communities.

Sandy Murdock asked me to give you some background legal analysis of the impact of the language in the Lipinski/Oberstar bill (see §3 of the bill) to create a federal law override (preemption) of the Illinois Aeronautics Act—specifically as that impact relates to expanding Chicago’s power to engage in widespread condemnation and demolition of residential and business properties in other municipalities outside Chicago’s boundaries.

As you know, on July 9, 2002 Judge Hollis Webster of the DuPage County Circuit Court entered a ruling declaring that Chicago had no authority under Illinois law to acquire property in other municipalities without complying first with §47 of the Illinois Aeronautics Act, 620 ILCS 5/47 which requires any municipality to first obtain a “certificate of approval” from the Illinois Department of Transportation before making any alteration or extension of an airport.

Prior to her ruling, Chicago had proposed to acquire and demolish over 500 homes in Bensenville before seeking a certificate of approval. In testimony at the July 9, injunction hearing before Judge Webster, the lead IDOT official in charge of the IDOT approval process (James Bildilli) testified:

1. Without judicial enforcement of the Illinois Aeronautics Act, Chicago could acquire and demolish all the homes and businesses proposed in Bensenville and Elk Grove (over 500 homes and dozens of businesses) and only after such acquisition and demolition, would IDOT some years later hold a hearing in which IDOT would hear evidence and consider whether the harm caused by the acquisition and demolition justified IDOT’s approval of the project. Essentially IDOT, in reaching its decision on the certificate of approval, would hear and consider evidence of the harm caused by the acquisition and demolition and consider this harm as a basis of its decision—but only after the harm (and destruction) had been inflicted.

2. Without judicial enforcement of the Illinois Aeronautics Act, Chicago could acquire by condemnation or otherwise all of Bensenville, Wood Dale, Elk Grove Village (thousands of homes and businesses) and any other municipality—without any need for a prior certificate of approval from IDOT under §47.

Thankfully, Judge Webster rejected Chicago and IDOT’s claims and applied and enforced the plain language of the statute—prohibiting Chicago from acquiring and demolishing homes and businesses in another municipality without first obtaining a certificate of approval from IDOT.

It is important for you to understand that the preemption approach of the Lipinski Bill (as well as Durbin’s) will not simply federally destroy key provisions of the Illinois Aeronautics Act (namely §§47, 48, and 38.01). The Lipinski legislation has the effect of destroying the entire framework that Illinois has created under the Illinois Constitution and Illinois Municipal Code for preventing abuses of the state law condemnation power by municipalities. Here is the Illinois constitutional and Illinois statutory framework as upheld and enforced by Judge Webster:

1. Under the Illinois Constitution, Chicago has only that condemnation authority to condemn lands in other municipalities for airport purposes that is expressly delegated to Chicago by the laws of the State of Illinois. Article VII, Section 7 of the Illinois Constitution. Under long standing Illinois law (“Dillon’s rule”) followed in almost all of the 50 states) any powers delegated to a municipality by the General Assembly under this constitutional provision are narrowly construed against assertions of authority by the municipality.

2. The Illinois General Assembly has delegated to Chicago the authority to condemn lands in other municipalities for airport purposes in the Illinois Municipal Code) (65 ILCS 5/11-102-4) but as an essential element of that authority to condemn has expressly mandated in the Illinois Municipal Code (65 ILCS 5/11-102-10) that this grant of authority to condemn must be in accordance with the requirements of the Illinois Aeronautics Act.

3. Acquisition of land by Chicago without complying with the Illinois Aeronautics Act is thus not only a violation of the Illinois Aeronautics Act, such failure constitutes an unlawful ultra vires action by Chicago in violation of the Illinois Constitution and the Illinois Municipal Code. Without compliance with the Illinois Aeronautics Act, Chicago has no authority under either Article VII, Section VII of the Illinois constitution and no authority under the Illinois Municipal Code to acquire land in other municipalities.

The Lipinski (and Durbin) legislation seeks to “preempt” and destroy the Illinois Aeronautics Act, but in doing so the Lipinski (and Durbin) legislation attempts to destroy and rewrite the framework created by the Illinois Constitution and the Illinois Municipal Code. Why not just abolish state constitutions and state statutory codes altogether and let Congress rewrite the state constitutions and state statutory codes of all 50 states?

Beyond the enormous legal implication of such action, the practical effect of the Lipinski (and Durbin) legislation is to do exactly what Judge Webster said Illinois law prohibits:

1. The Lipinski (and Durbin) legislation will “authorize” Chicago to condemn land in other municipalities even though no such authorization exists for Chicago to do so under the Illinois Constitution or Illinois Municipal Code.

2. The Lipinski (and Durbin) legislation will “authorize” Chicago to engage in unfettered condemnation authority with the ability to acquire and destroy thousands of homes and businesses in many other municipalities—all in violation of the limits on Chicago’s state constitutional and state Municipal Code authority imposed by the Illinois Constitution and Illinois General Assembly.

As Senator Fitzgerald has pointed out in his remarks in his recent colloquy with Senator Durbin, the Lipinski (and Durbin) legislation would give Chicago unfettered ability to condemn properties outside the City of Chicago. If applied in other states, it would “authorize” one municipality (whichever municipality Congress chose) to disregard the limits on that municipality’s delegated powers created by that state’s constitution and state statutory code) and to condemn land in any other municipality in that state—in total federal preemption of that state’s constitution and municipal code.

As we have said before, such radical action is a blatant violation of the federalism/Tenth Amendment Structure of the federal Constitution. But even if Congress did have such power, should Congress be overriding state constitutions and municipal codes to give federal “authorization” to one municipality in a state to run roughshod over other municipalities in that state in violation of the state constitution and municipal statutory code?

Postscript: There is another aspect of the Lipinski preemption which may be of interest. The Lipinski bill proposes to preempt §38.01 of the Illinois Aeronautics Act, 620 ILCS 5/38.01. This section requires Chicago to obtain IDOT approval for any grant of federal funding to be used on airport projects which the Illinois General Assembly has authorized Chicago to construct. This is an important financial oversight tool (created by the Illinois General Assembly as a condition of a grant of authority to build airports) which allows the State of Illinois to engage in financial oversight of airport actions by Chicago. Given the widespread abuses in contract awards that have been documented at O’Hare, the Lipinski (and Durbin) legislation will literally “open the chicken coop” to widespread potential for corruption.

Hon. DON YOUNG,
*Chairman, Transportation and Infrastructure Committee,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR CONGRESSMAN YOUNG: I am writing to you about the grave concerns I have with H.R. 2107, The End Gridlock at Our Nation’s Critical Airports Act of 2001. I share the concerns of Congressmen Henry Hyde, Jerry Weller and Philip Crane, who have sent a virtually identical letter to you under separate cover. I agree that in H.R. 2107—the attempt to rebuild and expand O’Hare Airport—Congress is inappropriately violating the Tenth Amendment.

In other contexts—specifically with regard to certain human rights—I believe that the Tenth Amendment serves to place limitations on the federal government with which I disagree. Indeed, in the area of human rights, I believe new amendments must be added to the Constitution to overcome the limitations of the Tenth Amendment. However, building airports is not a human right. Therefore, in the present context, I agree that building airports is appropriately within the purview of the states.

I believe attempts by Congress to strip the authority of Governor Ryan and the Illinois Legislature over the delegation and authorization to Chicago of state power to build airports—along with the authority of governors and state legislatures in a host of other states such as Massachusetts (Logan), New York (LaGuardia and JFK), New Jersey (Newark) California (San Francisco airport), and the State of Washington (Seattle)—raise serious constitutional questions.

Under the framework of federalism established by the federal constitution, Congress is without power to dictate to the states how the states delegate power—or limit the delegation of that power—to their political subdivisions. Unless and until Congress decides that the federal government should build airports, airports will continue to be built by states or their delegated agents (state political subdivisions or other agents of state power) as an exercise of state law and state power. Further compliance by the political subdivision of the oversight conditions imposed by the State legislature as a condition of delegating the state law authority to build airports is an essential element of that delegation of state power. If Congress strips away a key element of that state law delegation, it is highly unlikely that the political subdivision would continue to have the power to build airports under state law. The political subdivision’s attempts to build runways would likely be ultra vires (without authority) under state law.

Under the Tenth Amendment and the framework of federalism built into the Constitution, Congress cannot command the States to affirmatively undertake an activity. Nor can Congress intrude upon or dictate to the states, the prerogatives of the states as to how to allocate and exercise state power—either directly by the state or by delegation of state authority to its political subdivisions.

As stated by the United States Supreme Court.

[T]he Framers explicitly chose a Constitution that confers upon Congress the power to regulate individuals, not States. . . . We have always understood that even where Congress has the authority under the Constitution to pass laws requiring or prohibiting certain acts, it lacks the power directly to compel the States to require or prohibit those Acts. New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144, at 166 (1992) (emphasis added)

It is incontestable that the Constitution established a system of “dual sovereignty.” Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898, 918 (1997) (emphasis added)

Residual state sovereignty was also implicit, of course, in the Constitution’s conferral upon Congress of not all governmental powers, but only discrete, enumerated ones, Art. I, Sec. 8, which implication was rendered express by the Tenth Amendment’s assertion that “[t]he powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.”

This separation of the two spheres is one of the Constitution’s structural protections of liberty. “Just as the separation and independence of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government serve to prevent the accumulation of excessive power in any one branch, a healthy balance of power between the States and the Federal Government will reduce the risk of tyranny and abuse from either front. Id at 921 quoting Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452 at 458 (1991)

The Supreme Court in Printz went on to emphasize that this constitutional structural barrier to the Congress intruding on the State’s sovereignty could not be avoided by claiming either a) that the congressional authority was pursuant to the Commerce Power and the “necessary and proper clause of the Constitution or b) that the federal law “preempted” state law under the Supremacy Clause. 521 U.S. at 923-924.

It is important to note that Congress can regulate—but not affirmatively command—the states when the state decides to engage in interstate commerce. See Reno v. Condon, 528 U.S. 141 (2000). Thus in Reno, the Court upheld an act of Congress that restricted the ability of the state to distribute personal drivers’ license information. But Reno did not involve an affirmative command of Congress to a state to affirmatively undertake an activity desired by Congress. Nor did Reno involve (as proposed here) an intrusion by the federal government into the delegation of state power by a state legislature—and the state legislature’s express limits on that delegation of state power—to a state political subdivision.

H.R. 2107 would involve a federal law which would prohibit a state from restricting or limiting the delegated exercise of state power by a state’s political subdivision. In this case, the proposed federal law would seek to bar the Illinois Legislature from deciding the allocation of the state’s power to build an airport or runways—and especially the limits and conditions imposed by the State of Illinois on the delegation of that power to Chicago. The law is clear that Congress has no power to intrude upon or interfere with a state’s decision as to how to allocate state power.

A state's authority to create, modify, or even eliminate the structure and powers of the state's political subdivisions—whether that subdivision be Chicago, Bensenville, or Elmhurst—is a matter left by our system of federalism and our federal Constitution to the exclusive authority of the states. As stated by the Seventh Circuit in Commissioners of Highways v. United States, 653 F.2d 292 (7th Cir. 1981) (quoting Hunter v. City of Pittsburgh, 207 U.S. 161, 178 (1907)):

Municipal corporations are political subdivisions of the State, created as convenient agencies for exercising such of the governmental powers of the State as may be entrusted to them. For the purpose of executing these powers properly and efficiently they usually are given the power to acquire, hold, and manage personnel and real property. The number, nature and duration of the powers conferred upon these corporations and the territory over which they shall be exercised rests in the absolute discretion of the State. . . . The State, therefore, at its pleasure may modify or withdraw all such powers, may take without compensation such property, hold it itself, or vest it in other agencies, expand or contract the territorial area, unite the whole or a part of it with another municipality, repeal the charter and destroy the corporation. All this may be done, conditionally or unconditionally, with or without the consent of the citizens, or even against their protest. In all these respects the State is supreme, and its legislative body, conforming its action to the state constitution, may do as it will, unrestrained by any provision of the Constitution of the United States. Commissioners of Highways, 653 F.2d at 297

Chicago has acknowledged that Illinois has delegated its power to build and operate airports to its political subdivisions by express statutory delegation. 65 ILCS 5/11-102-1, 11-102-2 and 11-102-5. These state law delegations of the power to build airports and runways are subject to the Illinois Aeronautics Act requirements—including the requirement that the State approve any alterations of the airport—by their express terms. Any attempt by Congress to remove a condition or limitation imposed by the Illinois Legislature on the terms of that state law delegation of authority would likely destroy the delegation of state authority to build airports by the Illinois Legislature to Chicago—leaving Chicago without delegated state legislative authority to build runways and terminals at O'Hare or Midway. The requirement that Chicago receive a state permit is an express condition of the grant of state authority and an attempt by Congress to remove that condition or limitation would mean that there was no continuing valid state delegation of authority to Chicago to build airports. Chicago's attempts to build new runways would be ultra vires under state law as being without the required state legislative authority.

Very truly yours,

JESSE L. JACKSON, JR.
Member of Congress.

STATEMENT OF U.S. REPRESENTATIVE JESSE L. JACKSON, JR. BEFORE THE U.S. SENATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE—THURSDAY, MARCH 21ST, 2002, WASHINGTON, DC

I want to commend and thank Members of the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation for this opportunity to again discuss the future of Chicago's airports. As you know, I sent a letter to each of you stating my opposition to this bill. Many Members responded favorably, and for that I thank them. Today, my position has not changed.

As you know, my commitment to resolving Chicago's aviation capacity crisis predates my days in Congress. I ran on this issue in my first campaign. I won on this issue. It remains my first priority. It was the subject of my first speech in Congress. And it was the topic of my first debate in Washington.

I am elated that this issue—my issue—is now before the Congress. And while I thank Members of the Senate for their interest in trying to resolve this regional and national crisis, I must say that HR 3479 as amended falls woefully short of providing an adequate, equitable solution.

Please know that I do not oppose fixing O'Hare's problems. But I have many, many grave concerns about this specific expansion plan. Concerns about cost. About safety. About environment impact. About federal precedence. And about constitutionality.

Clearly this bill sets dangerous precedence by stating that Congress—not the FAA, not Departments of Transportation, not aviation experts—but Congress shall plan and build airports. Further, it ignores the 10th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. It guts and/or undermines state laws and environmental protections. And it sidesteps the checks-and-balances and the public hearing process.

My focus today is the same as it's always been. Finding the best fix. And that best fix is the construction of a third Chicago airport near Peotone, Illinois. The plain truth is Peotone could be built in one-third the time at one-third the cost. For taxpayers and travelers, it's a no-brainer.

Unfortunately, this bill mandates expansion of O'Hare yet pays mere lip service to Peotone. It puts the projects on two separate and unequal tracks. That is my opinion. That is also the opinion of the Congressional Research Service, whose analysis I will provide to you.

FEDERAL STUDY CONFIRMS AIRPORT DEAL SHORTCHANGES PEOTONE

An analysis released today by the independent, non-partisan research arm of Congress confirmed what Peotone proponents have said all along: The Ryan-Daley airport agreement puts O'Hare on the fast track and just pays lip service to Peotone.

An analysis released today by the Congressional Research Service concludes that the proposed National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act puts the two projects on separate and unequal tracks.

The CRS analysis states that the Federal Government "shall construct the runway redesign plan" at O'Hare but would merely "review" and give "consideration" to the Peotone Airport project.

In reaction to the release of today's report, Congressman Jackson reiterated his opposition to the measure. "This study unmasks the bare truth about the agreement between the Mayor and the Governor. For those claiming that the deal is good for the Third Airport, it's not. The masquerade ball is over," Jackson said.

"Peotone has been stuck in the paralysis of analysis for 15 years. We don't need any more reviews. We need a Third Airport," Jackson said. "Peotone can be built faster, cheaper, safer, and cleaner than expanding O'Hare, and presents a more secure and more permanent solution to Illinois' aviation crisis. This is shortsighted legislation and a bad deal for the public."

The CRS report states that the Lipinski-Durbin bill "specifically states that the (FAA) Administrator 'shall construct' the runway redesign plan; however, there is no parallel language regarding the construction of the south suburban airport."

CRS concludes that the bill "provides for the Administrator's review of the Peotone Airport project (and) provides for the expansion of O'Hare. The provisions appear to operate independently of each other and are not drafted in parallel language, and provide different directions to the Administrator."

CONGRESSIONAL RESEARCH SERVICE MEMORANDUM—FEBRUARY 6, 2002

To: Hon. Jesse L. Jackson, Jr., Attention: George Seymour
From: Douglas Reid Weimer, Legislative Attorney, American Law Division
Subject: Examination of Certain Provisions of H.R. 3479: National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act

BACKGROUND

This memorandum summarizes various telephone discussions between George Seymour and Rick Bryant of your staff, and Douglas Weimer of the American Law Division. Your staff has expressed interest in certain provisions of H.R. 3470, the proposed National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act ("bill"). These provisions are examined and analyzed in the following memorandum.

The bill contains various provisions relating to the expansion of aviation capacity in the Chicago area. Among the provisions contained in the bill are provisions relating to O'Hare International Airport ("O'Hare"), Meigs Field, a proposed new carrier airport located near Peotone, Illinois ("Peotone"), and other projects. Your office has expressed repeated concern that the news media and various commentators have reported that the bill would apparently implement the various projects in a similar manner and that similar legislative language is used to implement the various projects. The news articles that you have cited concerning the bill tend to report the various elements of the bill without distinguishing the bill language and the differences as to the means in which the various projects may be implemented.

The chief purpose of the bill is to expand aviation capacity in the Chicago area, through a variety of means. Section 3 of the bill deals with airport redesign and other issues. Your staff has focused upon the interpretation and the bill language of two particular subsections—(e) and (f)—of Section 3, which are considered below.

"(e) SOUTH SUBURBAN AIRPORT FEDERAL FUNDING.—The Administrator shall give priority consideration to a letter of intent application submitted by the State of Illinois or a political subdivision thereof for the construction of the south suburban airport. The Administrator shall consider the letter not later than 90 days after the Administrator issues final approval of the airport layout plan for the south suburban airport." If enacted, this bill language would relate to the federal funding for the proposed airport to be constructed at Peotone. The "Administrator" refers to the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration. The Administrator is directed to give priority consideration to a letter of intent application ("application") submitted by Illinois, or a political subdivision for the construction of the "south suburban airport" the proposed airport at Peotone.

The Administrator is given specific directions concerning the application and for the time consideration of the application. Concern has been expressed that the Administrator is given certain duties and directions, but that there is no specific language to ensure and/or to compel that the Administrator will comply with the Congressional mandate, if the Administrator does not choose to follow the Congressional direction. Congress possesses inherent authority to oversee the project, as well as the Administrator's compliance with the statutory requirements, by way of its oversight and appropriations functions. Congress and congressional committees have virtually plenary authority to elicit information which is necessary to carry out their legislative functions from executive agencies, private persons, and organizations. Various decisions of the Supreme Court have established that the oversight and investigatory power of Congress is an inherent part of the legislative function and is implied from the general vesting of the legislative power of Congress. Thus, courts have held that Congress' constitutional authority to enact legislation and appropriate money inherently vests it with power to engage in continuous oversight. The Supreme Court has described the scope of this power of inquiry as to be "as penetrating and far-reaching as the potential power to enact and appropriate under the Constitution."

Specific interest is focused on the language "shall consider" used in the second sentence of the subsection. In the context of this subsection, it should not necessarily be considered to mean the implementation of an accelerated approval/construction process for the airport. While these events may occur, such a course of action is not specifically provided by the legislation.

Your staff has also focused on subsection (f), dealing with the proposed federal construction at O'Hare. The bill provides:

"(f) FEDERAL CONSTRUCTION.—

(1) On July 1, 2004, or as soon as practicable thereafter, the Administrator shall construct the runway redesign plan as a Federal project, if—

(A) the Administrator finds, after notice and opportunity for public comment, that a continuous course of construction of the runway design plan has not commenced and is not reasonably expected to commence by December 2, 2004;

(B) Chicago agrees in writing to construction of the runway redesign plan as a Federal project without cost to the United States, except such funds as may be authorized under chapter 471 of title 49, United States Code, under authority of paragraph (4);

(C) Chicago enters into an agreement, acceptable to the Administrator, to protect the interests of the United States Government with respect to the construction, operation, and maintenance of the runway redesign plan;

(D) the agreement with Chicago, at a minimum provides for Chicago to take over ownership and operations control of each element of the runway redesign plan upon completion of construction of such element by the Administrator;

(E) Chicago provides, without cost to the United States Government (except such funds as may be authorized under chapter 471 of title 49, United States Code, under the authority of paragraph (4)), land easements, rights-of-way, rights of entry, and other interests in land or property necessary to permit construction of the runway redesign plan as a Federal project and to protect the interests of the United States Government in its construction, operation, maintenance, and use; and paid from sources normally used for airport development projects of similar kind and scope.

(2) The Administrator may make an agreement with the City of Chicago under which Chicago will provide the work described in paragraph (1), for the benefit of the Administrator.

(3) The Administrator is authorized and directed to acquire in the name of the United States all land, easements, rights-of-way, rights of entry, or other interests in land or property necessary for the runway redesign plan under this section, subject to such terms and conditions as the Administrator deems necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

(4) Chicago shall be deemed the owner and operator of each element of the runway reconfiguration plan under section 40117 and chapter 471 of title 49, United States Code, notwithstanding any other provision of this section or any of the provisions in such title referred to in this subsection."

The Administrator is directed to construct the O'Hare runway plan as a Federal project if certain conditions are met: (1) construction of the runway design plan has not begun and is not expected to begin by December 1, 2004; (2) Chicago agrees to the runway plan as a Federal project without cost to the United States, with certain exceptions; (3) Chicago enters into an agreement to protect Federal Government interests concerning construction, operation, and maintenance of the runway project; (4) the agreement provides that Chicago take over the ownership and operation control of each element of the runway design plan upon its completion; (5) Chicago provides, without cost, the land, easements, right-of-way, rights of entry, and other interests in land/property as are required to allow the construction of the runway plan as a Federal project and to protect the interests of the Federal Government in its construction, operation, maintenance, and use; and (6) the Administrator is satisfied that the redesign plan costs will be paid from the usual sources used for airport development projects of similar kind and scope.

Paragraph 2 provides that the Administrator "may" make an agreement with Chicago, whereby Chicago will provide the work described above in paragraph (1) for the benefit of the Administrator. It should be noted that the use of the word "may" would appear to make this language optional, and would not necessarily require the Administrator to enter into such agreement with Chicago.

Paragraph 3 authorizes and directs the Administrator to acquire in the name of the Federal Government those property interests needed for the redesign plan, subject to the terms and conditions that the Administrator feels are necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

Paragraph 4 provides that Chicago will be deemed to be the owner and operator of each element of the runway reconfiguration plan, notwithstanding any other provision of this section.

Discussion has focused on the different legislative language used in subsection (e) and (f). Subsection (f) specifically states that the Administrator "shall construct" the runway redesign plan; however, there is no parallel language regarding the construction of the south suburban airport in subsection (e). The provisions of the subsections appear to be independent of each other and provide very different directions to the Administrator. Hence, it may be interpreted that subsection (f) would authorize runway construction (if certain conditions are met), and subsection (e) is concerned primarily with the review and the consideration of an airport construction plan.

It is possible that the Administrator's actions concerning the implementation of this legislation, if enacted, may be subject to judicial review. Judicial review of agency activity or inactivity provides control over administrative behavior. Judicial review of agency action/inaction may provide appropriate relief for a party who is injured by the agency's action/inaction. The Administrative Procedure Act ("APA") provides general guidelines for determining the proper court in which to seek relief. Some statutes provide specific review proceedings for agency actions. Subsection (h) of the bill provides for judicial review of an order issued by the Administrator. The bill provides that the bill may be reviewed pursuant to the provisions contained at 49 U.S.C. §46110.

If the Administrator does not issue an order and judicial review is not possible under this provision, then it is possible that "nonstatutory review" may occur. When Congress has not created a special statutory procedure for judicial review, an injured party may seek "nonstatutory review." This review is based upon some statutory grant of subject matter jurisdiction. Therefore, a party who wants to invoke nonstatutory review will look to the general grants of original jurisdiction that apply to the federal courts. It is possible that an available basis for jurisdiction in this case—if the Administrator does not carry out his/her Congressional mandate—may be under the general federal question jurisdiction statute which authorizes the federal district courts to entertain any case "arising under" the Constitution or the laws of the United States. An action for relief under this provision is usually the most direct way to obtain nonstatutory review of an agency action. Hence, it is possible that an action could be brought under this statute to compel the Administrator to comply with the provisions contained in the bill.

CONCLUSION

This memo has summarized staff discussion concerning certain provisions contained in the proposed National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act. Subsection (e) provides for the Administrator's review of the Peotone Airport project. Subsection (f) provides for the expansion of O'Hare. The provisions appear to operate independently of each other, are not drafted in parallel language, and provide different directions to the Administrator. The Administrator is given certain responsibilities under both subsections. Congress possesses plenary oversight authority over federally funded projects. This would provide oversight Administrator is given certain responsibilities under both subsections. Congress possesses plenary oversight authority over federally funded projects. This would provide oversight over the Administrator and his/her actions. A judicial proceeding may be possible against the Administrator to compel the Administrator to fulfill the statutory responsibilities provided by the bill.

STATEMENT OF U.S. REPRESENTATIVE JESSE L. JACKSON JR. BEFORE THE U.S. HOUSE AVIATION SUBCOMMITTEE—WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 1ST, 2001, WASHINGTON, DC

I want to thank Members of the House Aviation Subcommittee for this opportunity to discuss Chicago's aviation future. As you may know, I ran on this issue in 1995, and have supported expanding aviation capacity by building a third regional airport in Peotone, Illinois.

Let me begin with a personal anecdote that, from my perspective, illustrates why we're here. I won my first term in a special election and on December 14th, 1995 took the Oath of Office. Congressman Lipinski, my good friend and fellow Chicagoan whose district borders mine, was present and his was the seventh or eighth hand I shook as a new Member. He told me then: "Young man, I want you to know that I can be very helpful to you during your stay in Congress, but you're never going to get that new airport you spoke about during your campaign."

Since then, Congressman Lipinski has been helpful and we've worked together on many important issues. But, he's also made good on his word to block a third airport.

It is this rigid stance by many Chicago officials that's allowed a local problem to escalate into a national crisis. Once the nation's best and busiest crossroads, O'Hare is now its worst choke point—overpriced, overburdened and overwhelmed.

And to think it was avoidable. This debate dates back to 1984 when the Federal Aviation Administration determined that Chicago was quickly running out of capacity. The FAA directed Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin to conduct a feasibility study for a new airport. The exhaustive study of numerous sites concluded almost 10 years ago that gridlock could be best avoided by building a south suburban airport. The State of Illinois then drafted detailed plans for an airport near Peotone.

Unfortunately, despite the FAA's dire warning and the State's best efforts, I watched in amazement as the City of Chicago went to extremes to thwart and delay any new capacity.

In the late 1980s, Mayor Daley mocked the idea of a third airport. By 1990, the City did an about-face and proposed building a third airport within the City. The City even initiated federal legislation creating the Passenger Facility Charge (PFC) to pay for it. But two years later the City reversed itself again and abandoned the plan, yet continued to collect $90 million a year in PFCs. This summer, the City told the Illinois Legislature that O'Hare needed no new capacity until the year 2012, then, in yet another reversal, three weeks ago declared O'Hare needed six new runways.

As the City was spending hundreds of millions of dollars on consultants to tell us that the City didn't, did, didn't, did need new capacity, it continued to be consistent on the one thing—fighting to kill the third airport.

Sadly, that opposition was never based on substantive issues—regional capacity, public safety or air travel efficiency. Instead it was rooted in protecting patronage, inside deals and the status quo. In fact, earlier this year the Chicago Tribune won a Pulitzer Prize for documenting the "stench at O'Hare."

Still, for eight years, City Hall leveraged the Clinton FAA to stall Peotone. The FAA, ignoring its own warnings of approaching gridlock, conspired with the city to:

(1) Mandate "regional consensus," thus requiring Chicago mayoral approval for any new regional airport;

(2) Remove Peotone from the NPIAS list in 1997, after it emerged as the frontrunner. Peotone had been on the NPIAS for 12 years;

(3) Hold up the Peotone environmental review from 1997 to 2000.

In short, the same parties who created this aviation mess are now saying "trust us to clean it up" with H.R. 2107. But their hands are too dirty and their interests are too narrow. Proponents of this legislation claim to be taking the high road. But this is a dead end.

Fortunately, there is a better alternative. Compared to O'Hare expansion, Peotone could be built in one-third the time at one-third the cost—both important facts given that the crisis is imminent and that the public will ultimately pay for any fix.

Site selection aside, however, there is yet another, even bigger problem with H.R. 2107. It is the United States Constitution.

H.R. 2107 strips Illinois Governor George Ryan of legitimate state power in an apparent violation of the "reserved powers" clause of the 10th Amendment.

Under the 10th Amendment, Congress cannot command Illinois to affirmatively undertake an activity, nor can it intrude upon Illinois' prerogative to exercise or delegate its power. As stated by the United States Supreme Court: "[T]he Framers explicitly chose a Constitution that confers upon Congress the power to regulate individuals, not States . . . We have always understood that even where Congress has the authority under the Constitution to pass laws requiring or prohibiting certain acts, it lacks the power directly to compel the States to require or prohibit those acts." [New York v. United States, 1992]

Supporters have cited the Commerce Clause in defending this legislation. But the Supreme Court in Printz v. United States specifically emphasized the 10th Amendment barrier to Congress intruding on a state's sovereignty by saying that it could not be avoided by claiming either, one, that congressional authority was pursuant to the Commerce Power, or, two, that federal law "preempted" state law under the Supremacy Clause.

Chicago has acknowledged Illinois' authority to build and operate airports by express statutory delegation through the Illinois Aeronautics Act, including the requirement that the State approve any airport alterations. Under the 10th Amendment, if Congress strips away a key element of the Illinois law, Chicago's attempt to build runways would likely be ultra vires (without authority) under Illinois law.

Moreover, H.R. 2107 converts the concept of dual sovereignty into tri-sovereignty, by going beyond states' rights to city rights. It gives Mayor Daley (and the other local officials in charge of the 68 largest airports in the country) a greater say over national aviation policy than the federal government or the fifty governors.

Indeed, H.R. 2107 sets federalism on its head. It makes about as much sense as putting the local police department in charge of national defense.

Such legislation won't improve aviation services. In fact, it increases the likelihood for a constitutional challenge that will further prolong this crisis.

So, from a practical standpoint, I urge the subcommittee to reject this measure, to reject cramming more planes into one of the nation's most overcrowded airports, to reject turning O'Hare into the world's largest construction site for the next 20 years, and to reject sticking the taxpayers with an outrageous bill.

I strongly urge the committee to reject this unprecedented, unwise and unconstitutional attack against our fifty states and our Founding Fathers. Thank you.

Chicago—A plan for relieving the Chicago aviation bottleneck was unveiled today that costs less, is more efficient, less destructive and can be realized quicker than a "compromise" plan that Chicago Mayor Richard M. Daley and Illinois Gov. George Ryan are trying to rush through Congress.

The plan was crafted by the Suburban O'Hare Commission, a council of governments representing a million residents living around O'Hare Airport.

The plan includes runway, terminal and other improvements at O'Hare International Airport, to make it more efficient, competitive and convenient. The plan also includes alternatives to the costly and destructive "western access" proposed in the Daley-Ryan plan. The centerpiece of the plan remains, as it has for well over a decade, a major hub airport in the south suburbs that had been urged by experts and government officials from three states, and would be operational now if not for obstruction from Chicago Mayor Richard M. Daley. The plan provides for many more flights to the region, and, consequently, many more jobs.

"We always have been in favor of a strong O'Hare Airport because of its importance to our communities and to the regional economy," said John Geils, SOC Chairman and president of the Village of Bensenville. "This will come as a surprise only to those who have been taken in by the rhetoric of our opponents, who maliciously tried to portray us as anti-O'Hare zealots, willing to damage or even destroy O'Hare. Our plan will expand the region's aviation and economic growth; the Daley-Ryan plan will stifle that growth."

"The claimed benefits—including delay reductions, job increases, improved safety, greater competition and less noise—of the Daley-Ryan O'Hare expansion plan are untrue. We have a plan that is better for the entire region, and not just for Chicago City Hall and its big business friends," Geils said.

Among the improvements are a realistically modernized O'Hare, instead of the impossible attempt by Daley and Ryan to stuff ten pounds of potatoes into a five-pound sack. Terminals would be updated, with an eye to matching them with capacity and making them more user friendly. Selected runways would be widened to accommodate the large new jets, such as the A380X, thus increasing the number of passengers the airport can serve, without increasing air traffic. Western access and a bypass route would be built on airport property, skirting O'Hare to the south—as originally planned, thus avoiding the destruction of uncounted homes and businesses, as under the Daley-Ryan plan.

The SOC Solution also would increase competition at O'Hare, through terminal and other facilities improvements so that air travelers using the competition are not treated as second-class customers. Funding of O'Hare improvements would be disconnected from a complicated bonding scheme that allows United and American airlines to become more entrenched and to continue to charge anti-competitive fares. In addition, some of the lucrative gambling revenues, now going to enrich political insiders, would be used for a competitive makeover of O'Hare.

SOC's plan also would provide better safety and environmental protections. Every home impacted by noise at O'Hare and Midway would be soundproofed, instead of a select few as provided under the current, flawed standards adopted by Chicago. O'Hare neighbors would be spared the concentration of air pollution brought by a doubling of flights at what is already the state's largest single air polluter. Under the Daley-Ryan plan, O'Hare neighbors would find themselves in federally required crash zones at the end of runways, forcing them to either give up their homes or live in devalued property in great risk. Because most of the region’s air traffic growth would use the South Suburban airport where pollution and safety buffers are required under current federal standards, fewer total people in the region would be subjected to health and safety risks.

Key to the SOC Solution is the construction of a truly regional hub airport in the South Suburbs, rather than an inadequate “reliever” airport as envisioned under the Daley-Ryan plan. Just as New York City and

Washington, D.C. have more than one hub airport, a true regional airport in the South Suburbs would give Chicago the kind of potential it needs with three hub airports (O’Hare, Midway and Peotone) to maintain its aviation dominance for decades. Despite the long-made assertions by entrenched interests, such as United and American airlines, that the Chicago area didn’t need a second hub airport, Midway already is developing into a hub simply because of market forces. With Midway reaching capacity in just a few years, and O’Hare already at ca-capacity, the sounds of “no one will come to Peotone” no longer are heard.

Finally, the SOC Solution will protect taxpayers by creating an oversight board of improvements at all airports, including the south suburban airport and Midway.

COMPARISONS OF THE DALEY-RYAN PLAN AND THE SOC SOLUTION

	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan	SOC Plan
Provides Immediate Solution to the Delay Problem at O'Hare?	No—runways will not be built for years and by the time they are built, delays will increase with increased traffic growth.	Yes—delays addressed immediately by FAA recommended demand management techniques such as proposed for LaGuardia.
Which Plan Provides Greatest Capacity Growth for Region?	Max increase of 700,000 operations; likely much less	1,600,000 operations capacity at South Suburban Airport—far more than Daley-Ryan plan.
Which Plan Produces Greatest Opportunity for New Competition and Lower Fares?	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan solidifies and expands United-American monopoly dominance—hundreds of millions in losses to Chicago travelers each year.	Wide open opportunity for major competition—both at O'Hare and at South Suburban Airport.
Which Plan Provides Greater Job Growth?	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan job growth of 195,000 jobs dependent on 700,000 new operations capacity at O'Hare—real capacity unlikely and far less jobs.	Suburban O'Hare Commission plan provides 1.6 million new operations capacity in addition to O'Hare—far more jobs than Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan.
Which Plan Makes Peotone A Reality?	No provision in Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan to actually fund and build Peotone—an exercise in political rhetoric with little likelihood of success.	SOC plan borrows from idea by Senator Patrick O'Malley to use huge excess gambling income now going to political insiders to fund Peotone construction.
Which Plan Produces Less Toxic Air Pollution Impact on Surrounding communities?	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan makes toxic emissions at O'Hare much worse—900,000 flights to 1, 600,000—no environmental buffer.	Huge non-residential land buffer at Peotone protects public health and prevents residential exposures.
Which Plan Produces Less Noise Impact on Surrounding communities?	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan makes aircraft noise at O'Hare much worse—900,000 flights to 1, 600,000—no environmental buffer.	Huge non-residential land buffer at Peotone protects against residential noise exposure.
Which Plan is Safer?	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan reduces safety margins at O'Hare—more congested airspace, less safety on runways and taxiways, occupied runway crash zones.	SOC plan much safer because South Suburban Airport site can address runway safety concerns much easier than O'Hare because much more land available.
Which Plan Provides Justice and Equity for the South Side and South Suburbs?	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan guarantees exactly what Daley wants—an empty cornfield at Peotone.	SOC plan insures construction of major new airport with adequate funding.
Which Plan Preserves State Law protections?	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan destroys state law protections for public, health, the environment, the consumer.	SOC plan preserves and protects state law safeguards for our environment, public health and the consumer.
Which Plan Provides Greatest Economic Benefits Over Costs?	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan has huge costs that likely far exceed the economic benefits. (which are far less than claimed).	SOC plan provides much greater regional capacity, eliminates the delay problem in the short and long term, and can be built far faster, with far less cost. Also provides much greater potential for new competition and lower fares. A much greater economic bang for far less bucks.

THE DALEY-RYAN PLAN'S ALLEGED BENEFITS AND THE REALITY

Daley-Ryan O'Hare Plan Claims	Reality
Delay Reduction Untrue. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan claims it reduces bad weather delays by 95% and overall delay by 79%.	Total bad weather and good weather delays will increase dramatically under Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan.
Delay Savings Untrue. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan claims it will produce delay savings of $370 million annually and passenger delay savings of $380 million annually.	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan will increase total delay costs by hundreds of millions of dollars annually.
Cost Claims Untrue. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan says cost is: $6.6 billion	Real Costs—$15 billion to $20 billion.
Capacity Claims Untrue. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan claims it will meet aviation needs of Region	Real Capacity of Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan:
Increase O'Hare passenger “enplanements” (boarding passengers) from current 34 million to 76 million	Falls far short of 76 million passenger capacity and far short of capacity of 1,600,000 operations.
Increase O'Hare operational capacity from 900,000 to 1,600,000 operations	Leaves region with huge capacity gap for both passengers and aircraft operations.
Peotone Claim untrue. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan says they will build Peotone	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan destroys economic rationale and funding for Peotone:
	If Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan meets its capacity claims, no economic justification for Peotone—not needed.
	If Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan falls short of capacity, $15 billion to $20 billion spent at O'Hare will exhaust federal and state funding resources.
Jobs Claims untrue. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan says it will create 195,000 jobs	Actual jobs fall far short of the 195,000 jobs claimed because of enormous capacity shortfall; much greater job growth under SOC alternative.
Financial Claims Untrue. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan says there is plenty of federal and airlines money to expand O'Hare and pay $15 billion to $20 billion cost.	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan will bankrupt federal airport aid trust fund and United and American cannot afford billions in bonds.
Hiding the Data and Information. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan claims based on slick Power Point Slides—no backup information provided.	Daley and Ryan O'Hare plan stonewall on documents and data backing up their claims—refuse to produce documents in Freedom of Information requests.
Monopoly Overcharge Problem. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan makes no mention of monopoly overcharge problem at O'Hare—costing Chicago based travelers hundreds of millions of dollars per year. As Governor-Elect George Ryan said, monopoly overcharges at O'Hare gouged travelers over $600 million per year.	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan will expand and strengthen the monopoly hold United and American have on Chicago market—costing Chicago business travelers hundreds of millions annually in overcharges.
Where is the Western Ring Road? Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan say western ring road is needed for O'Hare expansion; yet refuse to disclose location, cost, and impact on local jobs, industry, housing.	Western Ring Road route pushed west by Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan into valuable and important industrial and residential areas of Elk Grove Village and Bensenville—leading to huge losses in jobs, tax revenues, economic development and residential quality of life.
Where are all the Terminals? Daley and Ryan say they have identified all the terminals needed for the Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan.	Daley now says all but one of the new terminals shown on the Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan (new Terminals 4 and 6) needed for existing runways and that new (as yet unidentified terminals will be needed for Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan—no locations shown, unidentified billions of dollars in additional unstated costs.
Noise—the Daley Ryan New Math. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan says noise will be less at 1,600,000 operations than at 900,000 operations.	There will be significantly more noise at 1,600,000 operations than at 900,000 operations.
Toxic Air Pollution. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan makes no mention of toxic air pollution yet Ryan as Governor said O'Hare should not be expanded because of toxic air pollution problem.	There will be significantly more toxic air pollution at 1,600,000 operations than at 900,000 operations.
Benefit-Cost Analysis. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan says it meets federal benefit-cost analysis requirements—including requirement that federal government chose the alternative that produces greatest net benefits.	Reality is that benefits of Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan may not exceed the huge costs. It is also clear that placing the new capacity at the new South Suburban Airport rather than an expanded O'Hare produces far greater economic benefits at far less cost than the Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan.
Increased Safety Hazards. Daley and Ryan say their plan is safe	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan creates major safety hazards, including: increase in traffic incursions (collision risk), destruction of safest runways for bad weather winter storm conditions (14/32s), high congestion in O'Hare area air space, risky runway protection (crash zones) in occupied areas.
Compliance With State Law. Daley and Ryan say that their plan complies with state law and that they are seeking federal preemption of state law only to prevent upsetting Daley-Ryan deal by a future governor.	Daley and Ryan both know that they (not some future governor) have both violated state law by failing to meet the requirements of the Illinois Aeronautics Act: purpose of bill is to immunize this illegality.
$15 Billion into the O'Hare Money Pit: Problems of Corruption in Management of O'Hare. Daley and Ryan make no mention of the history of rampant corruption and kickbacks to Daley friends and cronies in O'Hare contracts or the need for safeguards and reforms to insure the integrity of the process.	Putting $15 or more billion dollars into the corrupt contract management system that infects Chicago public works awards—especially at O'Hare, is pouring public resources into a cesspool. The First Commandment of Chicago O'Hare contracts is that the contractor has to hire one of Daley's friends or political associates on contract awards.
Economic Equity and Justice for the South Side and South Suburbs. Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan offers little but empty rhetoric for Peotone and south suburban economic development.	Daley-Ryan O'Hare plan calls for putting virtually all of the economic growth of aviation demand at O'Hare—leaving South Side and South Suburbs either empty promises, or a white elephant token airport.

GRAVE CONCERNS NEAR O'HARE

(By Robert C. Herguth)

American Indian remains that were exhumed 50 years ago to make way for O'Hare Airport might have to be moved again to accommodate Mayor Daley's runway expansion plans.

That's disturbing to some Native Americans, who say they want their ancestors and relics treated with greater respect.

And it's prompting local opponents of the proposed closure of two O'Hare cemeteries—one of which has Indians—to explore whether federal laws that offer limited protection to Native American burial sites and artifacts could help them resist the city's efforts.

"Maybe the federal law might come to our aid," said Bob Placek, a member of Resthaven Cemetery's board who estimates 40 of his relatives, all German and German-American, are buried there. "The dead folks out there aren't trying to be obstructionists, they're trying to rest in peace. . . . I feel it's a desecration to move a cemetery. It's a disregard for our family's history."

It seems unlikely federal law, specifically the Native American Grave Protection and Repatriation Act, would lend much muscle to those opposed to Daley's plan, which calls for knocking out three runways, building four new ones and adding a western entrance and terminal.

"Primarily, the legislation applies to federal lands and tribal lands," said Clarice Smith, deputy regional director for the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Even if someone made the argument that O'Hare is effectively federal land because it uses federal money, the most Resthaven proponents could probably hope for is a short delay, a say in how any disinterment takes place and, if they are Indian, the opportunity to claim the bodies of Native Americans.

"They've got a hard road," Smith said of those who might try to halt a Resthaven closure on the basis of Indian remains.

When O'Hare was being built five decades back, an old Indian burial ground that had become a cemetery for the area's white settlers was bulldozed. Some bodies were moved to a west suburban cemetery and some, including an unknown number of Indians, were believed to be transferred to Resthaven, according to published accounts and those familiar with local history.

"Ma used to talk about Indians being buried at Resthaven," said the 44-year-old Placek, who believes the Indians share a mass grave. His mother, who died in 1996, also is buried at Resthaven. "I used to hear as a little kid Potawatomi" were there.

Regardless of the tribe to which the dead belonged, the Forest County Potawatomi Community of Wisconsin, one of several Potawatomi bands relatively close to Chicago, plans to get involved.

"It's concerning," said Clarice Ritchie, a researcher for the community of about 1,000 who hadn't heard about the issue until contacted by a reporter.

"At this stage of the game, who can determine who they were specifically? But we run into this sort of circumstance in many instances throughout the state of Wisconsin, and some in Illinois, and we take care of them as if they were relatives," she said. "We're all related, we're all created from God, so we do the right thing, we take care of anybody and try to see that they're either not disturbed or properly taken care of."

"I guess we'd have to keep our mind broad as to what would be done," Ritchie said.

"Naturally we don't like to see graves disturbed, but somebody has already disturbed them once. . . . I guess what I'd probably do is talk to the tribal elders and spiritual people and other tribes who could be in the area and come to a conclusion of what should be done."

Bill Daniels, one of the Potawatomi band's spiritual leaders, said spirits may not look kindly on those who move remains.

"It's not good to do that—move a cemetery or just plow over it," he said.

Daley's plan, which still must be approved by state and federal officials, also may displace nearby St. Johannes Cemetery, which is not believed to have any Native American bodies.

John Harris, the deputy Chicago aviation commissioner overseeing the mayor's $6 billion project, said this is the first he's heard that there might be Indian remains at Resthaven, and city officials are trying to verify it.

"I have no reason to doubt them at this time, but I have no independent knowledge," he said. But "whether they're Indians or not, we would exercise an extreme level of sensitivity in the interest of their survivors."

Resthaven, which is loosely affiliated with the United Methodist Church, has about 200 graves, some of which date to the 19th century. It's located on about 2 acres on the west side of O'Hare, in Addison Township just south of the larger St. Johannes.

Self-described "advocate for the dead" Helen Sclair has heard there might be Indians buried at Resthaven, but she suspects not all Native American remains were retrieved when Wilmer's Old Settlers Cemetery was closed in the early 1950s to make room for O'Hare access roads.

She said the Chicago region, which used to be home to Potawatomi, Chippewa and other Indians, doesn't have enough cemetery space, and the dead should be treated with more respect.

"We don't have much of a positive attitude toward cemeteries in Chicago," Sclair said. "Do you know why? Because the dead don't pay taxes or vote. . . . Well, technically they don't vote."

ROSEMARY MULLIGAN,

STATE REPRESENTATIVE 55TH DISTRICT,

Des Plaines, IL, July 5, 2002.

Hon. JESSE L. JACKSON, JR.,

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE JACKSON, JR.: As an Illinois state legislator, I would like to use this opportunity to express my concern and opposition to the National Aviation Capacity Act. The issue of expansion of Chicago O'Hare Airport is extremely important but has been so misrepresented that I believe it is imperative to make a personal plea on behalf of my local residents to each member of the House of Representatives. This plan in the form it has been presented to you contains gross misrepresentations of fact and will inflict harm on the over 100,000 constituents I have taken an oath to protect.

You may not realize that "Chicago" O'Hare Airport is virtually an outcropping of land annexed by the City of Chicago that is over 90 percent surrounded by suburban municipalities. It is the only major city airport where the people directly impacted by airport activity do not elect the mayor or city officials that make decisions about the airport. Therefore, we have had little control or recourse over what happens at the airport. This plan represents a "deal" between two men and has never been debated or voted on by the Illinois General Assembly!

My family moved to Park Ridge in 1955, long before anyone had an idea of what an overpowering presence O'Hare would become. Unfortunately, the amount of land dedicated to the airport set its fate long before the current crisis. Plainly speaking, there isn't enough room to expand.

For the past several years, I and other legislators have introduced nearly a dozen measures in the Illinois General Assembly to conduct environmental studies, provide tax relief for soundproofing, defend suburban neighborhoods from unfair "land grabs," require state legislative approval of any airport expansion and to generally protect the people we represent whose residences abut airport property. Because of the political make-up of our body and the great influence of Chicago's mayor, we have been unsuccessful. Our efforts and the health and safety of our constituents are ignored because of politics.

Please, before you vote on HR 3479, consider the following facts:

1. If the people who surround this airport could vote for the mayor of the City of Chicago, an agreement to expand O'Hare could not have been made. Whoever is mayor would have to take into consideration his immediate constituency.

2. Thorough environmental studies are being blocked. There are many documented health concerns related to current pollution levels. 800,000 additional flights will nearly double the environmental hazard.

3. The State of Illinois' rights are being trampled. The House of Representatives vote is setting a precedent that may impact your home state at some later date.

4. The safety of this plan has been questioned, particularly with its inadequate FAA Safety Zones. The lack of land does not allow for significant changes. It jeopardizes surrounding schools, homes and businesses.

5. No matter what configuration or expansion moves forward, O'Hare's Midwest location means it will always be impacted by weather from many directions.

6. Proponents claim a 79 percent decline in delays with reconfiguration of runways. However, when the increase of 800,000 flights is factored in, delays will increase to above their current levels.

Notwithstanding the economic benefits proponents subscribe to this project, the responsibility of elected officials must be first to the health, welfare and public safety of the people we represent.

Lastly, there exists a glaring discrepancy between the legislation before you and what has been told to Illinoisans. A simpler answer to all of the O'Hare congestion problems exists in the development of a third regional airport. The legislation has downgraded the priority of this solution and will further delay any true relief for our nation's transportation woes. This fact is omitted from news reports and official proponent propaganda.

With all due respect, I ask that you vote "no" on HR 3479. Let this remain a state's rights issue. Please feel free to contact me anytime if you have any questions at (847) 297-6533. Thank you for your time.

Respectfully,

ROSEMARY MULLIGAN,
Illinois State Representative, 55th District.

NATIONAL AIR TRAFFIC
CONTROLLERS ASSOCIATION,
CHICAGO O'HARE TOWER,
Chicago, IL, November 30, 2001.

Hon. PETER FITZGERALD,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

SENATOR FITZGERALD, As requested from your staff, I have summarized the most obvious concerns that air traffic controllers at O'Hare have with the new runway plans being considered by Mayor Daley and Governor Ryan. They are listed below along with some other comments.

1. The Daley and Ryan plans both have a set of east-west parallel runways directly north of the terminal and in close proximity to one another. Because of their proximity to each other (1200') they cannot be used simultaneously for arrivals. They can only be used simultaneously if one is used for departures and the other is used for arrivals, but only during VFR (visual flight rules), or good weather conditions. During IFR (instrument flight rules, ceiling below 1000' and visibility less than 3 miles) these runways cannot be used simultaneously at all. They basically must be operated as one runway for safety reasons. The same is true for the set of parallels directly south of the terminal; they too are only 1200' apart.

2. Both sets of parallel runways closest to the terminal (the ones referred to above) are all a minimum of 10,000' long. This creates a runway incursion problem, which is a very serious safety issue. Because of their length and position, all aircraft that land or depart O'Hare would be required to taxi across either one, or in some cases two runways to get to and from the terminal. This design flaw exists in both the Daley and the Ryan plan. A runway incursion is when an aircraft accidentally crosses a runway when another aircraft is landing or departing. They are caused by either a mistake or mis-understanding by the pilot or controller. Runway incursions have skyrocketed over the past few years and are on the NTSB's most wanted list of safety issues that need to be addressed. Parallel runway layouts create the potential for runway incursions; in fact the FAA publishes a pamphlet for airport designers and planners that urge them to avoid parallel runway layouts that force taxiing aircraft to cross active runways. Los Angeles International airport has lead the nation in runway incursions for several years. A large part of that incursion problem is the parallel runway layout; aircraft must taxi across runways to get to and from the terminals.

3. The major difference in Governor Ryan's counter proposal is the elimination of the southern most runway. If this runway were eliminated, the capacity of the new airport would be less than we have now during certain conditions (estimated at about 40% of the time). If you look at Mayor Daley's plan, it calls for six parallel east-west runways and two parallel northeast-southwest runways. The northeast-southwest parallels are left over from the current O'Hare layout. These two runways simply won't be usable in day-to-day operations because of the location of them (they are wedged in between, or pointed at the other parallels). We would not use these runways except when the wind was very strong (35 knots or above) which we estimate would be less than 1% of the time. That leaves the six east-west parallels for use in normal day-to-day operations. This is the same number of runways available and used at O'Hare today. If you remove the southern runway (Governor Ryan's counter proposal), you are leaving us five runways which is one less than we have now. That means less capacity than today's O'Hare during certain weather conditions. With good weather, you may get about the same capacity we have now. If this is the case, then why build it?

4. The Daley-Ryan plans call for the removal of the NW/SE parallels (Runways 32L and 32R). This is a concern because during the winter it is common to have strong winds out of the northwest with snow, cold temperatures and icy conditions. During these times, it is critical to have runways that point as close as possible into the wind. Headwinds mean slower landing speeds for aircraft, and they allow for the airplane to decelerate quicker after landing which is important when landing on an icy runway. Landing into headwinds makes it much easier for the pilot to control the aircraft as well. Without these runways, pilots would have to land on icy conditions during strong cross-wind conditions. This is a possible safety issue.

These are the four major concerns we have with the Daley-Ryan runway plans. There are many more minor issues that must be addressed. Amongst them are taxiway layouts, clear zones (areas off the ends of each runway required to be clear of obstructions), ILS critical areas (similar to clear zones, but for navigation purposes), airspace issues (how arrivals and departures will be funneled into these new runways) and all sorts of other procedural type issues. These kinds of things all have to go through various parts of the FAA (flight standards, airport certification etc.) eventually. These groups should have been involved with the planning portion from day one. Air traffic controllers at the tower are well versed on what works well with the current airport and what does not. We can provide the best advice on what needs to be accomplished to increase capacity while maintaining safety. It is truly amazing that these groups were not consulted in the planning of a new O'Hare. The current Daley-Ryan runway plans, if built as publicized, will do little for capacity and/or will create serious safety issues. This simply cannot happen. The fear is that the airport will be built, without our input, and then handed to us with expectations that we find a way to make it work. When it doesn't, the federal government (the FAA and the controllers) will be blamed for safety and delay problems.

Sincerely,

CRAIG BURZYCH, Facility Representative, NATCA-O'Hare
Tower.

Re: Key Points Why The Chicago Region
Needs A New Airport—And Why New O'Hare Runways Are Contrary To The Region and Nation's Best Interests.

Hon. ANDREW H. CARD,
Chief of Staff to the President,
The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR ANDY: A matter of great importance to us is the need for safe airport capacity expansion in the metro Chicago region. At your earliest convenience, we would like to schedule a meeting with you and Secretary Mineta to discuss the situation. Enclosed is a detailed memorandum summarizing our views. We are convinced that we must build a new regional airport now and, for the same reasons, we believe that construction of one or more new runways at O'Hare would be harmful to the public health, economy and environment of the region.

As set forth in that memorandum:

Most responsible observers agree that the Chicago region needs major new runway capacity now.

The question is where to build that new runway capacity—1) at a new regional airport, 2) at O'Hare, 3) at Midway, or 4) a combination of all of the above. An assessment of these alternatives reaches the following conclusions:

1. The new runways can be built faster at a new airport as opposed to O'Hare or Midway.

2. More new runway capacity can be built at a new site than at O'Hare or Midway.

3. The new runways can be built at far less cost at a new airport than at O'Hare or Midway.

4. Construction of the new capacity at a new airport will have far less impact on the environment and public health than would expansion of either Midway or O'Hare.

5. Construction of the new capacity at a new airport offers the best opportunity to bring major new competition into the region.

6. The selected alternative cannot be expansion at O'Hare and construction of a new airport. New runways at O'Hare would doom the economic feasibility of the new airport, guarantee its characterization as a "white elephant" and insure the expansion of the monopoly dominance of United and American Airlines in the Chicago market.

The memorandum contains a series of related questions and a detailed list of suggestions that would ensure the rapid development of major new runway capacity in the Chicago region, open the region to major new competition, and accomplish these objectives in a low-cost, environmentally sound manner.

Again, we would appreciate the opportunity to discuss these matters with you and Secretary Mineta at your earliest convenience.

Very truly yours,
HENRY HYDE,
JESSE JACKSON, JR.

To: White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card.
From: Congressman Henry Hyde, Congressman Jesse Jackson, Jr.

Re: Key Points Why Chicago Region Needs A New Airport—And Why New O'Hare Runways Are Contrary To The Region and Nation's Aviation Best Interests

Date: January 31, 2001.

This memorandum summarizes our views in the debate over the need for airport capacity expansion in the metro Chicago region. For the reasons set forth herein, we are convinced that we must build a new regional airport now and, for the same reasons, believe that construction of one or more new runways at O'Hare would be harmful to the public health, economy and environment of the region.

The debate can best be summarized in a simple question and answer format.

Does the Region need new runway capacity now? Unlike The City of Chicago—which has for more than a decade privately known that the region needs new runway capacity while publicly proclaiming that new runway capacity is not needed—bipartisan leaders like Jesse Jackson, Jr. and myself have openly acknowledged the need for, and urged the construction of, new runway capacity in the region.

The need for new runway capacity is not a distant phenomenon; we should have had new runway capacity built several years ago. While 20 year growth projections of air travel demand show that the harm caused by this failure to build capacity will only get worse, the available information suggests that the region has already suffered serious economic harm for several years because of our past failure to build the new runway capacity.

If the answer to the runway question is yes—and we believe it is—the next question is where to build the new runway capacity? Though the issue has been discussed, the media, Chicago and the airlines have failed to openly discuss the alternatives as to where to build the new runway capacity—and especially, the issues, facts and impacts to the pros and cons of each alternative.

The alternatives for new runway capacity in the region are straightforward: (1) build new runways at a new airport, (2) build a new runway at O'Hare, (3) build new runways at Midway, or (4) a combination of all of the above. Given these alternatives, the following facts are clear:

1. The new runways can be built faster at a new airport as opposed to O'Hare or Midway. Simply from the standpoint of physical construction (as well as paper and regulatory planning) the new runways can be built faster at a "greenfield" site than they can at either O'Hare or Midway.

2. More new runway capacity can be built at a new site than at O'Hare or Midway. Given the space limitations of O'Hare and Midway, it is obvious that more new runways (and therefore more new runway capacity) can be built at a new larger greenfield site than at either O'Hare and Midway. We acknowledge that additional space can be acquired at Midway or O'Hare by destroying densely populated surrounding residential communities—but only at tremendous economic and environmental cost.

3. The new runways can be built at far less cost at a new airport than at O'Hare or Midway. Again, it is obvious that the new runways—and their associated capacity—can be built at far less cost at a "greenfield" site than they can at either O'Hare or Midway. Given the enormous public taxpayer resources that must be used for any of the alternatives—and the relative scarcity of public funds—the Bush Administration should compare the overall costs of building the new runway capacity (and associated terminal and access capacity) at a new airport vs. building the new capacity at O'Hare or Midway.

4. Construction of the new capacity at a new airport will have far less impact on the environment and public health than would expansion of either Midway or O'Hare. Midway, and later O'Hare, were sited and built at a time when concerns over environment and public health were far less than they are today. As a result, both existing airports have virtually no "environmental buffer" between the airports and the densely populated communities surrounding these airports. In contrast, the site of the new South Suburban Airport has, by design, a large environmental buffer which will ameliorate most, if not all, of the environmental harm and public health risk from the site. Indeed, prudence would suggest an even larger environmental buffer around the South Suburban site than is now contemplated. We can create the same or similar environmental buffer around O'Hare or Midway—but only at a cost of tens of billions of dollars and enormous social and economic disruption.

5. Construction of the new capacity at a new airport offers the best opportunity for bringing major new competition into the region. When comparing costs and benefits of alternatives, the Bush Administration must address the existing problem of monopoly (or duopoly) fares at "Fortress O'Hare" and the economic penalty such high fares are inflicting on the economic and business community in our region. Does the lack of significant competition allow American and United to charge our region's business travelers higher fares than they could if there was significant additional competition in the region? What is the economic cost to the region—in both higher fares and lost business opportunities—of the existing "Fortress O'Hare" business fare dominance of United and American?

The State of Illinois has stated that existing "Fortress O'Hare" business fare dominance of United and American costs the region many hundreds of millions of dollars per year. Bringing in one or more significant competitors to the region would bring enormous economic benefits in increased competition and reduced fares.

And the only alternative that has the room to bring in significant new competition is the new airport. Certainly the design of Chicago's proposed World Gateway program—designed in concert with United and American to preserve and expand their dominance at O'Hare—does not offer opportunities for major competitors to come in and compete head-to-head with United and American.

6. The selected alternative cannot be expansion at O'Hare and construction of a new airport. The dominant O'Hare airlines are pushing their suggestion: add another runway at O'Hare and allow a "point-to-point" small airport to be built at the South Suburban Site.

That is not an acceptable alternative for several reasons:

First, it presumes massive growth at O'Hare, as it is based on the assumption that all transfer traffic growth—along with the origin-destination traffic to sustain the transfer growth—stays at O'Hare. If that assumption is accepted, the airlines already know that demand growth for the traffic assumed to stay at O'Hare will necessitate not one, but two or more additional runways. This increase in traffic at O'Hare will have serious environmental and public health impacts on surrounding communities.

Second, this alternative destroys the economic justification for the new airport. With massive new capacity at O'Hare, there would be no economic need for the new airport.

Third, assuming the new airport is built anyway, as a "compromise", this alternative guarantees that the new airport will be a "white elephant"—much as the Mid-America airport near St. Louis is today because of the Fortress Hub practices of the major airlines and as was Dulles International as long as Washington National was allowed to grow. With limits on the growth of National finally recognized, Dulles is now the thriving East Coast Hub for United.

RELATED QUESTIONS

If the Region needs new runways, what is the sense of spending over several billion dollars—much of it public money—to build the World Gateway Program at O'Hare if we decide that new runway capacity should be built elsewhere? If the decision is to build the new runways at O'Hare, then much of the 5-6 billion dollar terminal and roadway expansion proposed for O'Hare may be justified.

But if the decision is that the new runway capacity should be built elsewhere, then the proposed multi-billion dollar expansion makes no sense. We will be spending billions of dollars in taxpayer funds for a massive project that standing alone—without new runways—will not add any new capacity to our region.

The airlines know this fact and that is why they—and their surrogates at the Civic Committee and the Chicagoland Chamber—are pushing for new runways.

If the Region needs new runways and we wish to explore the alternative of putting the new runways in at O'Hare, what is the full cost of expanding O'Hare as opposed to constructing a new airport? If others wish to explore the alternative of an expanded O'Hare as the place to build the new runways capacity for the region, let's have an honest exploration and discussion of the full costs of expanding O'Hare with new runways and compare it to the cost of building the new airport. Chicago and the airlines already know what the components of an expanded O'Hare would be.

These components are laid out in Chicago's "Integrated Airport Plan and include a new "quad runway" system for O'Hare and additional ground access through "western access".

Based on information available, we believe that the cost of the O'Hare expansion would exceed ten billion dollars. These costs should be compared with the costs of a new airport.

Are the delay and congestion problems experienced at O'Hare self-inflicted? Sadly, when Chicago and the major O'Hare airlines advocated lifting of the "slot" restrictions at O'Hare and other major "slot" controlled airports, the Clinton Administration and others ignored the warnings of Congressman Jackson, and myself that the airport could not accommodate the additional flights without a chaotic increase in delays and congestion. Indeed, the chaos we predicted has come true and we now have a "Camp O'Hare" where air traffic is managed by cancellation rather than by adequate service.

Like Cassandra, our prophecy was ignored. The Clinton Administration endorsed lifting the slot controls and chaos ensued.

But just because our warnings were ignored doesn't mean that practical solutions should continue to be ignored. The delays and congestion were predictable and certain—predicted based on delay/capacity analysis conducted by the FAA. Just as certain are the short term remedies.

Just as the congestion was brought on by overstuffing O'Hare with more aircraft operations than it can handle, the congestion and delay can immediately be reduced to acceptable levels by reducing the scheduled air traffic to the level that can be easily accommodated by O'Hare without the risk of unacceptable delays. The delay chaos was self-inflicted by ignoring the flashing warnings put out by the FAA and other experts. The solution can be easily administered by the FAA recognizing—as it has at LaGuardia—that limits must be placed on uncontrolled airline desire to overschedule flights.

Should the short-term "fix" to the delays and congestion include "capacity enhancement" through air traffic control devices? Absent new runways, the FAA has encouraged and permitted a variety of operational devices designed to allow increased levels of departures and arrivals in a set period of time. These procedures—known as "incremental capacity enhancement"—focus on putting moving aircraft closer together in time and space—to squeeze more operations into a finite amount of runways. Typically, this squeezing is done in low visibility, bad weather conditions because these are the conditions where FAA wants to increase capacity.

While the air traffic controllers remain mute on the safety concerns raised by these procedures, the pilots sure have not:

"We have seen the volume of traffic at O'Hare pick up and exceed anyone's expectations, so much so, that on occasion mid-air collisions were only seconds apart. O'Hare is at maximum capacity, if not over capacity. It is my opinion that it is only a matter of time until two airliners collide making disastrous headlines." Captain John Teerling, Senior AA Airline Captain with 31 years experience flying out of O'Hare January 1999 letter to Governor Ryan (emphasis added)

Paul McCarthy, ALPA's [Airline Pilots Association] executive air safety chairman, condemned the incremental capacity enhancements as threats to safety. Each one puts a small additional burden on pilots and controllers, he said. Taken together, they reduce safety margins, particularly at multiple runway airports, to the point that they invite a midair collision, a runway incursion or a controlled flight into terrain. Aviation Week, September 18, 2000 at p. 51 (emphasis added)

It is clear that FAA's constant attempts to squeeze more and more capacity out of the existing overloaded runways—through such "enhancement" procedures as the recently announced "Compressed Arrival Procedures" and other ATC changes—is incrementally reducing the safety margin so cherished by the pilots and the passengers who have entrusted their safety to them.

The answer to growth is new runways at a new airport—not jamming more aircraft closer and closer together at O'Hare. The answer to delays and congestion with existing overscheduled levels of traffic is to reduce traffic levels to the capacity of the runways without the need to jam aircraft closer and closer together.

Does the current level of operations at O'Hare (and Midway) generate levels of toxic air pollutants that expose downwind residential communities to levels of these pollutants in their communities at levels above USEPA cancer risk guidelines? Though our residents have complained for years about toxic air pollution from O'Hare, none of the state and federal agencies would pay attention. Recently however, Park Ridge funded a study by two nationally known expert firms in the field of air pollution and public health to conduct a preliminary study of the toxic air pollution risk posed by O'Hare. That study, Preliminary Study and Analysis of Toxic Air Pollution Emissions From O'Hare International Airport and the Resultant Health Risks Caused By Those Emissions in Surrounding Residential Communities (August 2000), found that current operations at O'Hare—based on emission data supplied by Chicago—created levels of toxic air pollution in excess of federal cancer risk guidelines in 98 downwind communities. The highest levels of risk were found in those residential communities that O'Hare uses as its "environmental buffer"—namely Park Ridge and Des Plaines.

Is the Park Ridge study valid? Park Ridge has challenged Chicago, the airlines, and federal and state agencies to come forward with any alternative findings as to the toxic air pollution impact of O'Hare's emissions on downwind residential communities. And that does not mean simply listing what comes out of O'Hare. The downwind communities are entitled to know how much toxic pollution comes out of O'Hare, where the toxic pollution from O'Hare goes, what are the concentrations of O'Hare toxic pollution when it reaches downwind residential communities, and what are the health risks posed by those O'Hare pollutants at the concentrations in those downwind communities.

Should not something be done to control and reduce the already unacceptable levels of toxic air pollution coming into downwind residential communities from O'Hare's current operations?

Should not the relative toxic pollution risks to surrounding residential communities created by the alternatives of a new airport, expanding O'Hare, or expanding Midway be added to the analysis and comparison of alternatives?

What about the monopoly problem at Forttress O'Hare and what should be done about it? We have already alluded to the factor of high monopoly fares as a consideration in choosing alternatives for the new runway capacity. But the monopoly problem of Forttress O'Hare will be relevant even if no new airport is built. The entire design of the proposed World Gateway Program is premised on a terminal concept that solidifies and expands the current market dominance of United and American at O'Hare and in the Chicago air travel market.

What can the Bush Administration do if indeed there is a monopoly air fare problem at O'Hare or monopoly dominance is costing Chicago area business travelers hundreds of millions of dollars per year?

When these questions were raised in the Suburban O'Hare Commission report, If you Build It We Won't Come: The Collective Refusal of The Major Airlines To Compete In The Chicago Air Travel Market, Chicago and the airlines responded with smoke and mirrors. First they produced glossy charts showing that more than 70 airlines serve O'Hare. What they neglected to show was that United and American control over 80% of those flights with the remaining 60 plus airlines operating only a small percentage.

Similarly, the airlines and Chicago talked about the competitive low fares charged to passengers. What they emphasized, however, were low fares for reservations far in advance. The major business travel organizations representing business travel managers report that business travelers predominantly use unrestricted coach fares since they have to respond on short notice to business needs. An examination of fares for unrestricted business travel from Chicago to major business markets shows that these routes are dominated by United and American and that they charge extremely high "lock-step" fares to business travelers to these business markets.

Finally, the airlines and Chicago argued that O'Hare is "competitive" with fares charged to business travelers in other Forttress Hub Markets. That statement ignores the fact that all the major airlines are gouging captive business travelers in all their own Forttress Hub markets. Indeed, a repeated anecdote is the fact that a passenger from a "spoke" city—e.g., Springfield, Illinois—pays a lower fare for a trip to O'Hare and then to Washington D.C. than a Chicago based traveler who gets on the same plane to Washington. Why? Because the Springfield traveler has the choice of hubbing either through O'Hare or St. Louis while the Chicago based business traveler is locked into Chicago.

Where are the antitrust enforcers to break up these geographic cartels? Equally important, in addition to antitrust enforcement powers, the federal government has enormous leverage to break up the cartels through the funding approval process of the Airport Improvement Program (AIP) and Passenger Facility Charge (PFC) programs. Yet billions of federal taxpayer funds go to United and American without so much as a raised eyebrow.

What about Noise? Shouldn't we be happy to exchange some soundproofing for new runways at O'Hare? The City of Chicago has a residential soundproofing program which was created on the advice of its public relations consultants to create a spirit of "compromise" that would lead to acceptance of new runways at O'Hare.

But here are some facts that are little publicized:

1. Most of our residents feel that soundproofing—while improving their interior quality of life—essentially assumes that we will give up living-out-of-doors or with our windows open in nice weather.

2. Whereas many major airport cities with residential soundproofing programs are soundproofing all homes experiencing 65 DNL (decibels day-night 24-hr. average) or greater, Chicago and the airlines are only committing funds to the 70 DNL level. Result: Chicago is only soundproofing less than 10% of the homes that Chicago itself acknowledges to be severely impacted.

3. Chicago came into our communities asking to put in noise monitors to collect "real world" data as to the levels of noise. Yet, despite promises to share the data, Chicago refuses to share the data with our communities.

4. Instead of an atmosphere of trust, these tactics by Chicago have created additional animosity as neighbors on one side of an alley or street get soundproofing while their neighbors across that alley or street get no soundproofing. Indeed, Chicago's residential soundproofing program—because it is so limited in scope and ignores thousands of adversely impacted homes—has caused even more animosity in our communities.

In short, residential soundproofing is not the panacea that Chicago and many in the downtown media perceive it to be. Moreover, it does nothing to address the toxic air pollution and other safety related concerns of our residents.

Can we have more than one "hub" airport operating in the same city? Faced with the potential inevitability of a new airport, the airlines for the last two years have been arguing for an expansion of O'Hare (instead of a major new airport) with the argument that a metropolitan area cannot have more than one hub airport. Based on that premise, United and American say that the sole hub airport in metro Chicago should be O'Hare. That simply is not correct:

1. There are several domestic and international cities with more than one hubbing airport. Competing airlines create hubbing operations wherever airport space is available. Thus, there are multiple hubbing airports in metro New York (JFK and Newark), Washington, D.C., London, and Paris.

2. The Lake Calumet Airport proposed by Mayor Daley would have been a second hub airport.

3. There is simply no reason—given the size of the business and other travel origin-destination market in metro Chicago—that a new hub competitor could not establish a major presence at a new south suburban airport.

How do we fund new airport construction? The answer is simply and the same answer Mayor Daley had for the proposed Calumet Airport. Daley proposed using a mix of PFC and AIP funds to induce carriers to use the new airport. Indeed, the entire justification for his urging the passage of PFC legislation was to collect PFCs at O'Hare and use them for the new airport.

But United and American claim that the PFC revenues are "their" money. On the contrary, the PFC funds are federal taxpayer funds no different in their nature as taxpayer dollars than the similar "AIP" tax charged to air travelers. These funds don't belong to the airlines. They are federal funds collected and disbursed through a joint program administered by the FAA and the airport operator.

Nor are these federal taxpayer funds "Chicago's" money. Chicago is simply a tax collection agent for the federal government.

But how do we get the funds from O'Hare to the new airport? We do it the same way Mayor Daley is transferring funds from O'Hare to Gary and the same way he proposed getting federal funds collected at O'Hare to the Lake Calumet project: a regional airport authority.

SUGGESTIONS

We have respectfully posed some questions and posited some answers for the President's and your consideration. We believe that a thorough and candid examination and discussion of these questions leads to only one conclusion: we should build a new airport and we should not expand O'Hare.

But more than raising questions, we also have several concrete suggestions for addressing the region's air transportation needs:

1. Let's stop the paper shuffling and build the new airport. The program we outline in this letter is virtually identical to the proposal drafted by Mayor Daley for construction of the Lake Calumet Airport. We believe that a cooperative fast-track planning and construction program for a new airport could see the new airport open for service in 3-5 years.

2. The money, resources and legal authority to build the new airport can be assembled by passage of a regional airport authority bill similar to the regional airport authority bill drafted in 1992 by Mayor Daley for the Lake Calumet project. So the Illinois General Assembly is a necessary partner in any effort. But equally important is the dominant role of the federal Administration in controlling the use of AIP and PFC funds and in assertive enforcement of federal anti-trust laws. Let's put together a federal-state partnership to get the job done.

3. Give the O'Hare suburbs guaranteed protection against further expansion of O'Hare. Such guarantees are needed not only for our protection but for the viability of the new regional airport.

4. Provide soundproofing for all of the noise impacted residences around O'Hare and Midway. The new airport addresses future needs; it does not correct existing problems caused by existing levels of traffic.

5. Initiate a regulatory program to control and reduce air toxics emissions from O'Hare.

6. Fix the short-term delay and congestion at O'Hare by returning to a recognition of the existing capacity limits of the airport. The delay and congestion now experienced at O'Hare is a self-inflicted wound brought about by airline attempts to stuff too many planes into that airport. The delays and congestion will be dramatically reduced immediately by reducing scheduled traffic to a level consistent with the existing capacity of the airport.

7. Demand a break-up and reform of the Fortress Hub anti-competitive phenomenon—both at O'Hare and at other Fortress Hubs around the nation. This can be done with either aggressive antitrust enforcement or with proper oversight of the disbursement of massive federal subsidies.

8. The entire World Gateway Program should be examined in light of the questions raised here and should be modified or abandoned depending on the answers provided to these questions.

We would appreciate the opportunity to discuss these matters with you and Secretary Minter at your convenience.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC.

FIVE REASONS TO OPPOSE THE NATIONAL AVIATION CAPACITY EXPANSION ACT (HR 3479)

DEAR COLLEAGUE: This legislation to expand O'Hare International Airport is fatally flawed because it will:

1. SET A TERRIBLE PRECEDENT: This bill will allow the federal government to preempt state law requiring approval of airport construction and expansion—approval that requires the blessing of the state legislature. Will your state legislature be next to lose its power to decide local airport matters?

The bill also will lead to a rash of demands from various localities for priority standing for airport funding, bypassing reasonable administrative planning and environmental review processes.

2. THREATEN SAFETY AND THE ENVIRONMENT: This legislation attempts to superimpose what amounts to an airport the size of Dulles International on a land-locked airport the size of Reagan National—an absurd idea on its face. Former U.S. Department of Transportation Inspector General Mary Schiavo has called this proposal "a tragedy waiting to happen."

Putting 1.6 million planes a year into the O'Hare airspace already overcrowded with 900,000 flights doesn't make sense. It increases the risk of a serious accident and it jeopardizes surrounding schools, homes and businesses.

A third regional airport that can be built in one-third of the time and at one-third of the cost of expanding O'Hare.

O'Hare is already the largest polluter in the Chicago region. With expansion, noise and air pollution will increase exponentially.

3. UPROOT THOUSANDS OF FAMILIES: This legislation will destroy the single largest concentration of federally assisted affordable housing in one of the nation's most affluent counties. These are the homes that low-income people and other minorities, particularly Hispanics, depend on.

Up to 1,500 or more homes will be destroyed. These homes will be condemned or taken by eminent domain, leaving those homeowners few options to find affordable housing elsewhere.

4. THREATEN THOUSANDS OF JOBS: This legislation will destroy as much as one-third of the nation's largest contiguous industrial park, threatening tens of thousands of jobs. How many jobs will be created by the airport expansion? That remains a great mystery.

5. COST TOO MUCH: This legislation will require the expenditure of $15 billion or more once the entire infrastructure, relocation, soundproofing and other costs are figured in. This is much more costly than the $6.6 billion that supporters keep touting.

Commits Chicago, Illinois and federal taxpayers to a plan whose costs have not been adequately detailed. We have requested documentation of the costs, but have been rebuffed. That is why a Freedom of Information lawsuit is pending in Illinois court.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my strongest possible support for H.R. 3479, the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act of 2002. This measure will help end over 20 years of aviation gridlock at the most important crossroads of American aviation by modifying and codifying a historic agreement between Republican Governor George Ryan of Illinois and Democratic Mayor of Chicago Rich Daley that would expand and modernize O'Hare International Airport.

In December 2000, I spoke to Speaker HASTERT, Governor Ryan and Mayor Daley, asking them for their help in solving this national and international aviation capacity crisis. I am very happy to say that all these men have helped in moving this legislation forward.

Chicago O'Hare is a vital economic engine in Chicago, the State of Illinois, the Midwest and the entire Nation. It serves as the only major dual hub with United and American Airlines basing significant equipment, employees and assets at the facility. O'Hare serves more than 190,000 travelers per day, nearly 73 million in the year 2000. It is the world's busiest airport in the number of passengers. Forty-seven States have direct access to O'Hare.

But O'Hare needs to be redesigned to meet the demands of today's marketplace. Designed in the 1950s, this airport has intersecting runways and a layout designed for smaller aircraft. By simply reconfiguring the airport layout, many weather-related delays could be avoided. By replacing old runways with safer, parallel configurations, delays and cancellations would be greatly reduced, eliminating delays that often ripple through the entire Nation. Ninety percent of O'Hare's modernization will be paid by airline and airport-generated funds, including passenger facility charges, landing fees, concessions and bonds. The rest of these funds will come through the regular, and I repeat, regular FAA process for airport construction, and this legislation is very clear on that point.

The Governor-Mayor agreement also includes a south suburban airport near Peotone. This legislation will ask the FAA to give full consideration to Peotone. Just as expanding O'Hare does not eliminate the need for a third airport, building Peotone will not replace O'Hare modernization. They are not mutually exclusive. Both are needed to address serious aviation capacity problems in the region and the Nation. Simply put, just as the city wants to move ahead with using its own funds to expand its own airport, this agreement allows the State to do the same for Peotone.

While expanding O'Hare and building Peotone are needed to address the region and the Nation's aviation capacity, forward thinkers will agree that even more capacity will be needed. That is why this measure includes full consideration of commercial airports at Gary, Indiana and Rockford, Illinois.

This legislation also addresses traffic congestion along O'Hare's Northwest Corridor, including western airport access, and maintains the quality of life for residents near these airports. We have carefully crafted clean air and environmental language that is acceptable to all parties involved, including 15 environmental groups and the Sierra Club. In addition, the new runway configuration will reduce by half the number of people impacted by noise, and this agreement also includes $450 million in funds for soundproofing.

Some might call this legislation unprecedented, but it is clear that the Chicago situation is unprecedented and unique.

When the Subcommittee on Aviation held a hearing on this issue in August of 2001, no other similar situation could be found where a State has veto power over a city's airport project.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) for their great help with this legislation. I would also like to thank the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) for his efforts in working with me on this legislation. I agree with him that it is important that we craft a measure that is good not only for the Chicago region, but for the Nation as a whole. It is my hope that we can pass this legislation out of the House today, because I firmly believe that this bill will do more to end the aviation gridlock that plagues the American flying public than any other measure this Congress could pass.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we are debating this bill on the floor of the Congress sets a dangerous precedent by stating that Congress, not the FAA, not the Department of Transportation, not aviation experts, but Congress shall build and plan airports. That is what we are discussing today. If Congress was not planning to build an airport, we would not be here discussing this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the chairman of the Committee on International Relations.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, my congressional district encompasses O'Hare International Airport and many of the residential communities that surround O'Hare, communities, I might add, that will lose hundreds, if not thousands, of homes and businesses to airport development should this expansion plan be approved.

Please do not be deceived because this bill is on the Suspension Calendar. As the gentleman from Illinois (Mr.

JACKSON) said, it is highly controversial, involves constitutional issues, antitrust issues, environmental issues and, most seriously, the issue of bulldozing an entire community of low-income homes, largely peopled by the Hispanic population.

Northern Illinois does need additional airport capacity; everyone agrees to that. O'Hare is at capacity. So the real question is whether we build a new airport that is safe and can expand with time, or whether we refurbish the old airport.

The proponents of this bill that the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) are advancing want to double the amount of flights going into the busiest airport in the world each year to accommodate 1,600,000 operations a year. Opponents like the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON) and myself say, build a new airport. Build one far away from urban areas that will not do violence to the environment and one that can expand as the future of our air traffic grows.

A new airport can be built faster and cheaper than expanding O'Hare, but a lot of proponents of the bill object to that. Why? Well, I can think of two reasons. One is the City of Chicago would not own the new airport and the City of Chicago has to own that airport, and the other reason is the two major airlines that dominate O'Hare might find some competition, and competition is not a healthy thing, some people think.

This bill is corporate welfare of the most blatant sort. It is being marketed as a great leap forward for airport development; but it is a death blow to local government, because it forbids the Illinois legislature from having any voice in the deal between the City of Chicago and the governor of Illinois to double the air traffic. This bill suggests the State of Illinois has approved the deal. Well, if the Illinois general assembly is no longer relevant, if the Illinois Aeronautics Act is unimportant, I guess they are right. I do not know what they propose to do about the 10th amendment.

The City of Chicago has only those powers given to it by the Illinois general assembly. Chicago is a municipal government, a political subdivision created and empowered by the State legislature, and this State legislature has never given to Chicago or to the Governor, for that matter, the authority to, on their own, authorize the massive expansion of O'Hare. Thousands of people's homes and businesses will be bulldozed; two cemeteries with well over 1,600 graves dating back to the 1840s will be invaded by the same bulldozers.

This bill radically restructures the constitutional relationship between Congress, the States, and their municipalities. Why, it creates what amounts to a new Federal zoning law, an idea I am sure our constituents will welcome.

If, however, establishing a dangerous precedent is not reason enough to vote against this legislation, let me add some more. This legislation ratifies a deal that was struck without adequate public participation, without an open planning process; and despite the public having no say in this matter, the airlines certainly got their say. This is corporate welfare utilizing tax dollars to subsidize a monopoly.

Right now, United and American Airlines have a stranglehold on the market at home, forcing Illinois residents to pay far too much for tickets. The Government Accounting Office estimates this market lock costs Chicago travelers $623 million a year in overcharges.

This legislation will destroy two cemeteries and the single largest concentration of federally assisted affordable housing in one of the Nation's most affluent counties. These are the homes of low-income people and other minorities, particularly Hispanics. Proponents claim only 500 homes will need to be torn down; the truth is closer to 1,500.

This proposed expansion will ruin the quality of life for more than a million people living near O'Hare. It will increase air pollution in a region that is already nonconforming under Federal air regulations and will increase noise pollution to horrendous levels for those living near O'Hare.

What about safety? Putting 1.6 million planes a year into the O'Hare airspace, which is limited and already overcrowded with 900,000 flights, does not make sense. It increases a risk of a serious accident. I could go on and on and on.

Let me just say this: when the big and the powerful go after the weak and the vulnerable, usually the big and the powerful win. I certainly do not speak for the big and the powerful. I am speaking for the families whose homes are going to be taken, the families whose relatives and ancestors are buried in those graves, and I am saying that we have an expectation that this Congress will think of the human side of this, not just the economic side of it.

MOVING GRAVES CAN BE "ROYAL MESS"
[From the Chicago Sun-Times, July 14, 2002]

(By Robert C. Herguth)

In the 1990s, St. Louis' Lambert Airport moved thousands of bodies from the crumbling, mostly black Washington Park Cemetery to make way for a transit line and create a larger, flatter buffer for runways.

Trouble, it turned out, was almost as bountiful as bones.

An archaeologist hired to help with disinterment was accused of snatching limbs and yanking out teeth, supposedly for research, and later of hiding corpses to ensure he got paid. A state inspector climbed into a burial vault and held what was described as a "mock funeral." There also were reports of coffins being accidentally pulverized by machinery.

"That was a royal mess," a person associated with the project recently remarked.

While an extreme example, the St. Louis work demonstrates how bad an already difficult and delicate process get.

And it serves as a cautionary tale as the City of Chicago—using one of the same consultants involved in the Washington Park effort—makes plans to bulldoze two historic suburban cemeteries, and 433 acres of homes and businesses, to accommodate a proposed O'Hare Airport runway expansion.

"We've thought about those kinds of things," said Bob Sell, referring to Lambert's problems.

The Loop attorney has dozens of relatives buried at St. Johannes Cemetery, which is targeted for relocation, along with tiny Resthaven Cemetery.

"The notion of someone going to the cemetery and putting a shovel to my family member is horrible. That something could go wrong in that process, it makes me sick to my stomach."

Like many homeowners in the proposed expansion zone, leaders of Resthaven and St. Johannes don't want to sell. One and perhaps both graveyards will fight the city in court, cemetery officials said.

The process, as of last Tuesday, is in a holding pattern because of a DuPage County judge's ruling in a different lawsuit. The judge ordered Chicago to halt land buys until it receives a state permit, something city officials believe is unnecessary and will appeal. Meanwhile, the city won't even be negotiating sales.

WHERE TO MOVE THE REMAINS

In another room Tuesday in another part of DuPage, a different aspect of the same thorny issue played out as two of the city's hired guns met for the first time with leaders of Resthaven to "open up the dialogue."

That's how Jeff Boyle—a former top aide to Mayor Daley now being paid $240 an hour as a no-bid consultant—portrayed the meeting at the Bensenville Community Public Library.

Resthaven president Lee Heinrich, vice president Bob Placek and their attorney said they were there to listen to Boyle and another consultant, Robert Merryman of O.R. Colan Associates.

Merryman—after Boyle nearly canceled the meeting because of the presence of a reporter and the lawyer—outlined several options, all of which involved the city buying the cemetery land.

"Let's start with the assumption that you have to go," he said softly, speaking in the consoling tones of a funeral director.

"The airport could simply purchase Resthaven and Resthaven is no more," he said.

The second possibility, he said, would be to "functionally replace Resthaven" by building "a new Resthaven" elsewhere.

Third, he said, the cemetery could be moved to another graveyard, where "a section can be Resthaven."

Headstones and monuments would go with the remains, the city would cover costs, and if some families wanted relatives reburied elsewhere, that would be fine, too, he said. Relatives could decide who "disinters and reinters the body," and help monitor the process, he said.

Merryman's company was involved in the Washington Park Cemetery relocation. The firm did not select the archaeologist facing the allegations of desecrating the remains and, in fact, was asked "to come and correct the situation," according to Chicago Aviation Department spokeswoman Monique Bond.

The firm also helped handle the "land acquisition aspects" of moving graves from Bridgeton Memorial Cemetery St. Louis, which currently is being excavated to make way for new and longer runways at Lambert, said Lambert spokesman Mike Donatt.

HOW A CEMETERY IS MOVED

Locating and moving remains can be a tough process, but it's one played out quite frequently for road, airport and other public works projects, said Randolph Richardson.

He owns Kentucky-based Richardson Corp., which does the physical part of relocating graves.

For big jobs, Richardson may bring in 15 workers in blue jeans and knee boots, and heavy equipment. After mapping a cemetery, a worker with a "probe rod" tries to gauge the depth of graves and directs a backhoe operator on how far to dig. "If the grave itself is 6 feet deep, you dig down around 4½ feet, and the rest of it is hand digging," he said.

"Say we've got a row of 50 graves, we'd start at the end with a backhoe, the man with the probe rod is guiding the backhoe to tell him how deep to go, we dig a trench to expose those 50 graves, that allows us to get the men in there to work," he said.

Bodies are placed in individual wooden boxes—there are several sizes—unless coffins are intact, he said, adding that his workers may get tetanus shots before a project because of old rusty nails.

Caskets are put on trucks and driven to their new resting place, he said. His company typically charges between $1,000 and $1,500 per body.

Richardson, whose firm relocated some of the bodies from St. Louis' Washington Park, recalls some of the trouble there, but insists things usually are more smooth.

GUARDS QUESTIONING VISITORS

Boyle and Chicago's first deputy aviation commissioner, John Harris, have said they want to handle their cemetery situation with dignity and sensitivity. But the city is having its own public relations headaches.

The cemeteries are outside Chicago's borders, but can only be reached by a city-owned access road monitored by city guards.

Twice this month, a guard approached a St. Johannes visitor at the cemetery, questioned the person and asked that they "sign in."

In the first instance, the visitor said, he was interrupted while praying at a grave site, and after refusing to sign in was met by five Chicago police cars on the access road. The visitor in the second case was the pastor of the church that owns St. Johannes.

Just before being confronted—on Wednesday, after the judge's ruling—the minister was surprised to find four O.R. Colan employees nosing around graves at St. Johannes, apparently taking down names from headstones, although they had no permission to be there.

"They said they were doing a study," Sell said. "They're trespassing on private property."

Merryman did not return phone calls. City officials were at a loss to explain.

But Roderick Drew, a spokesman for Daley, said Friday that there's been a "change in policy" that "nobody will have to sign in any more."

"Anybody who wants access to that cemetery during those posted hours will not be stopped, will not have to sign in," he said, adding that the sign-in "has turned out to be a much greater inconvenience to the people who access it."

NATIONAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS ASSOCIATION CHICAGO O'HARE TOWER,

Chicago, IL, Nov. 30, 2001.

Hon. PETER FITZGERALD,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

SENATOR FITZGERALD, as requested from your staff, I have summarized the most obvious concerns that air traffic controllers at O'Hare have with the new runway plans being considered by Mayor Daley and Governor Ryan. They are listed below along with some other comments.

1. The Daley and Ryan plans both have a set of east/west parallel runways directly north of the terminal and in close proximity to one another. Because of their proximity to each other (1200') the cannot be used simultaneously for arrivals. They can only be used simultaneously if one is used for departures and the other is used for arrivals, but only during VFR (visual flight rules), or good weather conditions. During IFR (instrument flight rules, ceiling below 1000' and visibility less than 3 miles) these runways cannot be used simultaneously at all. They basically must be operated as one runway for safety reasons. The same is true for the set of parallels directly south of the terminal; they too are only 1200' apart.

2. Both sets of parallel runways closest to the terminal (the ones referred to above) are all a minimum of 10,000' long. This creates a runway incursion problem, which is a very serious safety issue. Because of their length and position, all aircraft that land or depart O'Hare would be required to taxi across either one, or in some cases two runways to get to and from the terminal. This design flaw exists in both the Daley and the Ryan plan. A runway incursion is when an aircraft accidentally crosses a runway when another aircraft is landing or departing. They are caused by either a mistake or misunderstanding by the pilot or controller. Runway incursions have skyrocketed over the past few years and are on the NTSB's most wanted list of safety issues that need to be addressed. Parallel runway layouts create the potential for runway incursions; in fact the FAA publishes a pamphlet for airport designers and planners that urge them to avoid parallel runway layouts that force taxiing aircraft to cross active runways. Los Angeles International airport has lead the nation in runway incursions for several years. A large part of their incursion problem is the parallel runway layout; aircraft must taxi across runways to get to and from the terminals.

3. The major difference in Governor Ryan's counter proposal is the elimination of the southern most runway. If this runway were eliminated, the capacity of the new airport would be less than we have now during certain conditions (estimated at about 40% of the time). If you look at Mayor Daley's plan, it calls for six parallel east-west runways and two parallel northeast-southwest runways. The northeast-southwest parallels are left over from the current O'Hare layout. These two runways simply won't be usable in day-to-day operations because of the location of them (they are wedged in between, or pointed at the other parallels). We would not use these runways except when the wind was very strong (35 knots or above) which we estimate would be less than 1% of the time. That leaves the six east/west parallels for use in normal day-to-day operations. This is the same number of runways available and used at O'Hare today. If you remove the southern runway (Governor Ryan's counter proposal), you are leaving us five runways which is one less than we have now. That means less capacity than today's O'Hare during certain weather conditions. With good weather, you may get about the same capacity we have now. If this is the case, then why build it?

4. The Daley-Ryan plans call for the removal of the NW/SE parallels (Runways 32L and 32R). This is a concern because during the winter it is common to have strong winds out of the northwest with snow, cold temperatures and icy conditions. During these times, it is critical to have runways that point as close as possible into the wind. Headwinds mean slower landing speeds for aircraft, and they allow for the airplane to decelerate quicker after landing which is important when landing on an icy runway. Landing into headwinds makes it much easier for the pilot to control the aircraft as well. Without these runways, pilots would have to land on icy conditions during strong cross-wind conditions. This is a possible safety issue.

These are the four major concerns we have with the Daley-Ryan runway plans. There are many more minor issues that must be addressed. Amongst them are taxiway layouts, clear zones (areas off the ends of each runway required to be clear of obstructions), ILS critical areas (similar to clear zones, but for navigation purposes), airspace issues (how arrivals and departures will be funneled into these new runways) and all sorts of other procedural type issues. These kinds of things all have to go through various parts of the FAA (flight standards, airport certification etc.) eventually. These groups should have been involved with the planning portion from day one. Air traffic controllers at the tower are well versed on what works well with the current airport and what does not. We can provide the best advice on what needs to be accomplished to increase capacity while maintaining safety. It is truly amazing that these groups were not consulted in the planning of a new O'Hare. The current Daley-Ryan runway plans, if built as publicized, will do little for capacity and/or will create serious safety issues. This simply cannot happen. The fear is that the airport will be built, without our input, and then handed to us with expectations that we find a way to make it work. When it doesn't, the federal government (the FAA and the controllers) will be blamed for safety and delay problems.

Sincerely,

CRAIG BUREYCH,

Facility Representative, NATCA—O'Hare Tower.

RE: O'HARE AIRPORT EXPANSION/ST. JOHN'S UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE HYDE: From press reports, I understand that Governor Ryan and Mayor Daley have submitted to Congress their proposal for the expansion of O'Hare Airport, which will be the subject of hearings on Wednesday, March 6th. I also understand that you will be given the opportunity to testify at these hearings.

Although I am sure that you will cover many important issues in your testimony, our hope is that you will alert the other members of Congress to an additional issue that is of great importance to me, my family and the members of Churches within your District. This issue is the treatment of two religious cemeteries that stand in the path of the runways proposed by the City of Chicago and Governor Ryan (see attached maps).

The two cemeteries are St. Johannes Cemetery (which is owned and maintained by St. John's United Church of Christ) and Resthaven Cemetery (affiliated with the Methodist Church). Most people have never heard of these cemeteries, but they serve as the final resting place of some of the first Illinois pioneers, as well as many of their modern era descendants. These cemeteries have served this purpose for over 150 years, since their first Church members were laid to rest in the 1840's.

As an example, my great, great, great grandfather, Christian Dierking came to the United States in the 1840's when the land around O'Hare was wild land. He settled in land that is now occupied by O'Hare's United Airlines Terminal. One of my other great, great, great grandfathers, Henry Kolze and his brothers, William and Frederick also came to the area in the 1840's and were heavily involved in local Republican politics in the 1850's and 1860's. The Schiller Park Historical Society has reported that Abraham Lincoln once visited property owned by William Kolze during one of his election campaigns. Together, they and their families and neighbors constructed the first Church buildings.

These individuals, their descendants and an estimated 1600 other souls lie at rest at St. Johannes Cemetery, including some buried within the last year. Hundreds of others lie at rest at Resthaven Cemetery, including one buried in the last few months. These people were mayors, business owners, farmers, factory workers, soldiers and housewives. The Chicago Sun Times has also reported that those buried at Resthaven include members of the Potawatamie tribe. But, most importantly to us, they were mothers and fathers, grandmothers and grandfathers, brothers and sisters, and children.

Although the City of Chicago's and the Governor's proposals have mentioned the relocation of homes and businesses, they curiously have failed to mention the treatment of these sacred burial grounds. Unfortunately, Church members have received letters from the Governor's office confirming that completion of the expansion plan would require removal of the cemeteries, and the Chicago Sun Times has reported the City's confirmation of this fact. The Church, its members, and the families of members past and present are understandably upset.

It is my understanding that, pursuant to Illinois law, an active cemetery may not be removed without approval of the cemetery's owner. St. John's Church, and the caretakers of Resthaven Cemetery, have stated publicly and to State of Illinois officials that they will not provide this consent, and will exercise all available remedies to protect the sanctity of their hallowed ground. It may be that Representative Lipinski's and Senator Durbin's federal legislation seeks to preempt the foregoing Illinois statutes, just as it seeks to preempt other Illinois statutes that stand in the way of the O'Hare Plan. However, we would hope that they are not at the same time attempting to discard the fundamental religious protections offered by our Constitution.

We would appreciate it if you would enter this letter into the record, to provide this important information to those deliberating about the O'Hare Plan. On behalf of St. John's United Church of Christ, my family and the tens of thousands of family members of those at rest in these Cemeteries, thank you for your kind consideration and any assistance that you may be able to provide.

Very Truly Yours,

ROBERT J. SELL,

Elected Spokesman, St. John's United Church of Christ.

RE: PROPOSED FEDERAL LEGISLATION GRANTING
NEW POWERS TO THE CITY OF CHICAGO

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HYDE: As you know, I serve as the Albert E. Jenner Professor of Law at the University of Illinois Law School. I have authored a leading course book on Constitutional Law. In addition, I co-author, along with my colleague John Nowak, the widely-used multi-volume Treatise on Constitutional Law, published by West Publishing Company. In addition to my books, I have taught and researched in the area of Constitutional Law since 1974.

I have been asked to give my opinion on the constitutionality of proposed federal legislation entitled "National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act," identical versions of which have been introduced in both the Senate and the House of Representatives by Senator Durbin and Congressman Lipinski (S. 1786, HR 3479), hereafter the "Durbin-Lipinski legislation."

The Durbin-Lipinski legislation seeks to enact Congressional approval of a proposal to construct a major alteration of O'Hare Airport in Chicago. While this legislation focuses on Chicago and the State of Illinois, the issues raised by the legislation have serious constitutional implications for all 50 States.

There are two key components of the legislation that have been the subject of my examination.

First Section 3(a)(3) attempts to give the City of Chicago (a political subdivision and instrumentality of the State of Illinois) the legal power and authority to build a proposed major alteration of O'Hare even though state law does not authorize Chicago to build the alteration without first receiving a permit from the State of Illinois. Chicago, as a legal entity, is entirely a creation of state—not federal law—and Chicago's authority to build airports is essentially an exercise of state law power delegated to Chicago by the Illinois General Assembly.

The requirement that Chicago first obtain a state permit is an integral and essential element of that delegation of state power. The U.S. Constitution prohibits Congress (1) from invading and commandeering the exercise of state power to build airports, and (2) from changing the allocation of state-created power between the State of Illinois and its political subdivisions. The U.S. Constitution, in short, prohibits Congress from essentially rewriting state law dealing with the delegation of state power by eliminating the conditions, restrictions, and prohibitions imposed by the Illinois General Assembly on that delegation. These constitutional restrictions on Congress' power—which prohibit Congress from requiring states to change their state laws governing cities—are often termed Tenth Amendment restrictions.

Similarly, the provisions of Section 3(f) of the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation are necessarily conditioned upon the existence of state law authority of Chicago to enter into agreements for a third party (the FAA) to alter O'Hare without first obtaining a permit from the State of Illinois. But Chicago has no state law authority (under the delegation of state power to build and alter airports) to enter into an agreement to engage in a massive alteration of O'Hare without a state permit. Congress cannot confer powers on a political subdivision of a State where the State has expressly limited its delegation of state power to build airports to require a state permit. Congress has no constitutional authority to create powers in an instrumentality of State law (Chicago) when the very authority and power of Chicago to undertake the actions proposed by Congress depends on compliance with—and is contrary to—the mandates of the Illinois General Assembly.

For the reasons discussed below, it is my opinion that the proposed legislation is unconstitutional.

1. Under the governing United States Supreme Court decisions of New York v. United States and Printz v. United States, which are discussed below, the proposed legislation is not supported by any enumerated power and thus violates the limitations of the Tenth Amendment of the Constitution. In these decisions, the Supreme Court held that legislation passed by Congress, purportedly relying on its exercise of the Commerce Power (nuclear waste legislation in New York and gun control legislation in Printz) was unconstitutional because the federal laws essentially commandeered state law powers of the States as instrumentalities of federal policy.

2. The same constitutional flaws afflict the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation. Central to the Durbin-Lipinski legislation are two provisions [sections 3(a)(3) and 3(f)] that purport to empower or authorize Chicago (a political instrumentality of the State of Illinois, and thus a city that has no authority or even legal existence independent of state law) to undertake actions for which Chicago has not received any delegation of authority from the State of Illinois and that, in fact, are directly prohibited by Illinois law when the conditions and limitations of the State delegation of authority have not been satisfied.

3. Under Illinois law, Chicago (like any other political subdivision of a State) has no authority to undertake any activity (including constructing airports) without a grant of state authority from the State of Illinois. Under Illinois law, actions taken by political subdivisions of the State (e.g., Chicago) without a grant of authority from the State, or actions taken by a political subdivision in violation of the conditions, limitations or prohibitions imposed by the State in delegating the state authority, are plainly ultra vires, illegal, and unenforceable. The City of Chicago is a creature of state law, not federal law.

4. The power exercised by any state political subdivision (e.g., the power to construct airports) is in reality a power of the State—not inherent in the existence of the political subdivision. For the political subdivision to have the legal authority to exercise that state power, there must be a delegation of that state power by the State to the political subdivision. Further, it is axiomatic that any such delegation of state power to a political subdivision must be exercised in accordance with the conditions, limitations, and prohibitions accompanying the State's delegation of that power.

5. In the case of airport construction, the Illinois General Assembly has enacted a statute that delegated to Chicago (and other municipalities) the state law power to construct airports explicitly and specifically subject to certain limits and conditions that the General Assembly imposed. One basic requirement is that Chicago must first comply with all of the requirements of the Illinois Aeronautics Act—including the requirement that Chicago first receive a permit (a certificate of approval) from the State of Illinois. The Illinois General Assembly has expressly provided that municipal construction or alteration of an airport without such a state permit is unlawful and ultra vires.

6. Section 3(a)(3) of the Durbin-Lipinski legislation expressly authorizes Chicago to proceed with the "runway redesign plan" (a multi-billion dollar modification of O'Hare) without regard to the clear delegation limitations and prohibitions imposed by the Illinois General Assembly on the state statutory delegation to Chicago of the state law power to construct airports. Illinois law explicitly says Chicago has no state law authority to build or alter airports without first complying with the Illinois Aeronautics Act, including the state permitting requirements of §47 of that Act. Even though Chicago (a political creation and instrumentality of the State of Illinois) has no power to build or modify airports (a state law power) unless Chicago obtains State approval, Section 3(a)(3) purports to infuse Chicago (which has no legal existence independent of state law) with a federal power to build airports and to disregard Chicago's fundamental lack of power under state law to undertake such actions (absent compliance with state law). Like New York v. United States and Printz v. United States the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation involves Congress attempting to use a legal instrumentality of a State (i.e., the state power to build airports exercised through its delegated state-created instrumentality, the city of Chicago) as an instrument of federal power. As the Supreme Court held in New York and Printz, the Tenth Amendment—and the structure of "dual sovereignty" it represents under our constitutional structure of federalism—prohibits the federal government from using the Commerce power to conscript state instrumentalities as its agents.

7. Similar problems articulated in New York and Printz fatally afflict Section 3(f) of the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation. That section provides that, if (for whatever reason) construction of the "runway design plan" is not underway by July 1, 2004, then the FAA Administrator (a federal agency) shall construct the "runway redesign plan" as a "Federal Project". But, Section 3(f)(1) then provides that this "federal project" must obtain several agreements and undertakings from Chicago—agreements and undertakings that are controlled by state law, which limits Chicago's authority to enter into such agreements or accept such undertakings. Chicago has no authority under the state law (which confers upon Chicago the state power to construct airports) to enter into agreements with any third party (be it the United States or a private party) to make alterations of an airport without the state permit required by state statute. Thus, Chicago has no authority under state law to enter into an agreement with the FAA Administrator to have the runway redesign plan constructed by the federal government because Chicago has not received approval from the State of Illinois under the Illinois Aeronautics Act—a specific condition and prohibition of the delegation of state power (to build airports) to Chicago by the Illinois General Assembly. Just as Chicago (a creation and instrumentality of the State of Illinois) has no power or authority under state law (absent compliance with the Illinois Aeronautics Act) to enter into an agreement for the FAA to construct the runway redesign plan, Chicago also has no power or authority (absent compliance with the Illinois Aeronautics Act) to enter into the other agreements provided for in Section 3(f)(1)(B) of the Durbin-Lipinski legislation. Again, Section 3(f) is an attempt to have Congress use the Commerce power to conscript state instrumentalities as its agents. Instead of Congress regulating interstate commerce directly (which both New York v. United States and Printz allow), the Durbin-Lipinski legislation seeks to regulate how the State regulates one of its cities (which both New York v. United States and Printz do not allow).

8. The Durbin-Lipinski legislation is a law of "general application". There is a line of Supreme Court decisions which allow Congress to use the Commerce Power to impose obligations on the states when the obligations imposed on the States are part of laws which are "generally applicable" i.e., that impose obligations on the States and on private parties alike. See e.g., Reno v. Condon, 528 U.S. 141 (2000) (federal rule protecting privacy of drivers' records upheld because they do not apply solely to the State); South Carolina v. Baker, 485 U.S. 505 (1988) (state bond interest not immune from nondiscriminatory federal income tax); Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528, (1985) (law of general applicability, binding on States and private parties, upheld). But these cases have no application where, as here and in New York and Printz, the Congressional statute is not one of general application but is specifically directed at the States to use state law instrumentalities as tools to implement federal policy. Here the Durbin-Lipinski legislation is doubly unconstitutional, because it does not apply to private parties or even to all States but only to one State (Illinois) and its relationship to one city (Chicago). The Durbin-Lipinski legislation proposes to use Chicago (an instrumentality of state power whose authority to construct airports is an exercise of state power expressly limited and conditioned on that delegation by the Illinois legislature) as a federal instrumentality to implement federal policy. Congress is commandeering a state instrumentality of a single State (Illinois) against the express statutory will of the Illinois Legislature, which has refused to confer on Chicago (an instrumentality of the State) the state law power and authority to build airports unless Chicago first obtains a permit from the State of Illinois. This is an unconstitutional use of the Commerce Power under the holdings New York and Printz and does not fall within the "general applicability" line of cases such as Reno v. Condon, South Carolina v. Baker, and Garcia.

A. The Basic Legal Principles.

Cities are Creatures of the States and State Law—Not Instrumentalities of Federal Power. Normally, this controversy surrounding the proposed expansion of O'Hare Airport would be left to the state political process. Under Illinois law, the cities in this state have only the power that the State Constitution or the legislature grants to them, subject to whatever limits the State imposes. This legal principle has long been settled.

Nearly a century ago, the U.S. Supreme Court, in Hunter v. City of Pittsburgh, 207 U.S. 161, 28 S. Ct. 40, 52 L.Ed. 151 (1907) held that, under the U.S. Constitution, cities are merely creatures of the State and have only those powers that the State decides to give them, subject to whatever limits the States choose to impose:

This court has many times had occasion to consider and decide the nature of municipal corporations, their rights and duties, and the rights of their citizen and creditors. [Citations omitted.] It would be unnecessary and unprofitable to analyze these decisions or quote from the opinions rendered. We think the following principles have been established by them and have become settled doctrines of this court, to be acted upon whenever they are applicable. Municipal corporations are political subdivisions of the state, created as convenient agencies for exercising such of the governmental powers of the state as may be [e]ntrusted to them. . . . The number, nature, and duration of the powers conferred upon these corporations and the territory over which they shall be exercised rests in the absolute discretion of the state. . . . The state, therefore, at its pleasure, may modify or withdraw all such powers, may take without compensation such property, hold it itself, or vest it in other agencies, expand or contract the territorial area, unite the whole or a part of it with another municipality, repeal the charter and destroy the corporation. All this may be done, conditionally or unconditionally, with or without the consent of the citizens, or even against their protest. In all these respects the state is supreme, and its legislative body, conforming its action to the state Constitution, may do as it will unrestrained by any provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Hunter held that a State that simply takes the property of municipalities without their consent and without just compensation did not violate due process. While Hunter is an old case, it still is the law, and the Seventh Circuit recently quoted with approval the language reprinted here.

The Illinois Aeronautics Act Expressly Limits Chicago's Power to Build and Alter. The State of Illinois has delegated to Chicago the power to build and alter airports. But that power is expressly limited by the requirement that Chicago must comply with the Illinois Aeronautics Act. And the Illinois Aeronautics Act provides that Chicago has no power to make "any alteration" to an airport unless it first obtains a permit, a "certificate of approval," from the State of Illinois. Finally, Chicago has not obtained this certificate of approval. That fact is what has led to the proposed federal intervention.

B. The Federation Problem

As mentioned above, section 3(a)(3) of the proposed federal law overrides the licensing requirements of §47 of the Illinois Aeronautics Act. This section states:

(3) The State shall not enact or enforce any law respecting aeronautics that interferes with, or has the effect of interfering with, implementation of Federal policy with respect to the runway redesign plan including sections 38.01, 47, and 48 of the Illinois Aeronautics Act.

In addition, section 3(f) authorizes Chicago to enter into an agreement with the federal government to construct the O'Hare Airport expansion. This project is called a "Federal project," but Chicago must agree to construct the "runway redesign as a Federal Project," and Chicago provides the necessary land, easements, etc., "without cost to the United States."

What this proposed legislation does is authorize the City of Chicago to implement an airport expansion approved by the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration. But, under state law, Chicago cannot expand O'Hare because it does not have the required state permit.

There is no doubt that the O'Hare Airport is a means of interstate commerce, and Congress may certainly impose various rules and regulations on airports, including O'Hare. Congress, for example, may decide to require airport security and require that the security agents be federal employees. Or, Congress could provide that it would build and takeover the O'Hare Airport and construct expansion if the State of Illinois refused to do so.

Congress may also use its spending power to take land by eminent domain and then construct or expand an airport, no matter what the state law provides. The limits on the spending clause are few.

But, the proposed law does not take such alternatives. It does not impose regulations on airports in general, nor does it exercise the very broad federal spending power. Nor does the proposed law authorize the federal government take over ownership and control of O'Hare Airport. Instead, it seeks to use an instrumentally of state power (i.e., the state law power to build airports as delegated to a state instrumentality, the city of Chicago) as an exercise of federal power.

The proposed federal law is stating that it is creating a federal authorization or empowerment to the City of Chicago to do that which state law provides that Chicago may not do—expand O'Hare Airport without comply with state laws that create the City of Chicago and delegate to it certain limited powers that can be exercised only if within the limits of the authorizing state legislation.

New York v. United States. The proposed federal law is very similar to the law that the Supreme Court invalidated a decade ago in New York v. United States. The law that New York invalidated singled out states for special legislation and regulated the states' regulation of interstate commerce. The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation singles out a State (Illinois) for special legislation and regulates that State's regulation of interstate commerce dealing with O'Hare Airport.

While the law in this area has shifted a bit over the last few decades, it is now clear that Congress can use the Interstate Commerce Clause to impose various burdens on States as long as those laws are "generally applicable." The federal law may not single out the state for special burdens. For example, Congress may impose a minimum wage on state employees in, or affecting, interstate commerce as long as Congress imposes the same minimum wage requirements on non-state workers in, or affecting, interstate commerce. Congress can regulate the States using the Commerce Clause if it imposes requirements on the States that are generally applicable—that is, if it imposes the same burdens on private employers. Congress cannot single out the States for special burdens; it cannot commandeer or take control over the states or order a state legislature to increase the home rule powers of the City of Chicago; it cannot enact federal legislation that adds to or revises Chicago's state created and limited delegated powers.

The leading case, New York v. United States, held that the Commerce Clause does to authorize the Federal Government to conscript state governments as its agents. "Where a federal interest is sufficiently strong to cause Congress to legislate, it must do so directly; it may not conscript state governments as its agents. The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation will do exactly what New York prohibits it will conscript the City of Chicago as its agent and interfere with the relationship between the State of Illinois and the entity it created, the City of Chicago.

New York invalidated a legislative provision that is strikingly similar to the proposed federal Durbin-Lipinski legislation. The Court, in the New York case, considered the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Amendments Act of 1985. Congress was concerned with a shortage of disposal sites for low level radioactive waste. The transfer of waste from one State to another is obviously interstate commerce. Congress, in order to deal with the waste disposal problem, crafted a complex statute with three parts, only one of which was unconstitutional. There were a series of monetary incentives, which the Court unanimously upheld under Congress' broad spending powers. Congress also authorized States that adopted radioactive waste and storage disposal guidelines to bar waste imported from States that had not adopted certain storage and disposal programs. The Court, again unanimously, relied on long-settled precedent that approves of Congress creating such trade barriers in interstate commerce.

Then the Court turned to the "take title" provisions and held (six to three) that they were unconstitutional. The "take title" provision in effect required a State to enact certain regulations and, if the State did not do so, it must (upon the request of the waste's generator or owner), take title to and possession of the waste and become liable for all damage suffered by the generator or owner as a result of the State's failure to promptly take possession.

The Court explained that Congress could, if it wished, preempt entirely state regulation in this area and take over the radioactive waste problem. But Congress could not order the States to change their regulations in this area. Congress lacks the power, under the Constitution, to regulate the State's regulation of interstate commerce. That is what the proposed federal O'Hare Airport bill will do: it will regulate the State's regulation of interstate commerce by telling the State that it must act as if the City of Chicago has complied with the Illinois Aeronautics Act and other state rules.

In a nutshell, Congress cannot constitutionally commandeer the legislative or executive branches. The Court pointed out that this commandeering is not only unconstitutional (because nothing in our Constitution authorizes it) but also bad policy, because federal commandeering serves to muddy responsibility, undermine political accountability, and increase federal power.

The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation prohibits Illinois from applying its laws regulating one of its cities. The proposed federal law also authorizes the federal government to make an agreement with Chicago, pursuant to which Chicago will assume some significant obligations, even though present state law gives Chicago no authority to engage in this activity. As the six to three New York decision made clear:

A State may not decline to administer the federal program. No matter which path the State chooses, it must follow the direction of Congress. . . . No other federal statute has been cited which offers a state government no option other than that of implementing legislation enacted by Congress. Whether one views the take this provision as lying outside Congress' enumerated powers, or as infringing upon the core of state sovereignty reserved by the Tenth Amendment, the provision is inconsistent with the Federal structure of our Government established by the Constitution.

The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation is very much like the law that six justices invalidated in New York. The O'Hare bill provides that, no matter what the State chooses, "it must follow the direction of Congress." The State has "no option other than that of implementing legislation enacted by Congress."

The Court in New York went on to explain that there are legitimate ways that Congress can impose its will on the states:

This is not to say that Congress lacks the ability to encourage a State to regulate in a particular way, or that Congress may not hold out incentives to the States as a method of influencing a State's policy choices. Our cases have identified a variety of methods, short of outright coercion, by which Congress may urge a State to adopt a legislative program consistent with federal interests. Two of these methods are of particular relevance here.

The Court then discussed those two alternatives. First, there is the spending power, with Congress attaching conditions to the receipt of federal funds. The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation rejects the spending power alternative. Second, "where Congress has the authority to regulate private activity under the Commerce Clause, we have recognized Congress' power to offer States the choice of regulating that activity according to federal standards or having state law preempted by federal regulation." The proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation rejects that alternative as well. It does not propose that Congress directly takeover and expand O'Hare Airport. Instead, it proposes that the City of Chicago be allowed to exercise power that the State does not allow the City to exercise.

New York v. United States did not question "the authority of Congress to subject state governments to generally applicable laws." But Congress cannot discriminate against the States and place on them special burdens. It cannot commandeer or command state legislatures or executive branch officials to enforce federal law. Congress can regulate interstate commerce and States are not immune from such regulation just because they are States. For example, Congress can forbid employers from hiring child labor to work in coal mines, whether a private company or a State owns the coal mine and employs the workers.

Printz v. United States. Following the New York decision, the Court invalidated another federal statute imposing certain administrative duties on local law enforcement officials, in Printz v. United States. The Brady Act, for a temporary period of time, required local law enforcement officials to use "reasonable efforts" to determine if certain gun sales were lawful under federal law. The federal law also "empowered" these local officers to grant waivers of the federally prescribed 5-day waiting period for handgun purchases. Note that the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation will also "empower" the City of Chicago to do that which Illinois does not authorize the city to do.

To make the analogy even more compelling, the chief law enforcement personal suing in the Printz case said that state law prohibited them from undertaking these federal responsibilities. That, of course, is the exact position in which Chicago finds itself. State law prohibits Chicago from entering into and committing to these federal responsibilities (e.g., the agreements between Chicago and the FAA in §3(f) of the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation call for construction as a "federal project" but then require Chicago to either construct or allow construction without a permit from the State of Illinois).

We should realize that the proposed Durbin-Lipinski legislation—in commanding and singling out the State of Illinois to, in effect, repeal its legislation governing the powers delegated to the City of Chicago—is quite unusual and not at all in the tradition of federal legislation. For most of our history, Congress would explicitly only "recommend" or "request" the assistance of the governors and state legislatures in implementing federal policy. It is only in very recent times that Congress has sought explicitly to commandeer or order the legislature and executive branches of the States to implement federal policies. Because such federal legislative activity is recent, the case law in this area is recent, but the case law is clear in prohibiting this type of federal assertion of power.

New York v. United States held that Congress cannot "command a State government to enact state regulation." Congress may regulate interstate commerce directly, but it may not "regulate state governments' regulation of interstate commerce." The Federal Government may not "conscript state governments as its agents." Congress has the "power to regulate individuals, not States."

In short, there are important limits on the power of the federal government to commandeer the state legislature or state executive branch officials for federal purposes. Another way to think about this issue, is that, to a certain extent, the Constitution forbids Congress from imposing what recently have been called "unfunded mandates" on state officials. Congress cannot simply order the States or state officials or a city to take care of a problem. Congress can use its spending power to persuade the States by using the carrot instead of the stick.

While there are those who have attacked the restrictions that New York v. United States have imposed on the Federal Government, it is worth remembering the line-up of the Court in Maryland v. Wirtz when the justices first considered this issue. That case rejected the applicability of the Tenth Amendment and held that it was constitutional for Congress to set the wages, hours, and working conditions of employees, including state employees in interstate commerce. However, Justice Douglas, who was joined by Justice Stewart, dissented. Douglas found the law to be a "serious invasion of state sovereignty protected by the Tenth Amendment" and "not consistent with our constitutional federalism." He objected that Congress, using the broad commerce power, could "virtually draw up each State's budget to avoid 'disruptive effect[s]' on interstate commerce. New York v. United States prevents this result.

The "generally applicable" restriction is important, and it explains Reno v. Condon. Congress enacted the Driver's Privacy Protection Act (DPPA), which limited the ability of the States to sell or disclose a driver's personal information to third parties without the driver's consent. Chief Justice Rehnquist, for a unanimous Court, upheld the law as a proper regulation of interstate commerce and not violating any principles of federalism found in New York v. United States or Printz because the law was "generally applicable."

Reno grew out of a congressional effort to protect the privacy of drivers' records. As a condition of obtaining a driver's license or registering a car, many States require drivers to provide personal information, such as name, address, social security number, medical information, and a photograph. Some States then sell this personal information to businesses and individuals, generating significant revenue. To limit such sales, Congress enacted the DPPA, which governs any state department of motor vehicles (DMV), or state officer, employee, or contractor thereof, and any resale or re-disclosure of drivers' personal information by private persons who obtain the information from a state DMV. The Court concluded: "The DPPA's provisions do not apply solely to States." Private parties also could not buy the information for certain prohibited purposes nor could they resell the information to other parties for prohibited purposes, and the States could not sell the information to the private parties for certain purposes if the private parties could not buy it for those purposes.

Unlike the law in New York, the Court concluded that the DPPA does not control or regulate the manner in which States regulate private parties, it does not require the States to regulate their own citizens, and it does not require the state legislatures to enact any laws or regulations. Unlike the law in Printz, the DPPA does not require state officials to assist in enforcing federal statutes regulating private individuals. This DMV information is an article of commerce and its sale or release into the interstate stream of business is sufficient to support federal regulation.

The DPPA is a "generally applicable" federal law regulating commerce because it regulates the universe of entities that participate as suppliers to the market for motor vehicle information—the states as initial suppliers and the private resellers or redisclosers of this information. "South Carolina has not asserted that it does not participate in the interstate market for personal information. Rather, South Carolina asks that the DPPA be invalidated in its entirety, even as applied to the States acting purely as commercial sellers."

CONCLUSION

The proposed federal law dealing with the O'Hare Airport expansion is most likely unconstitutional because it imposes federal rules on the relationship between a city and the State that created the city. It subjects Illinois to special burdens that are not generally applicable to private parties or even to other States. It authorizes the City of Chicago to do that which Illinois now prohibits.

There is no escape from the conclusion that the proposed federal law does not regulate the behavior of private parties in interstate commerce. It does not subject the State of Illinois to "generally applicable" legislation. Instead, Congress is regulating the state's regulation of interstate commerce. Congress may not conscript the instrumentalities of state government and state power as tools of federal power. The case law is clear that Congress does not have the power.

Sincerely,

RONALD D. ROTUNDA,

The Albert E. Jenner, Jr. Professor of Law.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO), the chairman of the Committee on Small Business, another bipartisan supporter of this legislation.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3479, the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act. I want to thank the gentlemen from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) and (Mr. LIPINSKI) and other members of the Illinois delegation and the surrounding region for their hard work in coming to an agreement on this legislation.

O'Hare serves as the main hub for the Nation's two largest commercial airlines, and expansion is without a doubt going to be a tremendous benefit to travelers and businesses in the northern Illinois area, as well as the Nation.

What I particularly appreciate about this legislation is that it acknowledges the role of other regional airports, especially the Greater Rockford Airport, and the role it can have in helping to alleviate congestion at O'Hare. This legislation clearly states how important it is for the FAA to consider existing infrastructure when constructing a plan to streamline traffic through O'Hare. With a runway that can land virtually any jet today at a distance of only 1 hour's drive from Chicago, Rockford Airport stands ready to immediately supplement traffic congestion at O'Hare during construction or in the future.

The efficiency of our Nation's air travel is ready for a dramatic upgrade in the Chicago area, and this bill is a critical step in addressing that need. I urge my colleagues to support its passage today.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. VISCLOSKY).

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 3479, the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act.

First, I am a supporter of increased airport capacity for the Chicago metropolitan area, and I commend the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) and the leadership of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure for achieving this equitable regional solution that will help relieve air congestion in our Nation and the Chicago region.

Second, increasing air capacity in the Chicago metropolitan area is a national concern and not just a Chicago or an Illinois problem. Air congestion is also a regional problem and it demands a regional answer. I happen to believe that the Gary/Chicago Airport has a role in helping solve the air traffic congestion problems facing the region and Nation. H.R. 3479 provides full consideration for expansion and improvement projects at the Gary/Chicago Airport.

I have worked in this body for my entire career to modernize and improve the Gary/Chicago Airport. It can play an increasingly valuable role in delivering passenger and cargo service to the area. Last year, the FAA approved the Gary/Chicago Airport's 20-year master plan. The master plan outlines the airport's existing facilities and ability to handle air traffic growth and economic forecasts.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3479 would guarantee that the Gary/Chicago Airport would be considered for growth and needed improvements, which will enhance its role as the Chicago airport.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to yield 6 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER).

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, it is interesting what we have before us today. Usually Suspension Calendar legislation is noncontroversial; but today we have a proposal which most people say only affects Illinois, so most Members may not be paying attention to it. But I think it is important to note that this legislation splits the Illinois delegation right down the middle.

I stand in opposition to this legislation, and I also urge my colleagues to vote against this legislation with the hope that it is defeated and that the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure will revisit this legislation and produce legislation that truly recognizes the bipartisan agreement between Mayor Daley and Governor Ryan.

I support O'Hare expansion, and I support a third airport at Peotone. As we all know, air travel will double in the coming decade. O'Hare and Midway Airports are at capacity. We need to rebuild and modernize O'Hare, and we need to build the South Suburban Airport near Peotone.

Governor Ryan and Mayor Daley entered into a historic agreement last year which would provide for the reconfiguration and expansion of Chicago O'Hare and the development of the Chicago South Suburban Airport located near Peotone, Illinois. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) introduced legislation which would originally have codified this agreement into law, modernizing O'Hare and pushing development of a south suburban airport. I had originally hoped to cosponsor and support this legislation, if it truly reflected the integrity of the agreement between the Governor and the mayor.

However, I would note that that is not the bill that is before us today. It is also important to note that the Governor of Illinois does not support this bill in its current form. In fact, Mr.

Speaker, the bill that is before us today is only a fragment of the original legislation and represents none of the compromise that was reached between the Governor and the mayor. Rather, the legislation that is proposed before us today is an attempt to force the Congress to take an unprecedented step in mandating that Chicago O'Hare be rebuilt, as the mayor demanded, while completely ignoring the Governor's side of the agreement, the Governor's side of the agreement that a south suburban airport should also be built. As such, the Governor of Illinois, as I noted earlier, does not support this bill in its current form and as it is currently written.

We ask that language moving for the construction of a south suburban third airport be added to this legislation.

This legislation breaks the agreement of the mayor and the Governor, as I have noted here in my chart. There is nothing in this legislation that reflects the agreement to promote the development of a south suburban airport.

This legislation takes away Illinois State's rights, and it undercuts the authority of the State of Illinois to make its own decisions regarding air travel. The legislation completely ignores the needs of the south suburbs of Chicago, where 2.5 million Illinois residents live within 45 minutes of the proposed airport site.

Additionally, I would note that failure to develop Peotone will short-change the entire Chicago region by forfeiting almost 250,000 new jobs.

Unfortunately, H.R. 3479 does not pay heed to the studies that since the 1980s have consistently shown that Chicago, our region, and the Nation will have aviation gridlock in the near future, and that the best solution is a south suburban third airport. The Governor and mayor recognized these studies when they reached their agreement this past year.

Nevertheless, the bill imposes a Federal solution on a State problem and does not have the full support of the entire delegation, nor the people of Illinois, who are most impacted. In fact, the four Members of the Illinois delegation most impacted in their own districts by H.R. 3479 stand in opposition today, the gentlemen from Illinois, Mr. CRANE, Mr. HYDE, Mr. JACKSON, and myself.

Mr. Speaker, I support Chicago O'Hare, and I believe that it needs to be expanded and modernized to be a safer airport with more capacity; but expanding O'Hare alone will not solve the capacity needs of the future. Even with the development of a south suburban airport, O'Hare could still expect a 40 percent increase in passenger load. Air travel is expected to double in the next 10 to 15 years.

Expanding O'Hare will take 12 to 15 years, and we cannot land an airplane while we are pouring concrete. The South Suburban Airport at Peotone could be expanding capacity and up and running in 4 to 5 years as a complement to O'Hare expansion. However, this legislation stifles any development of the South Suburban Airport and keeps Chicago aviation gridlocked for the next decade.

Aviation is a key part of our economy for Chicago and our Nation. We must expand our capacity to accommodate the growth in aviation by building a third airport in Chicago's south suburbs, as well as expanding O'Hare. H.R. 3479 fails this goal and should be defeated.

I urge my colleagues to join me by voting "no" and asking the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure to produce a bill that reflects the historic agreement between Mayor Daley and Governor Ryan, working towards building a south suburban third airport as well as expansion of O'Hare.

Again, the legislation before us today breaks the bipartisan agreement between Governor Ryan and Mayor Daley. I ask for a "no" vote.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the ranking member of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, and the former chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding such an abundance of time to me. I especially want to compliment the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) for the hours and weeks of time he has personally dedicated to mediating between the City of Chicago and the State of Illinois, and working to bring us the legislation that is before the House today.

Mr. Speaker, when President John F. Kennedy dedicated O'Hare Airport in 1963, he said, "There is no other airport in the world that serves so many people and so many airplanes. This is an extraordinary airport. It could be classed as one of the wonders of the world."

Mr. Speaker, the pulse of national and international air travel remains dependent on O'Hare today, as it did when opened in 1963; but few would suggest that today it is that wonder of the world. It is simply failing to meet the capacity demands put on this airport by the extraordinary increase in air travel throughout world, as well as throughout our own Nation.

Delays at O'Hare ricochet around the world. They reverberate as far away as Frankfurt, Germany; London's Heathrow Airport; Tokyo's Narita Airport; and elsewhere around the United States. A weather delay in Chicago means business travelers inbound from the European continent or the Pacific Rim are delayed, either at their point of origin or en route.

This airport is truly an extraordinary facility in the world of aviation. It is our Nation's premier airport. It is the crown jewel of aviation in the United States, but it cannot continue to serve that role in its current configuration.

When I met with the mayor and the staff, the professional staff of the O'Hare International Airport operation over 1½ years ago to discuss their plans for expansion, I was greatly impressed with the proposals for reconfiguring this airport that would result in a 4,300-foot separation between two groups of parallel runways, the addition of an entirely new runway, and for operational improvements that would reduce reductions in operations by 95 percent in bad weather, and overall reduce delays by almost 80 percent.

That is an extraordinary improvement in aviation service and will result in untold benefits, benefits we can only estimate today, but that will run into the billions of dollars over the years and more than justify the cost of the investments needed to make these improvements.

There has been a good deal of discussion throughout the proposal when it was first surfaced over a year ago about whose responsibility it is to build this airport and what should be the role of the State. There has been, let us be candid about it, a great deal of conflict between the city and the State, not only on O'Hare Airport, but on, as Mayor Daley testified at our committee hearings, on such matters as transit improvements, on highway improvements, where the State repeatedly has vetoed City of Chicago plans to expand, improve, and deal with its infrastructure needs.

The gentleman from Illinois, working with the city and the State, attempted to resolve the complexities through the channeling process, whereby the city must channel its request for FAA approval through the State of Illinois; but over time, contrary to best hopes and expectations, that proved to be very difficult.

The city and the State came up with a plan that initially I found to be unacceptable because it would be violative of national aviation policy. Over months of negotiations, the two parties, the State and the city, have come to an agreement. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), our ranking member on the Subcommittee on Aviation, served as a midwife and attending physician, caregiver and nurturer of all good things. I think it has really come to fruition here.

The National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act, H.R. 3479, will facilitate projects to enhance capacity in the Chicago area, including major expansion of Chicago O'Hare Airport, our Nation's second-busiest airport and the third-most delayed. As I noted previously, the City of Chicago, which runs the airport, has proposed development that it estimates will improve O'Hare's operations in optimal conditions by 79 percent and in less-than-optimal conditions by 95 percent, while making quantum leaps in O'Hare annual capacity. The proposal, which involves one new runway and reconfiguration of the seven existing runways, is predicted to more than double O'Hare's annual enplanements, from 31 million to 76 million, and to allow the airport to handle 1.6 million annual operations, compared with the current level of less than 1 million.

Under this legislation, the State of Illinois will be preempted from using unique provisions of state law to prevent the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) from even considering the expansion and reconfiguration of O'Hare airport. The preemption provision is narrowly crafted to preempt the unique provisions of the Illinois Aeronautics Act, which for years have been used to delay any consideration of expanding O'Hare.

When H.R. 3479 was introduced, I was extremely concerned with the provisions that crafted preferences or exemptions for the O'Hare and Peotone projects from: (1) the federal and state National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) processes, (2) the Clean Air Act, (3) and the need to compete with other airports, on a merit basis, for the limited Airport Improvement Program (AIP) funding available.

The Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, however, accepted an amendment offered by Mr. Lipinski that makes it clear that O'Hare-related projects will not receive any preference in seeking funds from the Airport Improvement Program. The amendment only allows the City of Chicago to submit to the FAA a request for AIP funds for the planning and construction of O'Hare airport, without the prior approval of the State of Illinois. FAA will use its best professional judgment to determine whether the projects should be funded under the criteria used to evaluate applications for AIP grants.

The bill makes it clear that any application submitted by the City of Chicago for the expansion of O'Hare must be evaluated under all applicable federal laws and regulations, including the federal NEPA process. In addition, it requires that proposals for the construction or expansion of Peotone, Gary/Chicago, and Greater Rockford airports should be evaluated on the same basis as any other airport project.

The bill also addresses my main concern with the Clean Air Act provision in the introduced bill. I believed that under the introduced bill, the people of Illinois would lose the right to decide which emissions should be curtailed to meet the Clean Air Act's requirements.

The reported bill requires the State to follow its usual and customary practices for accounting for, and regulating emissions associated with, airport activities. The bill prevents the State from deviating from customary practices to interfere with construction of a runway at O'Hare airport or the south suburban airport. The FAA can request a review by the Federal Environmental Protection Agency to ensure that the State has followed its customary practices. The bill also prohibits the FAA from approving the O'Hare runway design plan unless FAA determines that the construction and the operations at the airport will include best management practices to mitigate emissions.

In sum, the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act of 2002 ensures that the unique provisions of Illinois law will not stand in the way of the O'Hare redesign project, while at the same time, O'Hare will not have unfair advantage in competing for scarce AIP funds; and environmental laws will not be short-circuited.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to speak on one point. It has been mentioned here on the floor that the Governor is not in favor of this legislation. I spoke to the Governor Friday afternoon, and he is still in favor of this legislation.

Now, if he changed his mind over the weekend, I cannot attest to that; but as of last Friday, he was in favor of this particular piece of legislation. I have read nothing in the newspaper, saw nothing on television, or heard nothing on the radio that he has changed his position.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I thank the gentleman for that addition. That has been our understanding on our side on a bipartisan basis, that the Governor is in support.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to point out that cities were the first to champion airports; States came along much later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin). The time of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) has expired.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have 2 additional minutes for himself and 2 minutes to our side as well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON) asking for equal distribution of minutes for each side?

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Yes, 2 minutes for each side.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make that 5 minutes for each side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, each side is distributed an additional 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) will have an additional 5 minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) will have an additional 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON) will have an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have 8 minutes now available to me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) and ask unanimous consent that he control that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR).

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON) for his request and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) for yielding that additional time to me.

Mr. Speaker, in the early years of aviation, with cities that first built airports, only later did States come. As late as 1958, only seven States provided financial assistance and support for airport construction. It was in the 1940s, long before the State of Illinois ever got into the business of supporting airports, that the Chicago City Council looked into the crystal ball and saw that the future was aviation and had the foresight to buy orchard fields and an additional 7,000 acres to build O'Hare.

On the matter of constitutionality, I just want to point out, and I was concerned about this, we inquired with the John Paul Stephens professor of law at Northwestern University, Professor Thomas Merrill, to get his opinion on the constitutionality. His view is that "the Illinois Aeronautics Act was not protected by the Tenth Amendment. The Illinois Aeronautics Act is unique. Regulation aviation capacity cannot be deemed a core or traditional State function that might be protected by the Tenth Amendment. This legislation does not require the State of Illinois to proactively regulate its citizens, it merely prohibits the State of Illinois from interfering with the city of Chicago's ability to expand capacity at O'Hare."

Mr. Speaker, I think that clearly this legislation is within the authority of the Congress. It is in the public interest. It is necessary to resolve a deadlock between the State of Illinois and the City of Chicago. It was requested by the State of Illinois. It was sought by the City of Chicago, which has the primary responsibility for airport construction, and has nurtured O'Hare Airport into the world's premier facility that it is and represents today.

We are talking here not just about this airport, but we are talking about service to the entire Nation, facilitating air service to smaller communities as well as large communities, and service to the world.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE).

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to the so-called National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act of 2002. If enacted into law, this measure would not accomplish the goal that most Americans have in mind, namely, a reduction in air traffic congestion as quickly and cheaply as it can be accomplished. To the contrary, it would mean years of waiting for relief, expenditures far in excess of those associated with other more effective alternatives, and the establishment of a troublesome precedent that could come back to haunt other airports around the Nation in the future.

This legislation mandates the addition of one runway at Chicago's O'Hare Airport and the reconfiguration of O'Hare's existing runways. State law, local objections, noise problems, pollution threats, cost considerations, condemnation proceedings, safety concerns, ongoing litigation, and the fate of two cemeteries notwithstanding.

Worse yet, the measure, the total cost of which is likely to far exceed the $6.6 billion price tag, in fact, it has been estimated to be more in the neighborhood of 12 billion to $15 billion that has been associated with it, conveniently overlooks the fact that there are at least three other ways, such as making greater use of the greater Rockford Airport, which has a runway of over 10,000 feet, the second largest runway in the State, and it can relieve O'Hare's air traffic congestion problems almost immediately.

Not only that, but all of these alternatives can be implemented less expensively and/or more quickly than the ill-conceived plan to expand O'Hare.

Furthermore, this legislation poses a threat to people who live near many other airports in this country because it will set a precedent for Federal government preemption of State and/or local laws governing airport planning and development.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote against H.R. 3479. It is a prescription for mischief that bodes ill, not just for the residents of Chicago's northwest suburbs, but for millions of other Americans as well.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin). The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON) has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard some arguments about the constitutionality of this act, this unprecedented act of Congress. But in New York v. The United States, the Supreme Court was really clear. The Framers, they said, explicitly chose a Constitution that confers upon Congress the power to regulate individuals, not States. We have always understood that even where Congress has the authority under the Constitution to pass laws requiring or prohibiting certain acts, it lacks the power to directly compel the States to prohibit those acts, New York v. The United States.

Printz v. The United States: It is uncontested that the Constitution established a system of "dual sovereignty." And Federalist No. 39: Although the States surrendered many of their powers to the new Federal Government, they retained "a residuary and inviolable sovereignty," Federalist No. 39.

Mr. Speaker, that brings us to, from my perspective, the Printz decision. You heard some of the economic arguments about 47 States going through O'Hare Airport and the implications of that. This is about process and it is about doing it right. In Printz, the court went on to emphasize that this constitutional structural barrier to the Congress intruding on a State's sovereignty could not be avoided by claiming, A, that the Congressional authority was pursuant to the Commerce Power. All of the economic arguments are irrelevant, according to Printz v. The United States; and, B, that the Federal law preempted the State law under the supremacy clause. Even the supremacy clause arguments of Congress are not unavailable. And last I checked, the majority on the current Supreme Court are the same majority that decided Printz. And unless they are willing to overturn Printz, this piece of legislation before us, Mr. Speaker, is unconstitutional, which raises the next point.

Because this is likely heading to Federal court, we are not going to solve the national aviation capacity problem any time soon, which is why we need a faster, cheaper, safer solution of expanding aviation capacity for our Nation's aviation system. That can be accomplished, not with a 13 to $15 billion, 20-year project at O'Hare Airport; it is accomplishable by building a third airport in Peotone, Illinois, which my colleagues who have risen today aptly support.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, the majority will close.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on International Relations.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) has 4 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) has 3 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON) has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that my disdain for this legislation is in reverse ratio to my admiration for the chief sponsors, the gentlemen from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), (Mr. KIRK), who are splendid legislators. They are just wrong on this bill. So I want to make that clear.

First of all, I just want to appeal to your common sense. I know this is a big deal. You want to add additional flights, nearly doubling already the busiest airport in the world. That is a big deal. We are talking about a lot of money. And when you talk about a lot of money, people's ears perk up. But we are also talking about so much space in the sky. You can keep condemning people's homes and their cemeteries and get bigger and bigger, and I do not understand why a Republican would put an imprimatur on transferring local authority; and this should be a local decision. When I say local, I do not mean the Governor. I mean the legislature, the people's body. That is what the Illinois Aeronautics Act says. We shred that and throw it away?

The Illinois Aeronautics Act gives the legislature or expresses the will of the legislature on this issue; and that requires permission from the legislature to expand this airport. But you are just riding roughshod over that, saying if we cannot get that, we will go to Congress.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI).

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman refers to the State legislature in the Illinois Aeronautics Act. It is my understanding reading it and talking to other people about it that the Illinois legislature is not involved in the process at the present time. It is exclusively the Governor's office with its arbitrary veto power and then the Department of Transportation which he controls on the channeling acts. The legislature is not involved in the process at the present time.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON).

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, is it the gentleman's contention then that a governor who is essentially not running for reelection is under an obligation to enter into an agreement and, therefore, obligate this Congress and future governors to a piece of legislation that future governors cannot alter? Is that the gentleman's position?

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am saying my position is simply expressing to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) what my understanding is of the Aeronautics Act in the State of Illinois. The legislature is not involved.

Mr. HYDE. Reclaiming my time, I would suggest if we are going to prolong this seminar on the law, that we do it on the gentleman's time.

Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out that there is only so much space in the sky. And when you already have the busiest airport, and busiest does not mean people walking into Starbucks. It means planes coming in and taking off.

I sit in my living room in the evening and look out and I see them stretched all the way up to Wisconsin, plane, plane, plane, waiting to come in.

Of course, there are delays. There will always be delays at O'Hare because we have terrible weather in the winter and the airlines schedule too many flights. That is what happens and that needs to be corrected. But to double the size of O'Hare, the flights in and out of O'Hare, is really dangerous. It is dangerous.

We have pollution, noise pollution. We have air pollution. And now we are going to have a safety situation which is really dangerous. Now, that does not solve the problem of capacity, because we need it. We are up to the hilt at O'Hare. Do we expand? What is the most efficient, cheapest, effective way to meet the need for capacity?

Peotone. Build another airport. New York has Newark, Idlewild, John F. Kennedy. That shows how old I am, Idlewild, LaGuardia, of course, which we all go in and out of regularly. But Chicago has Midway, which the gentleman has a proprietary interest in, and O'Hare. So we need another airport, one that can be out in the green where it can expand, where it has a buffer so that the homes that are as adjacent to it as possible can survive.

This is an answer to a real problem. Why do not we take that answer? Why do we not build Peotone? Because the Mayor would not have much to do with it. I have always said he ought to. I would name it after the Mayor if he would let it get built. But that is the problem; and I hope this bill is defeated.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) has 4 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON) has no time remaining. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot of charges made here on the floor, one of which is that this bill will prevent Peotone from ever being built. There is nothing in this legislation that prevents Peotone from being built if there is a need for Peotone.

Some people wanted in this legislation, for the United States House of Representatives, the U.S. Senate and the President of the United States to say we have to build Peotone. We cannot do that. That is not right. If we did that, we would have every airport that had a conflict in the country coming over here to see us trying to legislate their problem out of existence. We do not do that for O'Hare Airport in this legislation either.

Expanding and modernizing O'Hare Airport does not become a Federal law until the Federal Aviation Administration has signed off on it. We also have an airport in Rockford. We have an airport in Gary. Airports that have already been established. In all deference to the gentlemen from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON), (Mr. WELLER), Peotone at the present time is a corn field. They have been asking commercial air carriers for years to agree to come down to Peotone and operate out of Peotone. As of this moment they still do not have one single air carrier who has been willing to say they would go down and operate out of Peotone.

They talk about relocating individuals because of O'Hare's expansion. If you were to build Peotone, you would relocate almost three times as many individuals as you will by expanding and modernizing O'Hare Airport.

The only way to solve the aviation gridlock problem in this country is by modernizing and expanding O'Hare Airport. If the capacity needs grow that much greater in the future, put some of that commercial aviation into Gary, put some of it into Rockford, build Peotone. Nothing in this legislation prevents Peotone from being built.

This is the one piece of legislation that this Congress will act upon this year that can truly expand aviation capacity in this country and for the rest of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation, my chairman, a supporter of this bill.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time and I thank the gentleman for handling this legislation today.

Having just arrived by air, it sounds like a simple thing, I just arrived by air, but remember back to September 11, September 12, September 13, and we see the impact that aviation has on every American. We see how dependent our economy has become on aviation.

Mr. Speaker, I chair the subcommittee and I try to be fair, and the worst thing to do is get in the middle of a food fight in a delegation or delegations of Members affected by legislative proposal.

I tried to be fair in this proposal. I have the greatest respect for the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE). No one is held in higher esteem than the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE). I have great respect for the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO). I have tremendous respect for the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) and have worked with him on the Peotone question. As chair of the subcommittee, however, I have to look not only at their interests but the interests of the Nation and the interests of the American people. And this is a difficult battle.

The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) does not want any more planes over the residents he represents and feels that this airport is already at capacity. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) wants additional traffic. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) wants additional traffic for an existing facility. But we have to move forward. I believe that this is as good a compromise as we can get. It is based on codifying an agreement.

Now, mayors of Chicago come and mayors of Chicago will go. Governors of Illinois will come and go.

One of the problems we have in trying to make these improvements that are so key to safety and capacity is that the players keep changing. This does codify an agreement, allows us to go forward in our national interest.

Our national interest is, first, the safety of people who fly in and out of O'Hare. That airport has been congested. There has not been a single runway added since 1971, and something has to give in the modernization of those runways and capacity.

If O'Hare were by itself, we could leave it by itself; but when O'Hare closes down, the Nation's air system also closes down. So we must do something to deal with that.

Do we need improvements at O'Hare? Yes, we do. Do we need additional capacity at Peotone? I believe we will. Do we need to better utilize Rockford and Gary? Yes, and I think through our policy we can bring some of those changes about.

So I support the legislation, and I ask my Members to agree with this compromise.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This bill has the support of the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), chairman of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure; the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the ranking minority member; the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation; the gentleman from Illinois

(Mr. LIPINSKI), the ranking minority member; Illinois' Governor, a Republican; Chicago's mayor, a Democrat; the chamber of commerce and the AFL-CIO. It has no objection from the Sierra Club and was scheduled on the floor by Speaker HASTERT and Minority Leader GEPHARDT.

It eliminates delays, not just at O'Hare but over 100 airports connecting through O'Hare. It is the right thing to do. I urge adoption of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am inserting for the RECORD an exchange of letters between the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) regarding H.R. 3479.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON SCIENCE,
Washington, DC., July 12, 2002.

Hon. DON YOUNG,
Chairman, Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN. The Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure has had under consideration H.R. 3479 the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act. In that bill there is a provision which falls under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Science. Specifically, that provision is a sense of Congress amendment which would ask that the Federal Aviation Administration expend monies for research and development for noise mitigation programs.

By waiving consideration of H.R. 3479 the Committee on Science does not waive any of its jurisdictional rights and prerogatives.

I ask that you would support our request for conferees on H.R. 3479 or similar legislation if a conference should be convened with the Senate. I also ask that our exchange of letters be included in your committee's report and also in the Congressional Record.

I look forward to working with you on this and other important pieces of legislation.

Sincerely,

SHERWOOD BOEHLERT,
Chairman.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORTATION AND INFRASTRUCTURE,
Washington, DC, July 12, 2002.

Hon. SHERWOOD L. BOEHLERT,
Chairman, Committee on Science,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN. Thank you for your letter of July 12, 2002, regarding H.R. 3479, the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act, and for your willingness to waive consideration of provisions in the bill that fall within your Committee's jurisdiction under House rules.

I agree that your waiving consideration of relevant provisions of H.R. 3479 does not waive your Committee's jurisdiction over the bill. I also acknowledge your right to seek conferees on any provisions that are under your Committee's jurisdiction during any House-Senate conference on H.R. 3479 or similar legislation, and will support your request for conferees on such provisions.

Your letter and this response will be included in the Congressional Record during consideration on the House Floor.

Thank you for your cooperation in moving this important legislation.

Sincerely,

DON YOUNG
Chairman.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my opposition to H.R. 3479, the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act, which would force airport expansion on a community in the Chicago region that is already overburdened by airport operations.

The people of my congressional district in Southern California are overburdened by the noise, pollution and traffic congestion generated by Los Angeles International Airport (LAX). Airport expansion would only exacerbate these problems. That is why I am introducing the Careful Airport Planning for Southern California Act (the CAP Act).

The CAP Act would cap LAX air traffic at its current capacity of 78 million passengers per year. The CAP Act would encourage airport development in Southern California communities that are eager for the benefits of a local airport. The CAP Act would ensure that the benefits and burdens of airport development are fairly distributed throughout the Southern California region.

I urge my colleagues to support the CAP Act, to oppose the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act and oppose the expansion of Chicago O'Hare and LAX.

Mr. RUSH. Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of H.R. 3479, the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act. This legislation will codify a historic agreement reached between the Republican Governor of Illinois and the Mayor of Chicago to expand and modernize O'Hare International airport. As you know, O'Hare airport is one of the busiest airports in this nation and the hub to hundreds of destinations across the globe. Therefore, making it the center of our national transportation system.

Unfortunately, O'Hare is the third leading airport for congestion and delays. According to the FAA, O'Hare's systematic flight delays and cancellations has a crippling affect on our nation's aviation system.

Many of us, and the flying public, have spent countless hours sitting on a runway or in an airport waiting for a flight to taxi or depart. In 2000, it was estimated that O'Hare airport had 545 delays, or 63.3 delays per 1,000 operations. The principal reason attributed for these delays rests solely on the fact that O'Hare airport has antiquated runways. Hence, expanding O'Hare's runways is essential in remedying our nation's aviation crisis. It is estimated that modernizing O'Hare airport will reduce air traffic delays by 79 percent and weather delays by 95 percent.

I am glad to see that this bill includes a provision to develop a third Airport in Illinois. This airport, known as the Peotone Airport, will provide our nation's air transportation system with the additional relief required to reduce airport congestion while creating thousands of construction and permanent jobs for the South Suburban region of the state.

We need solutions to aviation delays and congestion. Let's end this 20 year old debate. Expanding O'Hare and constructing a third airport is the right thing to do. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this critical legislation.

Mr. BLAGOJEVICH. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to join my colleague from Illinois, Mr. LIPINSKI, here today in supporting legislation that is very important not only to my constituents in Illinois, but to the entire nation. I would also like to thank the distinguished Speaker, Mr. HASTERT, for allowing this bill to come before us today.

I have been proud to serve as an original cosponsor of the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act here in the House, and to have worked in Illinois with a broad coalition of labor, business and civic leaders to promote the effort in Illinois. Today is the result of the unified effort of diverse groups of Illinoisans who have joined to fight for a proposal that will strengthen our state's economic and fiscal health. The bill would create 195,000 new jobs, and would bring an estimated $19 billion to the State of Illinois.

This bill calls for comprehensive expansion of O'Hare. H.R. 3749 calls for each of the essential elements that transportation industry experts and local officials agree must be included in any effective O'Hare modernization proposal: foremost among them, the addition of a southern runway, the reconfiguration of existing runways, and the introduction of western access to the airport.

I also commend Congress' commitment to addressing the crucial issue of the nation's aviation capacity. The National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act would not only benefit my constituents and the State of Illinois, it would have an affect on the entire nation. O'Hare is not only the world's busiest airport, but it is a critical national hub through which thousands of flights connect everyday. Congestion in Chicago has a ripple effect throughout the United States and abroad, grounding and delaying flights miles away, some that are not even bound for O'Hare.

In addition to inconveniencing travelers, these delays and congestion cripple the ability of businesses to function effectively. The gridlock at O'Hare has been responsible for everything from missed business meetings to delayed shipments of goods. Mr. Lipinski's bill would reduce delays by 79 percent, and with it save a projected $380 million that is lost due to the delays.

O'Hare's airfield has not been improved since 1971. Repeated initiatives to modernize it fell prey to local political disputes that led to delays in the project in recent years. Last year, however, the Mayor of the City of Chicago and the Governor of Illinois reached an historic agreement to modernize O'Hare and take an inclusive approach to meet the aviation needs of Chicago and the nation. On behalf of Illinois, and with the support of elected officials and businesses, labor and community groups across the nation, they are working with Congress to help meet the long-term transportation needs of the nation.

Such State and local leadership demonstrates that Illinois takes its responsibility to the nation very seriously. Nearly 10,000 organizations and individuals in all 50 states have voiced their support for expanding Chicago's aviation capacity. H.R. 3479 has been endorsed by a wide range of national groups. The bill has received the support of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the AFL-CIO, the National Air Traffic Controllers Association, the Airline Pilots Association, the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association and the National Air Transportation Association—to name just a few.

This broad base of support speaks to the legislation's vital impact on the efficiency and reliability of our aviation infrastructure, as well as to the unique opportunity for enhanced business activity and increased job creation that would accompany comprehensive O'Hare expansion. As with the delays at the airport, a failure to keep this economic engine vibrant will surely affect businesses and working women and men in many parts of the nation. It is important to note that O'Hare already generates some $35 billion annually in economic activity and produces more than 400,000 jobs in northeastern Illinois and northwest Indiana. This includes tens of thousands of people whose jobs are tied directly to the travel and tourism industry and countless others—employed in virtually every sector of the economy—whose wages are earned thanks to the economic engine that is O'Hare.

I support H.R. 3479 because I am committed to ensuring that the economic security of those workers—and that of nearly 200,000 new workers—will expand and grow.

The time to act on O'Hare's expansion is today. H.R. 3479 represents an historic opportunity that we must seize. By doing so, we will guarantee a safe, reliable air transportation system for our constituents. We will also demonstrate our commitment to a healthy economy and our ability to take decisive action in the face of a national need.

I respectfully urge you to support this vital legislation.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3479, the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act.

This Bill is long overdue.

Chicago O'Hare has been in need of a new runway for the last 20 years.

It's annually one of the worst airports in terms of cancellations and delays.

What's worse, problems at O'Hare ripple through our entire system, creating tie-ups and delays at dozens of other airports.

This bill furthers the agreement reached by local and State leaders to allow the city of Chicago to go ahead with a proposed capacity expansion project from O'Hare.

It likewise allows the State to go forward with its proposal for peotone and guarantees that Meig's Field will remain open.

I support H.R. 3479 to address these vital national transportation issues and urge everyone to support this bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend Mr. LIPINSKI for his leadership concerning transportation issues in Illinois and especially the issue of O'Hare Expansion and today I stand in firm support of H.R. 3479.

Chicago has a vast and growing transportation industry. Over the years Chicago's O'Hare International Airport has continued its growth, in traffic and demand. Presently, O'Hare ranks as the Nation's first or second busiest airport with nearly 34,000,000 annual passengers traveling both domestically and internationally.

Expanding O'Hare offers an array of benefits: from employment to economic growth. As Chicago continues to grow, O'Hare continues to experience the backlog of delays. According to the Airport Capacity Benchmark Report in 2001, O'Hare was the third most delayed airport.

Sitting in the heart of the Mid West, these delays continue to burden connecting airports creating a snowball affect and frustrated passengers. By the addition of runways, and the expansion of O'Hare delay times will diminish and air travel at Chicago's bustling O'Hare will undoubtedly improve for the consumer and the region.

I encourage my colleagues to support H.R. 3479.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3479, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 3479.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until approximately 6:30 p.m. today.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until approximately 6:30 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. TERRY) at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will now put the question on motions to suspend the rules on which further proceedings were postponed earlier today.

Votes will be taken in the following order:

H.R. 3482, by the yeas and nays;

H.R. 4755, by the yeas and nays;

H.R. 3479, by the yeas and nays.

Votes on motions to suspend the rules on House Resolution 482, House Resolution 452, and House Concurrent Resolution 395 will be taken tomorrow.

Record votes on remaining motions to suspend the rules, if ordered, will also be taken tomorrow.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote after the first such vote in this series.

CYBER SECURITY ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2002

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending business is the question of suspending the rules and passing the bill, H.R. 3482, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3482, as amended, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 385, nays 3, not voting 46, as follows:

Ms. RIVERS changed her vote from “nay” to “yea.”

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 296, I was in my district on official business.

Had I been present, I would have voted “yea.”

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TERRY). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the minimum time for electronic voting on each additional motion to suspend the rules on which the Chair has postponed further proceedings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending business is the question of suspending the rules and passing the bill, H.R. 4755.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4755, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

This will be a 5-minute vote.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 389, nays 0, not voting 45, as follows:

Messrs. MORAN of Virginia, DEUTSCH, and SHOWS changed their vote from “yea” to “nay.”

Ms. HART and Mr. OLIVER changed their vote from “nay” to “yea.”

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the motion was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated for:

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall no. 298, I was in my district on official business. Had I been present, I would have voted “yea.”

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to vote on today's suspension bills. Had I been capable of voting, I would have voted in support of H.R. 3482, Cyber Security Enhancement Act; H.R. 4755, Clarence Miller Post Office Building Designation; and H.R. 3479, National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, district business prevents me from being present for legislative business scheduled for today, Monday, July 15, 2002. Had I been present, I would have voted “yea” on the following rollcall votes: H.R. 3482, the Cyber Security Enhancement Act (rollcall No. 296); and H.R. 4755, the Clarence Miller Post Office Building Designation Act (rollcall no. 297). I would have voted “nay” on H.R. 3479, the National Aviation Capacity Expansion Act (rollcall No. 298).

ANNOUNCEMENT BY COMMITTEE ON RULES REGARDING AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATIONS BILL

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules is planning to meet later this week to grant a rule which may limit the amendment process on the legislative branch appropriations bill for fiscal year 2003. The bill was ordered reported by the Committee on Appropriations Thursday, July 11, and is expected to be filed later today.

Any Member wishing to offer an amendment must submit 55 copies of the amendment and one copy of a very brief explanation of the amendment to the Committee on Rules in room H-312 of the Capitol no later than 12 noon on Wednesday, July 17. Members should draft their amendments to the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations. The text is available at the Committee on Appropriations.

Members should use the Office of Legislative Counsel to ensure that their amendments are properly drafted and should check with the Office of the Parliamentarian to be certain their amendments comply with the rules of the House.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 10 a.m. tomorrow for morning hour debates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TERRY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1577

Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 1577.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

WHERE IS THE MONEY?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to say I join my colleagues on both sides of the aisle in my concerns about the corporate scandals that are taking place throughout this country and certainly the investors who have lost so much money. I resent very much the corporate leadership and how they have misled and manipulated the investors, and I hope that there will be a severe price to pay for this action.

However, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to come back to the floor tonight to talk about my concerns about the government in their report, which was the “2001 Financial Report of the United States Government.” On page 110, we can see from the chart that they acknowledge in this report that the taxpayers or the government has lost $17.3 billion of the taxpayers' money. My biggest concern is because the taxpayers do not have a choice, they have to pay their taxes at the end of the year, and those of us in Congress, I think we have a responsibility to make sure that the monies of our taxpayers are certainly being protected so there is not a report like the "2001 Financial Report of the United States Government," that said we have misplaced or lost or cannot reconcile transactions that total $17.3 billion.

Mr. Speaker, I actually wrote to Secretary O'Neill on June 6 asking him to please respond to my letter asking questions as to where in the world could this $17.3 billion have gone. I certainly think that the taxpayers of this country have a right to know. Certainly they are required to pay taxes, so they are investors in this government; and we have a responsibility to make certain that we can account for their monies.

In addition, there was the GAO testimony that was released on April 9, 2002. This was an appearance before the Subcommittee on Government Efficiency, Financial Management and Intergovernmental Relations. I want to read one statement from David Walker, Comptroller General of the United States. He said, "As in the four previous fiscal years, we were unable to express an opinion on the consolidated financial statements because of certain material weaknesses in internal control and accounting and reporting issues. These conditions prevented us from being able to provide the Congress and the American citizens an opinion as to whether the consolidated financial statements are fairly stated in conformity with the U.S. generally accepted accounting principles."

Mr. Speaker, when I read that information to the House and to the American people, we certainly have our responsibility as elected officials to make certain that the people that have the privilege to work for the taxpayers of this country make sure that we spend their money wisely. I am almost embarrassed to be here on the floor to say to the American people and to my colleagues on the floor of the House that in this 2001 report we have acknowledged that we have lost $17.3 billion of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to close by saying in addition to Secretary O'Neill, I have written a letter to Chairman DAN BURTON asking that he hold a hearing and let us see if we cannot find out where the taxpayers' $17.3 billion has gone. We owe them an explanation.

As we look into the corporate scandals, let us also look at the accounting system of the United States Government so that we can explain to the taxpayers of this country where their money is going.

TIME FOR SEC HEAD TO GO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, those who were watching television just before the vote would have been treated to a softball interview with Mr. Harvey Pitt. Mr. Harvey Pitt is a former lobbyist for securities firms and accounting firms and, knowing so well the backrooms, he was named by the President of the United States to be our chief watchdog when it comes to securities enforcement. There is a little problem with Mr. Pitt as a watchdog, unfortunately. He is so ethically and morally compromised, he often cannot vote.

Recently, the Securities and Exchange Commission staff provided a compelling case against Ernst & Young, an accounting firm. There were three commissioners present, and apparently they found the evidence compelling, but unfortunately two of them were so ethically and morally challenged, both appointees of President Bush, Mr. Pitt, the chairman, and another member, they could not vote. The only person that could vote was a Clinton holdover. He did not have the ethical problems of voting for or against his former clients and buddies and he voted to fine them. An administrative law judge threw it out.

So here we have it. The chief enforcement arm of the United States Government to rein in corporate misconduct, securities fraud, the accounting firms, and the chairman cannot vote. In his first 10 months in office, he had to recuse himself from voting 29 times because these were all people whom he had represented and he will represent again soon when he leaves his position as chair of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

This is the tough new Securities and Exchange Commission which is supposed to instill confidence? Mr. Pitt carried on at great length about what he really cares about is the little guy, you know, Main Street. I do not think Mr. Pitt has seen Main Street from his penthouse apartment, his thousand-dollar-an-hour consulting with these securities and accounting firms for a heck of a long time, except maybe from the tinted windows of his limousine.

He has represented other outstanding folks: MCI, WorldCom, a $4 billion problem there. Merrill Lynch. Arthur Andersen. Whoops. Yeah, a little bit of a problem there. In April he met with a former client, KPMG Consulting, while their audits were being investigated. He said, "Hey, you can't tell me that I can't meet with people who I worked for who are currently under investigation because I wouldn't be able to meet with anybody." This is our chief watchdog, Harvey Pitt.

Harvey Pitt. Yes, perhaps he would be a great enforcer because he knows all the backroom tricks. One of the big problems we have was conflicts of interest with the accounting companies. Mr. Pitt as a $1,000-an-hour lobbyist/lawyer, he always talks about himself as a lawyer, not a lobbyist—he was a lobbyist with a law degree and a license to practice law—had in fact worked very hard to prevent those conflict of interest rules from going into effect which, of course, allowed many of the current accounting shenanigans to go forward because these same firms, Arthur Andersen and others, were selling services to the companies that they were supposedly providing arm's length auditing services to and the companies were not going to be real eager to buy those services if their CEO was not earning tens or hundreds of millions of dollars of bonuses by inflating their earnings reports and having the accounting firms sign off on it. This is our chief watchdog.

It is not just his actions that belie Mr. Pitt. It is his words. When he was sworn in, he said the SEC will be a kinder and gentler place for accountants. He would have us believe that now he has become a veritable pit bull of enforcement, that he is the best person for the job. It is extraordinary that the Bush administration has not joined notables such as Senator JOHN MCCAIN in asking for Mr. Pitt to resign. He is an embarrassment to this administration. To have a chief law enforcement officer who cannot enforce the law because he is so morally and ethically compromised, he cannot even vote on enforcement actions recommended by his own staff and investigators.

It is time for Mr. Pitt to go if you want to restore some modicum of faith in how straight these markets, these reports and these investigations are.

DEMOCRACY AT WORK: MILITARY RETIREE GRASSROOTS SET AN EXAMPLE FOR ALL AMERICANS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. SHOWS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHOWS. Mr. Speaker, today through access to advanced technical means of communication, Americans are able to unite their individual voices and present a message, loud and clear, that makes Congress pay heed to what they have to say. This is truly democracy in action.

July 16 is the sixth anniversary of the beginning of a grassroots movement that exemplifies the spirit of democracy our Founding Fathers envisioned and represents the power of many individual voices uniting as one.

On July 16, 1996, Colonel George "Bud" Day, a Congressional Medal of Honor recipient who was Senator JOHN MCCAIN's cellmate in North Vietnam for many years, filed a class action lawsuit against the government of the United States for breaking promises of lifetime health care. Specifically, since the founding of the Republic, the U.S. Government routinely promised military recruits if they served a career in uniformed service for 20 years, they and their dependents would receive health care for life. Indeed, that is what they received.

But beginning with laws enacted in 1956, lifetime health care benefits were chipped away. Personnel who joined the service before 1956, with the promise of lifetime care, later retired from the service to find the government had gone back on its promise. When laws passed in the mid 1990s finally kicked military retirees over the age of 65 out of the military health care system, that is when Colonel Day filed his suit on behalf of two Florida military retirees. Today, Colonel Day's class act group, CAG, represents thousands of military retirees and families across the country in a case that is pending in a Federal appeals court in Washington. Last year a three-judge panel of that court ruled in Colonel Day's favor that the United States did break a contract with its career uniformed personnel. The full 11-judge panel has reheard the case and a ruling will be forthcoming.

The government attorneys put themselves in a position of claiming essentially the military recruiters made promises on behalf of the United States Government that they never intended to keep because, in these attorneys' opinion, the law did not require them to keep their promise. The attorneys should just have said, "They make promises but had their fingers crossed behind their backs." Most observers believe the court will again side with Colonel Day. The question will be whether the United States attorneys will appeal the ruling to the Supreme Court.

Colonel Day forged a coalition of Americans who had a shared grievance against their own government. Colonel Day and the class act group's historic lawsuit and the power of the thousands of retirees who are members of CAG represent the best of what our Founding Fathers envisioned. There are other issues relating to the broken promise and the military grassroots continues to make its collective voice heard. In 1999, thousands of retirees across the country came together when I introduced the Keep Our Promise to America's Military Retirees Act. This was the first legislation in Congress that addressed the broken promise head-on. By writing letters and e-mails to newspapers and Congress and by posting billboards across the country, military retirees made their voices heard. In just one year, the voice of the military retirees grassroots, united loud and clear around the legislation, forced Congress to act. Congress enacted TRICARE for Life, which restored much of the promises of lifetime health care for retirees over the age of 65.

TFL, as it is known, was a significant achievement for many military retirees over 65, but much more needs to be done to restore the promise of military health care to many more of our retired uniformed personnel. For too many retired military personnel, the military health care system currently in place does not provide the level of quality care they have been promised, earned and deserve. A new coalition representing military retirees has emerged to challenge the government to provide that health care. They call themselves the MRGRG, the Military Retiree Grassroots Group. These retirees do not have a formal organization or membership but are all over the country wired together via the Internet. The MRGRG's goal is to achieve full restoration of the broken promise now and have it done this year.

Recently, nine MRGRG members, recognized as leaders in the retiree movement, drafted a white paper on military health care. The 200-page white paper spells out the retirees' case clearly and in great detail. At their own expense, MRGRG members have reproduced and hand-delivered white paper binders and CDs to every member of the House and Senate. Like Colonel Day's group, the MRGRG represents exactly what our Founding Fathers intended, American citizens acting freely and of their own will, telling their elected representatives what they ought to do.

The good people of CAG and MRGRG are already heroes—they fought to defend the freedoms we all enjoy, and they made a career doing it. And now they are heroes all over again, setting an example for all of us by showing how democracy is supposed to work and by making it work exactly the way our Founding Fathers intended.

Our Founding Fathers would be proud of today's military retirees' faith in our democratic institution. I know I am. God bless them, and God Bless America.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. TAYLOR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, as we read about the scandals in the private sector and as we hear the President go to Wall Street to try to get them to do a better job with their accounting practices, it strikes me that the President would have much better spent his time if he had given that speech here in these halls. You see, as we talk about false billing and cooking the books going on on Wall Street, there is no more false billing and there is no bigger cooking of the books than right here in the halls of Congress and in the other body. I guess the average American would be dumfounded to know that the taxes that they pay every month called FICA, their Social Security taxes, they think is being set aside for their Social Security, would they not be surprised to find out that as of this moment, our Nation owes the Social Security trust fund $1.3 trillion. There is not a penny in that account, nothing but an IOU of some government securities. Folks who pay taxes know that on that pay stub is a tax for Medicare. They presume it is being set aside to pay for their medical expenses when they get older. They would be shocked to find out that as of this moment, if you could find that imaginary lockbox, that we owe the Medicare trust fund $271 billion. For folks back home, I realize a billion is a lot of money, so I walk you through it the way I have to remind myself. A billion is a thousand times a thousand times a thousand, and in this instance again times 271 is how much is owed to the Medicare trust fund.

Every year money is taken out of the Department of Defense budget with the promise that it will be set aside to pay military retirement pay. I am sure that after what the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. SHOWS) said, and rightly so, that they would be aghast to find out that if you were to find the so-called military retiree fund, all you would find there is an IOU for a thousand times a thousand times a thousand times 168.

The civil servants, the people on the Border Patrol, the people who work for Customs, the FBI agents who are out there trying to find kidnapped kids, the ATF agents who get shot at on a regular basis trying to keep violent people from building bombs that would harm other Americans, they have a retirement plan. They pay into it. The government pays into it. That money is supposed to be set aside just to pay for their retirement. If they could find that mythical lockbox, they would find that what is missing is a thousand times a thousand times a thousand times 540. $540 billion.

In fact, I guess the average Joe would be a little surprised that after coming to Congress and promising to balance the books, that in the approximately 1,286 days that DENNIS HASTERT has been the Speaker of the House, that the Federal debt has grown by $511,040,208,939.15, which is more debt than was accumulated in this country from the day that George Washington became President until 1975. Our Nation went for almost 199 years and accumulated only as much debt since DENNIS HASTERT has been Speaker.

I say that to express my severe disappointment that in those 1,286 days,

Speaker HASTERT has not allowed, and he sets the schedule for floor debate; only bills that he approves come to the floor and bills that he disapproves do not come to the floor. He has never set a day of debate for a Balanced Budget Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. So that regardless of which party, be they Democrats, be they Republicans, or whoever is controlling the House, and regardless of which party controls the Senate, and regardless of who is the President, they are going to spend no more money than is collected in taxes.

In the 23 years my daughter has been alive, this Nation has added $5 trillion to that debt. We could have gone all the way from the day George Washington became President to the day Ronald Reagan became President and our Nation was only $1 trillion in debt. In just 23 years, this much has been added. I think the American people are rightly demanding that Congress spend no more than they collect in taxes. Because no good parent would go out and buy a car and say, by the way, I have a 6-year-old child and let them pay for it, plus interest, when they grow up. No good parent would go buy a house, the most expensive house, because they are not going to pay for it, they are going to stick their grandkids with the bill.

That is what you have been doing, Speaker HASTERT; and I think it is time we had a vote on a Balanced Budget Amendment to the Constitution to stop this Congress and stop future Congresses from doing that. This is a message that I am going to deliver every day until we get a vote on the Balanced Budget Amendment.

I want to encourage Americans to check my sources. Because unlike those guys who were talking about big budget surpluses last year, but never followed it up with the facts, I want Americans to check these numbers because they will be as shocked and appalled as I am. So please look for the monthly statement of the public debt, June 2002, under <http://www.publicdebt.treas.gov>, and see for yourselves how broke our Nation is. And then when we hear the politicians ranting and raving about irresponsibility on Wall Street, maybe you will encourage them to look in the mirror.

FREEDOM OF RELIGION IS WHAT MADE AMERICA GREAT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KELLER). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARTLETT) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I want to spend a few minutes this evening talking about two events that have happened in our country recently. One of them is national and the other is very local.

The national event was the decision of two of three members of the Ninth Circuit Court in San Francisco that the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag, including the words "under God," can no longer be used in our schools with those two words; that if we are going to say the Pledge of Allegiance in our schools, we have to take "under God" out.

The second event is a very local event. It is in the town of Frederick, Maryland. I live just 5 miles from there on a farm. We have a little memorial park in Frederick across from the armory. We have there memorials to our soldiers in all of the wars with their individual names on these memorials. There is also in that park a replica of the Ten Commandments on the two stones. A senior student in one of our schools; interestingly, a student in one of our schools wrote asking, is it really appropriate to have the Ten Commandments in this memorial park because the park is owned by the city and the city is a part of what we call the State, and certainly, there is this big wall of separation between church and State?

Now, this has caused quite a dither in Frederick. The ACLU came out and they said, yes, that is right, the Ten Commandments should not be there. Why do we not just sell the park for $1 to the American Legion and then the problem will go away? But if you do not do that, then we are going to sue.

Most of our institutions are, I guess all of them, are creatures of our culture. We remember from history that the Supreme Court pre-Civil War handed down the Dred Scott decision. Now, I suspect there are very few people today who believe that that was a correct decision handed down by that Court. So our courts today are creatures, at least to some extent, of our culture. These two events would have been absolutely unheard of in my childhood, that a court would say that one could not say under God in the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag and that one could not have the Ten Commandments in a memorial park for our service people who fought and bled and died for this country.

Now, how did we get here? What has happened to this Nation? I can clearly remember 60 years ago. I can remember writing 1933 on my school papers, so I can easily remember 60 years.

There are three great lies in our Nation today, and they are the result of, well, of two things. They are the result of an educational system that has, in large measure, tried to rewrite our history. These three lies are also the result of a media which has joined with our educational institutions in educating the American people about a history which really is not true. These three great lies are that our Founding Fathers were atheists and deists. Now, everybody knows what an atheist is. It is a person who does not believe there is a God. A deist believes there is a God. He believes that God created the Earth, but then God stood back and he placed in effect a number of physical laws and biological laws, and there is no use praying to him, because these laws are going to determine what happens to us.

So the first great lie is that our Founding Fathers were atheists and deists. The second great lie is that they sought to establish a non-Christian Nation. They did not want God associated with this country. As a corollary to this, they sought to erect a wall of separation between church and State. They wanted to make sure that there was never, ever any discussion of religion in the State.

To understand how we got here, I think we need to put this in some context. It all started, of course, in 1776. We read that Declaration of Independence which, by the way clearly, three times, perhaps four, refers to God. I wonder if the courts will declare our Declaration of Independence unconstitutional because it has very clear references to God and our creator.

This was a very radical document. We read it without really concentrating on what it is and what it says. It said that all men are created equal. Now, we take that for granted, but that was not the society from which our forefathers came. Now, of course, unless you are a descendant of an American Indian, you are the child of an immigrant and today, our citizens come from, or their forefathers have come from all parts of the world. But in 1776, essentially all of our Founding Fathers had come from England and the European continent. And in England and on the continent, essentially every country was ruled by a king or an emperor who incredibly claimed and was granted divine rights. What that says is that the rights came from God, divine rights, rights came from God to the king and he would then give what rights he wished to his people.

Our Declaration of Independence made a radical departure from that, because it said that all men are created equal. Then they set about the task of writing a Constitution that embodied the promise of the Declaration of Independence. It took them 11 years to do this. It was not until 1787 that the Constitution was ratified. And in that Constitution they sought to embody all of those promises made in the Declaration of Independence.

The story is told of Ben Franklin coming out from the constitutional convention and being asked by a lady, Mr. Franklin, what have you given us? And his reply was, A Republic, madam, if you can keep it.

Now, I hear my colleagues and most everybody in this country talking about this great democracy that we have. Yet, when Ben Franklin was asked, What have you given us, he says, A Republic, Madam, if you can keep it, if we think back through that Pledge of Allegiance to the flag, we will note that it refers to a Republic.

Why is this important? It is important to the subject that we are discussing this evening.

I heard an interesting definition of a democracy. It was two wolves and a lamb voting on what they were going to have for lunch. And someone noted that an example of a democracy was a lynch mob, because clearly, in a lynch mob, the will of the majority is being expressed. Are we not glad, Mr. Speaker, that we live in a Republic where one respects the rule of law, regardless of what the majority would like at that moment?

Now, clearly, we can change the law against which all other laws are measured, which is the Constitution, and we have done that 27 times; but this is a considered event. It takes two-thirds of the House and two-thirds of the Senate; it bypasses the President and goes directly to the State legislatures and three-fourths of them must ratify it.

Our Founding Fathers were not certain that the promise of the Declaration of Independence was, in fact, made crystal-clear in the Constitution, so before the ink was hardly dry on the Constitution, they started 12 amendments through the process of two-thirds of the House, two-thirds of the Senate, and three-fourths of the State legislatures. Ten of them made it through that process, and we know them as the Bill of Rights. If we read down through the Constitution, it is a little book that has had a big, big effect. If we read down through that, we will see that their primary aim in this Bill of Rights was to make sure that everybody understood what was implicit in the Constitution was explicit in these 10 amendments.

That is that they really wanted most of the rights to reside with the people. Remember, they had come from monarchies, from empires where the king or the emperor said that all the rights came to him. In the Declaration of Independence, they said that all men are created equal, and they wanted to make sure that it was very clear that essentially all of the rights remained with the people.

Now, our Founding Fathers came to this country not to get wealthy; as a matter of fact, many of them left wealth to come here. They came here for freedom. They came here to achieve freedom from two tyrannies.

One was the tyranny of the church. In England, it was the Episcopal church; and on the continent, it was the Roman church. For both of those churches, power had been given to them by the state, so our Founding Fathers wanted to make sure that never, ever in this new country would the state ever give power to a religion so that it could oppress the people.

I guess our Founding Fathers could be excused for some shortsightedness before they wrote the Constitution, because in old Virginia, Roman Catholics could not vote. In colonial Maryland, I understand that both Roman Catholics and Jews could not vote.

But to their great credit, when it came time to write the First Amendment, they recognized that that is really not what they came here to achieve; that they really wanted freedom of religion, which is very different, as Ronald Reagan pointed out, from freedom from religion, which is what the courts now want to achieve.

It was a Roman Catholic, Charles Carroll, for whom Carroll County is named, one of the counties in the district I represent; Carroll Creek runs through Frederick City, not far from the Ten Commandments in that little memorial park. So it was a Roman Catholic who was a major architect of the establishment clause in the First Amendment.

In the Second Amendment, they addressed their concerns of the tyranny of the state. This is a subject for another day, but let me just read it in that context: "A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed."

Abraham Lincoln understood that this was a new experiment and that it might not succeed. In his Gettysburg Address, we remember, Four score and seven years ago, and if we go back 87 years, we will come to 1776; "Four score and 7 years ago, our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new Nation, conceived in liberty and," and note, "dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." He recognized what a radical departure this was from the norms of the time, and he knew that this experiment might not succeed.

He said, we are now engaged in a war "testing whether this Nation or any Nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure."

Then he ended that Gettysburg Address with almost a prayer: "that this government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the Earth."

I am going to use four sources to refute these three lies. Again, the three lies are that our Founding Fathers were atheists and deists; that they wanted to establish a non-Christian Nation; that they wanted a wall of separation between the church and the state. To do that, I am going to let our Founding Fathers speak for themselves. I am going to quote from some court decisions. I am going to note some actions of Congress. Then we will take a brief look at our schools. I will use a number of quotes this evening, and I would like to make two comments regarding those quotes.

The first is that not everyone will agree to the specific wording of these quotes. No one argues that these are the kinds of things that these men, these courts, that the Congress would have said or would have done; but Members may find some dispute as to the exact wording. I will tell the Members my references, and Members can talk to those on whom I depended for these quotes.

One is David Barton, who probably is the most knowledgeable person in America today on the Christian nature of our Founding Fathers. He has thousands of original documents. He conducts a fascinating tour through the Capitol building here, stopping at statue after statue and reading from original documents their quotes.

The second source for my quotes this evening is Dr. Richard Fredericks, who is the pastor of the Damascus Road Community Church in Montgomery County.

The second observation I want to make about the quotes this evening is that there will be a lot of references to Christianity and Jesus Christ. I would submit that when these quotes were made, that these words were more synonymous with the words that we would use today which would probably be "God-fearing." They meant no affront to other religious persuasions who worshipped the same God.

I just want to note that there will be lots of references to Christianity and Jesus Christ, if Members would simply hear "Judeo-Christian" and "God-fearing" when these quotes are read.

Freedom is not free. It is said that the price of freedom is eternal vigilance. That is just as true today as it was then. Certainly, our national freedom was very costly. Five of the 55 signers of the Declaration of Independence were captured and executed by the British; nine of them died in battlefields of the war; another dozen lost their homes, possessions, and fortunes to British occupation. Our birth as a Nation was not cheap for these men.

Let us first look at this wall of separation which our courts today talk so much about. That does not appear anywhere in our Constitution. It does not appear in the First Amendment. As a matter of fact, those three words, "separation," "church," and "state," do not appear, but they do appear in one constitution. It is the Constitution of the United Soviet Socialist Republics, the USSR.

Let me read from that Constitution. It is Article 124: "In order to ensure to citizens freedom of conscience, the church in the USSR is separated from the state and the schools from the church."

Let me let the Founding Fathers speak for themselves now, and then Members can decide whether they think they are atheist or deist.

Patrick Henry is often called the "firebrand of the American Revolution." I want to quote his words spoken in St. John's Church in Richmond on March 23 in 1775. Those words are very well known: "Give me liberty or give me death," and they are still memorized by most students. But I will challenge the Members to go to their child's school and look in their history books and see if these words are put in context.

Here is what he said, in context: "An appeal to arms and the God of hosts is all that is left us, but we shall not fight our battle alone. There is a just God that presides over the destinies of nations. The battle, sir, is not to the strong alone. Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, almighty God. I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death."

Now, those words have a whole lot different meaning when we place them in that context, and I will wager that Members will have great difficulty finding any textbook in our current schools that puts them in that context.

Benjamin Franklin is widely noted by our history books today as being a deist. Was he a deist? Let us let him speak for himself. The time was June 28, 1787. We will recognize that that is during the Constitutional Convention.

Benjamin Franklin was 81 years old. He was the Governor of Pennsylvania, and perhaps the most honored member of the Constitutional Convention. The convention was deadlocked over several issues, and one of the key issues was the balance of State and Federal rights.

When Franklin rose and reminded them of the Continental Congress in 1776, just 11 years prior, this is what he said: "In the days of our contest with Great Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had our daily prayer in this room for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard, and they were graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle must have observed frequent instances of superintending Providence in our favor. To that kind Providence we owe this happy opportunity to establish our Nation. And have we now forgotten that powerful friend? Do we imagine that we no longer need his assistance?" And then I love these words: "I have lived, sir, a long time. And the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that a new nation can rise without his aid? We have been assured, sir, in the sacred writing that except the Lord build a house, they labor in vain that build it. I therefore beg leave to move," and this began a precedent that we follow today; we begin every day in the House with prayer, and every day in the Senate.

This is what he asked: "I therefore beg leave to move that henceforth, prayers imploring the assistance of heaven and its blessings on our deliberations be held in this assembly every morning before we proceed to any business." Thanks to Mr. Franklin, we still do this.

The following year, in a letter to the French minister of state, Franklin, speaking of our Nation, said "Whoever shall introduce into public office the principles of Christianity will change the face of the world."

And now to that second person who is very often noted as being a deist, and by the way, did Members think these are the words of a deist, these words of Benjamin Franklin; that God created a world and then let it run on its own, with just the physical laws and the biological laws that he developed guiding it?

Thomas Jefferson was a great student of Scriptures who honored Christ as his greatest teacher and mentor, but doubted his divinity. On the front of his well-worn Bible Jefferson wrote, "I am a real Christian; that is to say, a disciple of the doctrines of Jesus. I have little doubt that our country will soon be rallied to the unity of our creator, and I hope to the pure doctrine of Jesus, also."

And note his words relative to slavery. See if this sounds like a deist. "Almighty God has created men's minds free. Commerce between master and slave is despotism. I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just, and his justice cannot sleep forever." These are certainly not the words of a deist.

George Washington is called the Father of our Nation. Listen to his heart on the Christian faith in his farewell speech September, 1796; the only President, by the way, unanimously elected by the Electoral College not once but twice, and perhaps the first ruler in 2000 years to voluntarily step down from power.

"It is impossible to govern the world without God and the Bible. Of all the dispositions and habits that lead to political prosperity, our religion and morality are the indispensable supporters. Let us with caution indulge the supposition that is the idea that morality can be maintained without religion. Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that our national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

What did Washington mean by religion? Was he a true Christian? Let me excerpt several lines from his personal prayer book: "Oh, eternal and everlasting God, direct my thoughts, words, and work. Wash away my sins in the immaculate blood of the lamb, and purge my heart by thy holy spirit. Daily frame me more and more in the likeness of thy son, Jesus Christ, that living in thy fear and dying in thy favor, I may, in thy appointed time, obtain the restoration justified onto eternal life."

In Mount Vernon, and we can go there today, just down the river, we can see on the little crypt the benediction that George Washington asked to be put there over his grave and his wife's grave. It is John 11:25: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believes in me shall live, even if he dies."

And you may wonder why as you tour through Washington and go to our monuments that you see so many references to scripture. It is because that is the milieu in which these men lived.

John Adams, our second President, also served as chairman of the American Bible Society started by our Congress, by the way. In an address to military leaders he said, "We have no government armed with the power capable of contending with human passions, unbridled by morality and true religion. Our Constitution was made only for a moral and religious people. It is wholly inadequate to the government of any other."

John Jay, our first Supreme Court Justice, stated that when we select our national leaders and preserve our Nation, we must select Christians. This is what he said, "Providence has given to our people the choice of their rulers. It is the duty as well as the privilege and interest of our Christian Nation to select and prefer Christians for their rulers."

In fact, 11 of the 13 new State constitutions were also ratified in 1776. All required leaders to take an oath similar to this oath in Delaware. This is the oath in Delaware: "Everyone appointed to public office must say, I do profess faith to God, the Father, and in the Lord, Jesus Christ, his only son, and in the Holy Ghost and in God who is blessed forevermore. I do acknowledge the Holy Scriptures, both Old and New Testaments, which are given by divine inspiration."

The time of our Nation's bicentennial in 1976, political science professors at the University of Houston began to ask some questions. Why is it that the American Constitution has been able to stand the test of time? We have the longest enduring republic in the history of the world. Why has it not gone through massive revisions? Why is it looked on as a model by dozens of nations? What wisdom possessed these men to produce such an incredible document? Who did they turn to for inspiration?

So they looked at the writings of our Founding Fathers and they catalogued 15,000 documents. They found the Founding Fathers quoted most often three men, Baron Charles Montesquieu, Sir William Blackstone, and John Locke. Yet, most importantly they found that the Bible itself was directly quoted four times more than Montesquieu, six times more than Blackstone and 12 times more than John Locke. In fact, 34 percent of all the quotes and the writings of the Founding Fathers were direct word-for-word quotes from the Bible. Further, another 60 percent of their quotes were quoting from men who were quoting the Bible. So that an incredible 94 percent of all of the quotes in these 15,000 documents were direct quotes or references to the Bible.

So how did they produce a document that has withstood the test of an evolving government and growing Nation for 226 years now? The answer, they were steeped in the word of God. They understood their need of its constant direction, and they established a Nation based on its underlying principles.

John Quincy Adams, the son of John Adams, was the sixth President of the United States. He was a Congressman, the U.S. minister to Russia, France and Great Britain, Secretary of the State under James Monroe. He was also the chairman of the American Bible Society, as was his father. As a matter of fact, he felt that chairmanship of that society was a more important function and a higher honor than being President of the United States. I might note that the Continental Congress bought 20,000 copies of the Bible to distribute to its new citizens. And for 100 years at the beginning of our country, taxpayers' money was used to send missionaries to the Indians.

Mr. Speaker, 104 years later, the 30th President of the United States, Calvin Coolidge reaffirmed this truth on March 4, 1925. "America seeks no empires built on blood and forces. She cherishes no purpose save to merit the favor of Almighty God." He later wrote, "The foundations of our society and our government rest so much on the teachings of the Bible that it would be difficult to support them if faith and these teachings would cease to be practically universal to our country."

Let us turn now to the Supreme Court. We have let our Founding Fathers speak for themselves. I think it is very clear they were not atheists or deists. It is very clear that they did not attempt to establish a nonChristian nation. Let us look now at the Supreme Court. For 160 years the court consistently and categorically ruled in favor of church and State united hand in hand, but never the State empowering the church, a single church, so that it could oppress the people.

The first ruling came in 1796, Runkle v. Winemiller. The Supreme Court ruled, "By our form of government, the Christian religion is the established religion of all sects."

The Supreme Court consistently ruled for Christian principle as the foundation of our American laws. In 1811 in the Peoples v. Ruggles, Mr. Ruggles' crime was that he publicly slandered the Bible. What would happen today if somebody publicly slandered the Bible? Let me read the decision the court made then. In 1811 he was arrested and his case went all the way to the Supreme Court. This was their verdict. "You have attacked the Bible. In attacking the Bible, you have attacked Jesus Christ. And in attacking Jesus Christ, you have attacked the roots of our Nation. Whatever strikes at the root of Christianity manifests itself in the dissolving of our civil government."

The Justices sentenced him to three months in prison and a $500 fine. That is one year's wage in those days. You might contrast that today with convicted rapists who on average serve 85 days in jail.

In 1844, Vida v. Gerrard, a public school teacher decided she would teach morality without using the Bible. Incredibly she was sued and it went to the Supreme Court and this is what they said. "Why not use the Bible, especially the New Testament? It should be read and taught as the divine revelation in the schools. Where can the purest principles of morality be learned so clearly and so perfectly as from the New Testament?"

And then the Justices went on to cite 87 different legal precedents to affirm that America was formed as a Christian Nation by believing Christians.

This was in a court case in February 29, 1892, against the claims of the cult called the Church of the Holy Spirit that Christianity was not the faith of the people. The Supreme Court made a decision saying that it clearly was and they marshalled 87 different legal precedents to affirm that America was formed as a Christian Nation by believing Christians. They even spent the first 100 years' tax dollars for Christian missionaries, which I mentioned previously.

Regardless of how we feel about it today, the historical fact is there was no separation of church and state. There was a clear denial of the right of the state to empower any one religion so that it could oppress the people. But never, ever could our Founding Fathers ever imagine that we would interpret that establishment clause of the First Amendment as requiring freedom from religion. They certainly meant it to assure freedom of religion.

Let us move across the street from this House to the Supreme Court. As humanism and Darwinism began to rise in the 19th century, some made challenges to the idea that America was a Christian Nation. Both houses of Congress spent one year, from 1853 to 1854, studying the connection of America and the Christian faith.

On March 27 of 1854, Senator Badger, from the Senate, issued the final report. Let me quote very briefly from that final report. "The First Amendment religion clause speaks against an establishment of religion. What is meant by that expression? The Founding Fathers intended by this amendment to prohibit an establishment of religion such as the Church of England presented or anything like it. But they had no fear or jealousy of religion itself. Nor did they wish to see us an irreligious people."

I really like these next words. They are so picturesque. "They did not intend to spread all over the public authorities and the whole public action of the Nation the dead and revolting spectacle of atheistic apathy." And I continue the quote, "In this age there can be no substitute for Christianity. By its general principles, the Christian faith is the great conserving element on which we must rely for the purity and permanence for our free institutions." And it goes on and on to quote more and more in this vein.

Based on his report in May of 1854, in joint session of Congress, this resolution was passed by our Congress. "The great, vital and conserving element in our system of government is the belief of our people in the pure doctrines and divine truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ." This was a resolution of the Congress in May of 1854.

Let us move from Congress to our public schools. For over 140 years after the First Amendment was passed, we spent tax dollars to educate students in public schools that were distinctly Christian. In 1782 the United States Congress voted this resolution: "The Congress of the United States recommends and approves the Holy Bible for use in our schools." That was this Congress. All of our institutions, even our Congress, is at least to some extent the product of a culture, creatures of a culture.

In grammar schools from 1690 until after World War II, two books were the dominant teaching tools. The first and oldest was the New England Primer, used for 200 years. The basics of alphabet were taught as follows:

"A, A wise son makes a glad father but a foolish son is heaviness to his mother.

"B, Better is little with the fear of the Lord than abundance apart from him.

"C, Come unto Christ all you who are weary and heavily laden.

"D, Do not the abominable thing, which I hate, sayeth the Lord.

"E, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God."

The second great teaching tool for 100 years was the McGuffey Reader, and not too many years ago it was called back to some of our schools because when students used that reader, they learned to read. Now we have graduated about a million from our high schools who literally cannot read their diploma.

William Holmes McGuffey was the Professor of Moral Philosophy at Jefferson's University of Virginia and the first president of Ohio University. President Lincoln called him the School Master of the Nation.

In the introduction to teachers in the beginning of his textbook, McGuffey laid out his rationale. "The Christian religion is the religion of our country. From it are derived our notions on the character of God, on the great moral Governor of the universe. On its doctrines are funded the peculiarities of our free institutions."

"From no source has the author drawn more conspicuously than from the sacred Scriptures. For all these extracts from the Bible I make no apology."

Of the first 108 universities founded in this country, 106 were distinctly religious. The first of those was Harvard, named for a very popular New England teacher, Pastor John Harvard. In the original student Harvard handbook, it said that the students should come knowing Greek and Latin so they could study the scriptures. Now a direct quote. "Let every student be plainly instructed and earnestly pressed to consider well, the main end of his life and studies is, to know God and Jesus Christ, which is eternal life, John 17:3; and therefore to lay Jesus Christ as the only foundation of all sound knowledge and learning."

For over 100 years, more than 50 percent of all of Harvard's graduates were pastors.

In 1947, the Supreme Court in Emerson v. The Board of Education deviated from every precedent for the first time and in a limited way affirmed a wall of separation between church and state and the public classroom. Now they did this ignoring 160 years of precedents. And I have read several decisions during these 160 years and there are many, many others. There is no decision of the Supreme Court today relative to this issue that will go back to precedents before 1947 because there are none. For 160 years, clearly the Supreme Court ruled 180 degrees different than the way it is ruling today.

In 1962, less than 40 years ago, in Engle v. Vitale, the Supreme Court removed prayer from the public schools. Since the founding of the Nation, public school classrooms have begun their day with prayer. Now that was declared unconstitutional; an arbitrary use of the word.

I have mentioned God is referred to three or perhaps four times in our Declaration of Independence. Will our courts now declare that unconstitutional?

Then things happened fast. On June 17, 1963, the Supreme Court ruled in Abington v. Schemp that Bible reading was outlawed as unconstitutional in our public school system. Remember that our Congress had recommended it for use in schools before that.

What has happened in America in these past 40 years? When we were true to our roots, we were the greatest Nation in the world, the dream destination of millions in every country. But starting in 1963, the Bible was banned as psychologically harmful to children.

That year, 1963, was the first year an entry about the separation of church and State ever appeared in the World Book Encyclopedia under the United States.

What have we reaped? America 100 years ago had the highest literacy rate of any nation on Earth. Today we spend more on education than any other nation in the world; and yet since 1987, as I mentioned before, we have graduated more than 1 million high school students who cannot even read their diploma.

We spend more than any other nation in the industrialized world to educate our children; and yet SAT scores fell for 24 straight years before finally leveling off in the 1990s.

Has this protection from religion produced better students? Morally have they changed? Are things better in this new climate of protection from the dangers of religion?

In 1960, a survey found 53 percent of America's teenagers had never kissed and 57 percent had never necked. Necking is hugging and kissing, if my colleagues wonder what that meant then; and 92 percent of teenagers in America said they were virgins.

Just 30 years later, in 1990, 75 percent of American high school students were sexually active by 18. In the next 5 years, we spent $4 billion to educate them how to have safe sex and it worked. One in five teenagers in America today lose their virginity before their 13th birthday, and 19 percent of America's teenagers say they have had more than four sexual partners before graduation.

The result? Every day 2,700 students get pregnant, 1,100 hundred get abortions and 1,200 give birth. Every day, another 900 contract a sexually transmitted disease, many incurable. AIDS infection among high school students climbed 700 percent between 1990 and 1995. We have 3.3 million problem drinkers on our high school campuses, over half a million are alcoholics and on any given weekend in America, 30 percent of the student population spends some time drunk.

A young woman in a high school in Oklahoma wrote this poem as a new school prayer. Let me read it for you: Now I sit me down in school where praying is against the rule For this great Nation under God finds mention of Him very odd. If scripture now the class recites, it violates the Bill of Rights.

And any time my head I bow becomes a Federal matter now.

Our hair can be purple, orange, or green, that's no offense, it's a freedom scene. The law is specific, the law is precise! Only prayers spoken out loud are a serious vice.

For praying in a public hall might offend someone with no faith at all.

In silence alone we must meditate, God's name is prohibited by the State.

We are allowed to cuss and dress like freaks, and pierce our noses, tongues and cheeks.

They've outlawed guns but first the Bible. To quote the Good Book makes me liable.

We can elect a pregnant senior queen and the unwed daddy our senior king.

It's inappropriate to teach right from wrong; we're taught that such judgments do not belong.

We can get our condoms and birth controls, study witchcraft, vampires and totem poles.

But the Ten Commandments are not allowed, no word of God must reach this crowd.

It is scary here I must confess; when chaos reigns the school's a mess.

So Lord, this silent plea I make: Should I be shot, my soul please take!

Our Nation, which used to lead the world in every arena, now leads the world in these areas: We are number one in violent crime. We are number one in divorce. We are number one in teenage pregnancies. We are number one in voluntary abortion. We are number one in illegal drug abuse. We are number one in the industrialized world for illiteracy. What happened?

First of all, Christianity went to sleep. Forty years ago, the church gave up the public arena to an increasingly secular government and said we would focus on the souls of men. Actually, the first leader to call for that division was not one of our Founding Fathers. His name was Adolph Hitler, who told the preachers of Germany, "You take care of their souls and I will take care of the rest of their lives."

Here is a million dollar question. Are we better off today? Since we banished God from all our public life and systems and allowed a vocal group of humanist activists to tell us our faith is dangerous to the liberties of this Nation, are we better off? Are we satisfied with what is happening in America?

Alexis de Tocqueville was a famous French statesman and scholar. Beginning in 1831, he toured America for years to find the secret of her genius and strength which was marveled at throughout the world. He published a two-part book entitled "Democracy in America," which is still hailed as the most penetrating analysis of the relationship of character to democracy ever written.

Here is how de Tocqueville summed up his experience: "In the United States, the influence of religion is not confined to the manners, but shapes the intelligence of the people. Christianity therefore reigns without obstacle, by universal consequence. The consequence is, as I have before observed, that every principle in a moral world is fixed and in force."

"I sought for the key to the greatness and genius of America in her great harbors; her fertile fields and boundless forests; in her rich mines and vast world commerce; in her universal public school system and institutions of learning. I sought for it in her democratic Congress and in her matchless Constitution.

"But not until I went into the churches of America and heard her pulpits flame with righteousness did I understand the secret of her genius and power. America is great because America is good; and if America ever ceases to be good, America will cease to be great!"

Let me close by suggesting the answer offered by President Abraham Lincoln in the address he gave calling for April 30, 1860, seeking a national day of humiliation, fasting and prayer.

"We have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of Heaven. We have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity. We have grown in numbers, wealth and powers as no other Nation has ever grown.

"But we have forgotten God. We have forgotten the gracious Hand which preserved us in peace, and multiplied and enriched us; and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own.

"Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving Grace, too proud to pray to the God that made us! It behooves us then to humble ourselves before the offended Power, to confess our national sins and to pray for clemency and forgiveness."

That was Abraham Lincoln.

Today, we have an entire population that has no clue as to its true American heritage. They have not forgotten. They never knew.

Our textbooks have been bled dry of all of this aspect of the founding of our Nation. Abraham Lincoln said this to our Nation. We need to hear it again, and this also comes from his Gettysburg address.

"It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom."

The three great lies are our Founding Fathers were atheists and deists. We let them speak for themselves. They clearly were not.

The second is that they sought to establish a non-Christian Nation. We let them speak. We let the courts speak. We let the Congress speak. We listened to what was said in our schools. Clearly, this was not the case.

That wall of separation never intended that religion should not be in government. It was intended that government should not empower any religion so that it could oppress the people.

What do we do now that our textbooks have been bled dry, that so few, even those in leadership positions, understand the true beginnings of our Nation? What we need to do is to make sure that all of our people, especially our leaders, become familiar with the milieu in which our Nation was born. We need to symbolically shout it from the housetop so that none can refuse to hear it.

The two events that I started this little discussion with, the Ninth Circuit Court ruling in San Francisco and the question of whether the Ten Commandments should be taken down from Memorial Park in Frederick, these two things would have been unthinkable in the Nation that I grew up in. I can remember very well 60 years ago, and they should be unthinkable today, and since all of the institutions of our country are at least to some extent creatures of our culture, before we change our institutions, we need to change our culture. Mr. Speaker, every one of us has a responsibility and an obligation and the privilege to do that.

MEDICARE PRESCRIPTION DRUG PROGRAM

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to spend the time this evening talking about the need for a Medicare prescription drug program and also highlight the fact that more and more of my constituents, and I know this is true all over the country, are concerned about the price of prescription drugs and their inability to buy the medicine or prescription drugs that they feel that is necessary.

I have been to the floor, to the well here many times over the last 2 years, basically saying that we need on the one hand a benefit, a Federal benefit under Medicare to provide prescription drug funding for seniors through Medicare, through the Federal Government and through the Medicare program. But at the same time I have said that we need the coverage that would come from a Federal benefit, we also need to deal with the issue of price because prices continue to go up.

I know that many times during the debate that we had a few weeks ago over prescription drugs, when the Republican leadership would talk about their initiative, their bill that ultimately passed the House, and compare it with the Democratic proposal, which they did not allow to come to the floor, that there had been a hot and heated discussion about the differences between the two bills.

Of course, I have been very critical of the Republican proposal because it is not Medicare. It does not provide a guaranteed benefit, and it does not address the issue of price; and essentially, what the Republicans did when they passed a prescription drug bill a few weeks ago is that they decided to give some money to private insurance companies to essentially subsidize private insurance companies in the hope that they would offer drug-only or medicine-only policies to seniors that the seniors would find affordable.

My major concern over the Republican proposal is that like HMOs, which are private health insurance, that these private insurance companies simply would not offer a prescription drug plan, that there would be many areas in the country where there would be no coverage or even if there was a private insurer that decided to provide a prescription drug-only policy, that it would not be affordable and that essentially we would be passing a program that would never work and no one would be able to take advantage of as a senior citizen, or at least the average senior citizen.

I contrasted that and I continue to with the Democratic proposal, which, as I said, the Republicans never allowed us to bring up; but the Democratic proposal was simply an expansion of Medicare. We have a great Medicare program that almost all seniors participate in, covers their hospitalization, covers their doctors' bills. And what the Democrats said is we would simply add another plank, or provision, to Medicare so that seniors could pay $25 a month in a premium. After the $100 deductible, would get 80 percent of their prescription drug costs paid for by the Federal Government under Medicare, and after $2,000 out-of-pocket expenditures for these seniors with higher drug bills 100 percent of the costs would be paid for by the Federal Government under Medicare.

It is a very simple process, expansion of Medicare. The price issue was addressed by the Democrats, unlike the Republicans, because the Democrats said that the Secretary of Health and Human Services, who basically administers the Medicare program now, would have the bargaining power of 30 to 40 million American seniors under Medicare, and he would be mandated by the Democratic bill to negotiate to reduce prices substantially, maybe 30, 40 percent.

So we had a price provision in there, too. The Republican bill, of course, could not do that kind of negotiation essentially with the Republican bill because it is with private insurance companies. It is not Medicare, and all the seniors would not be covered; but just in case there was some concern about trying to reduce price, the Republican bill specifically had a noninterference clause that said that the administrator of the program could not set up a price stricture or negotiate lower prices.

So we know the Republicans were not seeking to address the price issue. They wanted to make sure, in fact, that it was not addressed at all.

During this whole debate, a lot of my colleagues said to me, even some constituents said to me, why would the Republicans want to put forth this sham? Why would the Republicans want to pretend that they are putting forth a prescription drug plan that no private insurance company will offer or that no senior would be able to take advantage of? And why do they not want to address the issue of price?

The answer to that is fairly simple, and that is because of the special interests, because the brand-name companies do not want a Medicare benefit. They are afraid that if there is a Medicare prescription drug benefit like the Democrat's proposal and they are afraid that if there is an effort to address price, that somehow they will lose profits. I do not believe that because I think if they cover everybody under a universal program, they will be selling more medicine and they will make more money.

Even if the price does come down individually for the senior, the overall fact that so many more seniors are in the program should make the drug companies happy.

But they do not feel that way. They are opposed to the Democratic proposal, and they are doing whatever they can financially to make sure that the Republican proposal passes and the Democratic proposal does not. They have been taking out ads, they have been financing a huge ad program, they have been giving a lot of money to Republican candidates, Congressmen, and Senators, but I will go into that as part of this special order this evening a little later.

What I really want to point out is that this effort on the part of these large pharmaceutical brand name companies to do this, in my opinion, is very much linked to the overall problem we have in this country that has been highlighted in the last few weeks of corporate irresponsibility. We know that many of the corporations, and I do not have to go through the list, Enron, WorldCom, there are so many out there now, that basically doctored the books at the request of certain CEOs or financial officers, used accounting systems to basically doctor the books and show that they had profits when they were actually operating at a net loss or at a lot less profit than they reported. And so nationally, and here in the Congress, in the House of Representatives, we are getting a lot of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle coming up and talking about the need for corporate responsibility; the need for companies, large corporations, to be responsible in their actions.

I would suggest to my colleagues that the effort of the prescription drug industry to mask what they are doing, to give large contributions to candidates, to run massive ad campaigns where they did not even indicate they are paying the cost of them in order to support candidates or to support the Republican bill, is another example of what I call corporate irresponsibility. They need to be held to task.

Now, I want to talk a little tonight, if I could, Mr. Speaker, about some of the things that these pharmaceutical companies have been doing to promote the Republican proposal and to oppose the Democratic alternative. As we know, the other body, this week or next, will be taking up a prescription drug bill. And since the other body is dominated by the Democrats, the proposals that are out there are Medicare prescription drug programs, very much like the House Democratic bill. So we will probably have the opportunity at some point in conference to see the House Republican version and the Democratic version from the other body. So these efforts by the pharmaceutical companies to kill the House Democratic bill will obviously extend over the next few weeks in an effort to kill the Democratic majority bill in the other House as well.

During the course of the debate that we had in the Committee on Energy and Commerce on the Republican proposal here in the House, we actually had to end our debate and our committee hearing one night in the middle of the markup of the bill because Republicans had to go to a fund-raiser that was being given by the National Republican Committee that was being paid for, in large part, or in significant part, by the pharmaceutical companies.

I want to give a little flavor of that and then I want to talk about the ad campaign, because I see one of my colleagues has joined us tonight and I certainly want to yield to him.

But regarding the debate a few weeks ago in the Committee on Energy and Commerce, there was an article in the Washington Post, and I just want to read a little bit from it, it says, "Drug Firms Among Big Donors at GOP Event. Pharmaceutical companies are among 21 donors paying $250,000 each for red carpet treatment at tonight's GOP fundraiser gala starring President Bush, 2 days after Republicans unveiled the prescription drug plan the industry is backing, according to GOP officials." Not Democrats, but GOP officials.

"Drug companies, in particular, have made a rich investment in tonight's event. Robert Ingram, Glaxo-Smith-Klein PLC's chief operating officer, is the chief corporate fundraiser for the gala. His company gave at least $250,000. Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America, a trade group funded by the drug companies, kicked in $250,000, too. PhRMA, as it is best known inside the beltway, is also helping underwrite a TV ad campaign touting the GOP's prescription drug plan. Pfizer contributed at least $100,000 to the event, enough to earn the company the status of a vice chair for the dinner. Eli Lilly and Company, Bayer, AG and Merck each paid up to $50,000 to sponsor a table. Republican officials said other drug companies donated money as part of the fund-raising extravaganza."

Then it says, "Every company giving money to the event has business before Congress. But the juxtaposition of the prescription drug debate on Capitol Hill and drug companies helping underwrite a major fundraiser highlights the tight relationship lawmakers have with groups seeking to influence the work before them. A senior House GOP leadership aide said yesterday that Republicans are working hard behind the scenes on behalf of PhRMA to make sure that the party's prescription drug plan for the elderly suits drug companies."

Now, we had an editorial from the New York Times Saturday, June 22, and I just want to read a certain section where it says: "House Republicans, who regard traditional Medicare as antiquated, would provide money to private insurance companies, a big source of GOP campaign donations, to offer prescription drug policies. The idea of relying on private companies seems more ideological than practical. Even with Federal subsidies, it is unclear that enough insurance companies would be willing to participate and provide the economies that come from competition."

So the bottom line is, and the reason why this scam, the reason why this Republican proposal, which relies on private insurance companies and does not address the price issue is out there and passed the House is because of the contributions from the drug companies.

And just today, and there is so much more I could talk about, but I want to hear from my colleague from Maine, just today, Public Citizen issued a report and basically unmasked the ad campaign that PhRMA and the other drug companies have been conducting, which started, I guess, about a month ago and continues.

Basically, what PhRMA and the drug companies are doing is they are contributing money to United Seniors Association, which is the front senior group that is now running these issue ads in various Republican districts, telling people how wonderful Republican Congressmen are because they voted for this Republican bill, this sham bill.

It is amazing to me. I had no idea how much money we were talking about here. A few weeks ago we thought it was $2 million, $3 million, or $4 million. Now this report from Public Citizen shows clearly that it is already $10 million, and who knows where it is going, $20 million, $30 million, $40 million, $50 million, maybe $100 million that the drug industry is going to pay to try to promote the Republican bill.

I just want to give a little breakdown of some of the things that this report says about United Seniors Association that is fronting the pharmaceutical industry ads. It says today that "Public Citizen estimates that USA," that United Seniors Association, I hate to use the acronym USA for them, but that is what they use, I guess, "that United Seniors Association has spent $12 million on issue ads during the past 17 months. The lion's share of this spending, $9.6 million, was used to promote President Bush and House Republican leaders' prescription drug plan."

It is amazing to me, because this talks about how in the 2000 election United Seniors Association joined Citizens for Better Medicare, which was also a drug industry front group created by the brand name drug company's trade association PhRMA, and they spent approximately $65 million on TV advertising, a large chunk dedicated to electioneering issue ads.

So I do not know, the sky is the limit. I have to assume that we are probably talking, what, maybe $100 million, if 2 years ago it was 65. Maybe now it will be 100. With inflation and everything, it is probably going to go up.

I will not go into all this now because I see my colleague from Maine. But we have to point out, and I want to say to my colleague, who has been the person that has been the most outspoken in this Congress on the issue of price, and how the price of prescription drugs is just making it impossible for so many people, and not just senior citizens but all Americans, to afford their medicine any more. It is just a shame that the reason this is happening is because of the money coming from the brand name drug industry.

I said before that we keep talking about corporate responsibility. I think this is the height of corporate irresponsibility that they spend this kind of money to basically back a plan that will help no one, in my opinion.

I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for yielding to me and for his leadership on this issue; for constantly trying to articulate to the American people the profound differences between the Republican prescription drug plan and the Democratic alternative here in the House.

As the gentleman knows, the Republican plan that was passed last month in this House was really a remarkable plan. Members on the Republican side stood up and said there is a $35-a-month premium. They repeated it over and over again, $35-a-month premium. Yet when we go to the bill and try to find the $35 figure in the bill, it is not there. It is only an estimate. This is a bill with no guaranteed monthly premium, no guaranteed copayment, no guaranteed reduction in price.

It is one of those marvelous things that my friends on the other side of the aisle think will somehow emerge from the wonders of the private sector; that we will have a private stand-alone insurance policy that will take care of seniors. It is remarkable that they can imagine a world in which the insurance industry, which has said repeatedly we really do not want to provide these kinds of insurance policies, will have a change of heart and will step forward and will provide a policy that will not change year to year, will have a consistent premium, a consistent copay, and some reduction in price. We know it will not happen.

Anybody who has been paying any attention to politics in the last 2 years knows that if this prescription drug coverage for seniors were a priority for the Republican Party, it would have been brought up last year; that it would have been brought up before the tax cut. But for Republicans, tax cuts for the wealthy are far more important than prescription drug coverage for seniors. Now we can see that, as the gentleman referred to a few moments ago, the pharmaceutical company is thanking our friends on the Republican side of the aisle for coming up with this sham proposal and voting for it.

This is a hope, which has proved successful in the past, that if you repeat something often enough to a large enough group of people, a certain percentage of them will actually believe it. And that is basically what is going on. Almost $10 million spent by the pharmaceutical industry in the last 15 months or so, $4.6 million in the last 2 months alone, thanking Republicans for supporting a bill that has no guaranteed premium, no guaranteed benefit, no guaranteed reduction in price, no guaranteed copay, but sounds good.

It is another election year inoculation. And if we are not successful this year in passing a real prescription drug benefit, then 2 years from now Republicans will step forward and they will say, just before the next election, we have a plan. We have a plan, and somehow it will, like magic, emerge.

There was a physician in Bangor, Maine, who wrote recently in a letter to the editor, and I quote, "The bill would be dropped like a bad date by House Republicans if they and President Bush did not need it in reelection campaigns."

It seems to me that this really comes down to a question of values, and the fundamental value is whether the first priority, when it comes to prescription drugs, is to protect the profits of the pharmaceutical industry or whether the first priority is to make sure that our seniors can afford to buy the drugs that their doctors tell them they have to take.

Now, the first half of last year, as my colleague will remember, the President traveled all across the country, and there was not any talk of prescription drugs for seniors then. It was one theme repeated over and over and over and over again: It was simply, "It is not the government's money, it is your money."

Mr. Speaker, it was an appeal to the American people to think of themselves first, to think of their own individual interests before the common good. That appeal was pounded in in the first 6 months of the administration, pounded in over and over again. It is not the government's money; it is your money.

What is the refrain today? Now that we are deep in deficit with $165 billion projected deficit for this year with a comparable deficit projected for next year, is there an effort to say, We are in this problem together and we have to work out of it together? No. What we see is the same kind of appeal to individual interests over the common good and the common interest.

Mr. Speaker, the question really is when it comes to prescription drugs and the other issues that we face before us, whether the governing ideal of this House of Representatives will be me first or all of us together. That really is the fundamental choice. Those who come and say we are going to rely on private stand-alone insurance for prescription drugs for seniors are really saying that each individual should go out and buy his or her own insurance policy rather than having the Secretary of Health and Human Services, as in the Democratic bill, negotiate lower prices on behalf of all Medicare beneficiaries.

That is what we have done in our legislation. We have said seniors belong to the largest health care plan in the country. It is called Medicare. Well, they ought to get a discount. If they are in the largest health care plan and 39 million Americans are getting their prescription drugs through Medicare, there ought to be a discount that reflects the market power of that buying group; but seniors on Medicare do not have the buying power of Aetna beneficiaries or Cigna beneficiaries. They do not have bargaining power at all today.

We have this anomaly. We have the largest group of health care beneficiaries in the country, Medicare beneficiaries, paying the highest prices not just in the United States but in the world for their prescription drugs. Here we have a group of seniors that make up 12 percent of the population, but they buy one-third of all prescription drugs, 33 percent of all prescription drugs. Half of them have either no coverage or very inadequate coverage for their prescription drugs, and our friends on the Republican side of the aisle, for fear of strengthening Medicare because it is a Federal health care plan, are basically saying no, no, you have to rely on the private insurance market.

In Maine and many other rural States, 15 to be exact, there is no private managed care under Medicare, no options at all. And those who say the private market provides more choice ignore the fact when private insurance companies do not want to offer prescription drug coverage or health insurance in a particular area, they just pull up and leave.

We have a program that works. It is called Medicare. It has kept our seniors with affordable health care despite its flaws, despite its problems. There is not a health care plan in the world that does not have problems. It has lifted seniors out of the condition where a trip to the hospital meant a trip to the bankruptcy court as well. That is something we have to preserve.

But coming back to this question of values, what we have seen in all of the corporate scandals over the last few years is an attitude at the top in too many American corporations which basically comes down to the same thing, me first. I will get mine. We will cook the books, drive up the stock price, and then the CEOs and officers sellout. And who gets hit in the end? The shareholders get hit in the pocketbook. Shareholders find that their pensions have dropped dramatically. What happens to the workers? They get laid off. They do not have all this money tucked away. They cannot party on their yachts when they leave the company, as some CEOs have done. They are stuck. This is fundamentally a question about values.

Are we going to take our common problems and deal with them as common problems, or are we going to say to the American people, as our friends on the other side of the aisle do all the time, each person on his own? Each person stands alone. Do the best you can with what you have got, but we are certainly not going to all work together.

Well, it is time for this country to pull together. It is time for us to take our common challenges, our economic challenges, our health care challenges, our environmental challenges and work together to build a better and stronger America. I know we can do it; but we have to shed that old motto, the "me first" motto and get to something that really reflects how much we depend on each other and how much we need to work together to build a better country.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) for his leadership on this issue.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I have to say until I saw this latest information about the level of funding that was going to United Seniors Association and how much money they were spending on this ad campaign, I still was under the belief that some of our Republican colleagues did not like the Democratic proposal and liked the private insurance option because ideologically they did not like Medicare, they thought Medicare was not a good program, they did not like government, and they had a hard time supporting a government program like Medicare, even if it works, because it is a government program.

But I am becoming more cynical now as I see the level of funding that is being spent on these ad campaigns and how it is just targeting Republicans, and particularly Republicans that are vulnerable. If we talk about a $100 million ad campaign divided over some of the most seriously contested seats, it will be almost as much money as some of the candidates will spend on their own campaigns. I think the support on the other side is linked to the money, is linked to the fact that PhRMA and the drug companies are putting all this money out to promote Republican campaigns.

I am so glad that the gentleman raised the value issue. That is what this is about. This is about some greedy people who want to make more profit and do not care about the consequences for the average senior.

Last week, last Thursday I believe, there was a bus load of about 50 seniors that came from New Jersey. They did not go to Canada; they were highlighting that they were taking a bus to come to Washington instead of Canada. The gentleman from Maine knows about all of the people that go over to Canada because of the cheaper drug prices. We had 15 buses that went the week before to Canada from all of the border States. All the seniors from New Jersey were talking about was the price, how the price of prescription drugs keeps going up, and it is so unaffordable to them. I do not understand how these brand-name drug companies can spend $100 million on ad campaigns which are going to do nothing more than prevent these senior citizens from getting the medicine that they need. It is pathetic. It really is.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, they may be spending millions and millions on contributions to candidates, on TV ads promoting their point of view, or the feel-good ads about the industry itself as a way of trying to resurrect the industry's image; but it is also the case that many of the drugs that they have been developing these days are so close to drugs that already exist on the market that they cannot get the kind of sales volumes they want without a very heavy investment into direct-to-consumer advertising. Last year the industry spent $2.5 billion on direct-to-consumer advertising. We can feel what has happened to the industry. It really has become a marketing operation. They depend very much on blockbuster drugs. Some of those drugs are blockbuster. This is an industry that does some remarkable things, but they move from the argument that we are earning very high profits right now to the conclusion that we have to sustain those profits at exactly the level we are at; and more particularly, that we have to charge our seniors the highest prices in the world in order to get enough money to do research. That is not true.

Just think about it. We are 280 million people in this country. Thirty-nine million are on Medicare. That is a very small percentage of the total market for prescription drugs in this country. There are 330 million people living in Europe, 125 million living in Japan, 25 million living in Canada. There are lots of people around the world who are buying prescription drugs. They are all paying lower prices than the seniors, that 39 million or maybe half that, really, half that group which is buying their prescription drugs from the pharmacist with no support from an insurance company.

Mr. Speaker, it just cannot be the 20 million Americans, very high prices charged to 20 million Americans, is the salvation of the pharmaceutical industry. It cannot be. It is not true.

But if we give enough money to groups like United Seniors Association, which sounds like a legitimate seniors organization, and they will run ads supporting the pharmaceutical industry's solution to the issue that is raised here, thanking our friends on the Republican side of the aisle for supporting a bill that will do virtually nothing for America's seniors, then we begin to understand how money has distorted the policy-making process in this House.

It is profoundly troubling that we cannot get a clean vote even. We could not get a clean vote from the Republican Committee on Rules on the Democratic alternative. That, I think, is a scandal that if people fully understood, they would be outraged about. They expect us to have a debate here. They expect us to have a choice between competing alternative plans, and we do not. The Democratic plan gets buried in a few minutes of debate on a procedural motion. That is another part of the scandal that really we need to deal with.

If we do not pass a real Medicare prescription drug bill this year, we will just do it again 2 years down the road. They will come in with a bogus plan and hope that once again for the third cycle in a row that enough of the American people will be fooled into thinking that for them, prescription drugs is as important as tax cuts for the wealthy. It is not. We know it is not; but that is the continuing effort, to try to prove that they care.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, what I do not understand, it seems to me if we provide a Medicare benefit the way we have proposed as Democrats, and we take in that other half of the senior population, 20 million that are having problems, some of them are not buying the drugs or have difficulty, we are going to increase the volume of sales that the brand-name manufacturers are going to have. If we do some of the other things, like the gentleman has addressed the issue of price, not just in the context of a senior benefit, but we have collectively talked about doing more with generics, like the other body passed the bill last week that would plug up the loopholes and make it easier to move to generics.

We have talked about this: I know that in the other body, one of the Members has a bill which I have sponsored here that would eliminate the tax underwriting of advertising for pharmaceuticals. I mean, those are the kinds of things that would make a lot more people, even those who are not seniors, able to buy drugs. Even generics, a lot of the brand-name companies own a lot of the generic companies too, so it is not like there is this huge division between generics and brand names. A lot of the brand-name companies manufacture generics too.

So why is it that they do not see the increased volume that would come with that with many more Americans purchasing the drugs, even at a reduced price, as basically lifting their sales and their profits as well? That is what I do not understand.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I am confident that they do. They do, in fact, understand that. The evidence I would give for that is the largest pharmaceutical company, Pfizer, has offered to seniors living under 200 percent of the poverty level, with incomes of less than 200 percent of the poverty level, they have said that we will sell to you all of our drugs, which average in retail $61 or $62 a month; we will sell all of our drugs to you for $15 a month. That is a 75 percent discount; $61 and $62 drugs on average, all of them for $15 a month. How can they do that? Well, they will sell more medication. They will sell more drugs. We can bet that the cost of producing pills is a very, very small amount of the sale price. There is a lot that goes into research and development, no question. There is a lot, obviously, that goes into marketing. But the cost of production itself is a minor thing.

Mr. PALLONE. So what the gentleman is saying is that there may be one or two companies that see the benefit if they can get a larger volume; but overall, the trade group PhRMA does not see it that way, and they would rather keep their prices artificially high.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I would distinguish between what they say and what they believe. Because if we look at all of the pharmaceutical industry drug discount card plans, they are out there advertising their discounts at being between 25 and 40 percent. That is what we have been talking about with my legislation and with other bills, getting to a 25 to 40 percent discount for all seniors. The pharmaceutical industry is out there saying, we have discount cards that will do that; we have discount prices that will do that.

Now, the question is, if they are willing to do that, what is the problem with the legislation that requires them to do that? Well, the answer is, we do not want to be hemmed in. We do not want to be required. We do not want the government to be able to tell us what to charge. In fact, a promise that is made on a temporary basis to say, we are going to promise you 25 to 40 percent does not mean they can actually deliver that or will deliver it. They will, in all likelihood, do what they have done with all of their other markets, which is charge what the market will bear; and if they give a little bit of a discount today, they may take it away tomorrow.

Seniors need predictability and continuity and stability in their Medicare plan. They need to know what the benefits are; they need to know what the premiums are for whatever services they are getting. If it is a physician service or if it is, as we have proposed, a prescription drug benefit on top of that, they need to have predictability. The pharmaceutical industry is not willing to provide it voluntarily. That is why we need legislation, so that seniors can sleep at night knowing that they are going to be able to take the medication that their doctors tell them they have to take.

That ultimately is the goal, because ultimately, lifesaving prescription drugs should not be dispensed on the basis of seniors' income. They ought to be dispensed on the basis that everyone who needs the medication will be able to get it; everyone should be able to have to pay some portion of the cost, but people who need lifesaving drugs ought to be able to get them.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I see that the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND) is here joining me. I know he was there at the Committee on Commerce markup the day that we had to adjourn so that the chairman, the Republican chairman of the committee and other Republican members could go to the big fundraiser; and at the end, at 5 o'clock, because we knew that the clock was getting close to 5 and they had to leave for the fundraiser, we were sort of kidding them and hoping that they would stay for an extra half hour or hour; but boy, they certainly did not want to do that; they were determined to get out of there by 5 o'clock, no matter what. I mean, I laugh, and it really is not funny, because we have talked about the consequences in terms of seniors. But there is no question about what they were up to that night.

Mr. STRICKLAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend. I was there and, as the gentleman knows, the next day we worked all day long and all night long; and we finally passed out a bill which only provides coverage for a person who has a prescription drug need of $400 a month. The bill that finally passed out, the Republicans passed it out, would only provide coverage for 4½ months out of the 12-month year; and yet the poor senior would have to pay premiums every month, even during the months when they were receiving no coverage at all and, as the gentleman knows, they tell us that the premium would be on average $35 a month, but there is no guarantee that it would not be $65 or $85 or $125 a month.

So it is quite shameful, I think, that at a time when nearly every person in this Chamber, as they go home and talk to their constituents, say the right words, and they tell their seniors that they want to get them a prescription drug benefit and they want it to be affordable and they want it to provide choice, but when it comes to making the tough decisions here in this Chamber, they simply make the wrong decision.

Now, the Democratic proposal would add a voluntary drug benefit to Medicare. Why is that important? I know the gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Maine have been talking about the fact that every citizen in every other country on Earth pays less for their prescription medications than does the American citizen. That is really quite sad because, as the gentleman knows, so many of these drugs are discovered, developed using tax dollars. So the American citizen pays the taxes to help develop these drugs, and then the pharmaceutical companies decide they are going to charge American citizens more than citizens anywhere else on Earth. That is shameful, and we ought to change it.

But there is something that I think is even more shameful than that, and that is the fact that here in America, America's most vulnerable, who are our elderly, our seniors citizens, end up paying more for their drugs than do HMOs or large insurance companies or even the Federal Government. Why is that? It is simply because the individual senior citizen does not have any clout when it comes to buying their medications. They are only one little individual. And the large insurance companies, the large HMOs and the Federal Government, they buy in bulk, they buy in large quantities, and so they can get discounts. But the individual senior citizen, because we have no Medicare benefit, just simply is on their own. It is quite shameful.

It is troubling to me that this vulnerable population, the people who are most likely to be on fixed incomes, are seniors; the people most likely to have chronic health conditions that require continuous medications for the rest of life are senior citizens. The population that is most likely to need multiple medications are senior citizens. Yet senior citizens are the ones who are being charged the most for the medications. There is something really fundamentally wrong about that. I believe the American people expect us to fix that problem.

I hope the American people are paying attention, because we are going to have an election here in 4 months or so, and I believe that those of us who are willing to stand up to the pharmaceutical companies, to stand for America's senior citizens, to fight for a Medicare prescription drug benefit that is predictable, affordable, voluntary, accessible to any senior who wants to participate, I think we are the ones, quite frankly, who deserve to be returned to this lofty Chamber; and I believe those who will not support America's senior citizens, quite frankly, do not deserve to return to this Chamber.

So I hope the American people are paying attention. It is important that they pay attention to the details because, as the gentleman knows, the devil is always in the details, and words are cheap, talk is cheap. Certainly actions speak louder than words, especially when it comes to this particular issue.

I would like to point out another problem that I think deserves attention. The Congress, I think, must take action in this era of corporate misdeeds. They must look at the drug industry's behavior, including the misstatement of profits and the abuse of patents.

Particularly damaging to consumers is when drug companies use patent laws to file frivolous claims that extend their market exclusivity, blocking far more affordable generic drugs from coming to the market. I would just like to use a case in point.

Prilosec is a case study of the failure of our current patent law. Many seniors in my district take Prilosec. It is a good medication. It is the number one medication prescribed for seniors for the treatment of heartburn and acid reflux disease. Now, the original patent for Prilosec expired in October of 2001, but the manufacturer delayed market entry of a generic by filing nearly a dozen lawsuits and by claiming that Prilosec has unique benefits when administered with applesauce. As a result, the generic manufacturer had to do time-consuming research on how the generic research works when given with applesauce before it could be approved.

In 2001, the company had Prilosec sales of more than, and this is an astounding figure, more than $16 million per day. And during the year, the company raised the price of Prilosec by more than four times that of the rest of the inflation within our economy.

Now, this specific scenario and others like it amount to an incredible windfall for the drug industry, one that Congress simply must not allow to continue. These higher drug prices hurt seniors who depend on Medicare the most, because they are not shielded by the full cost of drugs like those who have insurance coverage.

During the past 10 years, 10 of the 50 drugs most frequently used by seniors were generic drugs, while the remaining 40 were brand-name drugs. Now, the prices of generic drugs used most frequently by seniors rose 1.8 percent, 1.8 percent from January 2001 to January 2002. During the same period, prices for the brand-name drugs increased by an average of 8.1 percent, or three times the rate of inflation.

So I think this brings us to only one reasonable conclusion and that is that we need a voluntary prescription drug benefit with a predictable premium that is a part of the Medicare benefit package that America's seniors can depend upon, just as they depend upon the Medicare system today.

As I said, I hope the American people are paying attention, because talk is cheap, actions speak louder than words; and those who do what is right for America's senior citizens, in my judgment, are those who deserve to remain in this institution. And those who turn their back on America's seniors and instead support the pharmaceutical industry, they are the ones that I think have relinquished their right to serve here.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman because he brought up so many good points on this issue. But particularly when the gentleman was talking about the roadblocks, if you will, that the brand-name companies put up to try to prevent generics from coming to the market, I think that is so significant.

As the gentleman mentioned earlier, the other body last week actually passed out of committee a bill that would close a lot of these loopholes with the generics, and particularly this idea that once they file suit, it is up to 30 months that they can prevent the generic from coming to market. Thirty months? We are talking about almost 3 years, 2½ years, which is absolutely crazy, when we know all these seniors that are out there that are suffering.

In fact, they passed that bill before they even passed the benefit bill. They are probably going to attach the benefit structure to that bill. I have to say that the other body, I think in large part because they have a Democratic majority, has been trying to address this price issue even before, in a sense, they have addressed the benefit issue, because they realize how important the price issue is.

The gentleman could argue, and I do not agree with that, but the gentleman could argue that if we addressed the price issue effectively, that that would go far toward solving the problem. I still think we need the benefit; but we need both, essentially.

I just find that so often the issue of price, though, is what people talk about, as my colleague, the gentleman from Maine, knows. That is what our constituents are constantly bringing up when we have a town meeting or when we see them on the street. That is what they talk about: how to address the price issue.

The Republicans here in the House did absolutely nothing to address that issue. They had that noninterference clause. I actually brought it with me, because it is amazing.

The gentleman will remember, in the Committee on Commerce markup, they never even mentioned it. They sort of suggested they were going to have discounts through competition. I remember the Republican chairman kept saying, well, we are going to have discounts.

I think the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON) on the floor said there was going to be a discount because of competition between the private insurance companies. But they have right in the bill, I am just going to read it, that "the administrator may not institute a price structure for the reimbursement of covered outpatient drugs, or interfere in any way with negotiations between the sponsors and Medicare+Choice organizations and drug manufacturers" that relate to price. In other words, they cannot bring up the price issue in the course of negotiations.

It is just amazing to me how, on the one hand, they suggest that somehow these private insurance companies are going to compete with each other, but that has to be totally on their own. That cannot be anything that the administrator of the Medicare program does. They cannot interfere in any way to try to bring the price down.

Mr. STRICKLAND. If the gentleman will continue to yield, Mr. Speaker, that provision certainly was influenced by the pharmaceutical industry. Basically, they are putting into law a prohibition on the Secretary of Health and Human Services, who is supposed to be representing the American people.

They are really going to try to prohibit him by law from doing anything that is going to lower the prices of these prescription drugs.

Mr. PALLONE. Exactly.

Mr. STRICKLAND. Why would we do that if it were not simply to satisfy the pharmaceutical industry?

I want to tell the gentleman, this is not a Republican or Democratic issue back home at the grassroots. I went to a VFW hall this past Sunday morning for breakfast, and there were people there at that hall that were talking about not being able to afford their medicines. They were Republicans and Democrats. This is an issue that cuts across parties.

It cuts across economic levels, as well, because people can be fairly well-to-do and be unable to see that their parents or their relatives or their neighbors, their elderly neighbors, have access to life-saving medications.

People are sick of this. They are absolutely outraged at what is happening. Why that outrage does not result in some meaningful action here in the House of Representatives is beyond me. This problem has been with us for quite some time. We talk and we talk, and we have campaigns, and we say we are going to do something about it; yet time passes, and then we go through that kind of farcical exercise that we went through in our committee, where every amendment that we brought up that was designed to make these drugs more affordable was shot down by our Republican friends. They simply would not take the first step in trying to lower the cost of these drugs.

They use all kinds of rhetoric. They talk about price controls. Well, I think when a pharmaceutical company charges a large HMO a certain amount for a medication and then charges some elderly, sick, income-limited senior citizen two or three times as much for that same medication, I think that is price discrimination; and I think that is what we should be looking for, getting rid of price discrimination that is directed toward America's most vulnerable citizens.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will remember specifically, they actually went the opposite direction, because they wanted to eliminate the Medicaid, not Medicare, but the Medicaid price structure, if you will. And actually they did vote to do that at one point and suggested that somehow it was something that the pharmaceutical industry opposed; that somehow the pharmaceutical industry did not want to eliminate the pricing structure that existed under Medicaid. That is just not true. That was another thing that was a bone, basically, to the pharmaceutical industry.

And then I remember the biggest affront to me is when, I think it was our colleague, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK), who introduced a couple of amendments that would basically use the negotiating or price structure, the price negotiations that we use now for the VA and I guess maybe for military, as well, and we just wanted to take that and use it for seniors. They said no, no, we do not want that; we cannot do that for seniors. We can do it for the military and the veterans, but we cannot do it for the seniors. It was amazing.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN).

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding; and I agree with my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, that this is really an issue of price discrimination. Why do seniors in America pay the highest prices in the world? It is because, frankly, they do not have any bargaining power or leverage now. The only way they can get that leverage, get that bargaining power, is through Medicare, through giving the Secretary of Health and Human Services the ability to bargain on their behalf.

I have to smile sometimes when we hear about how competition is going to drive down price. Well, I am open to hearing from anybody the last time there was a price war among brand-name pharmaceutical companies, where first one cut prices and then another cut prices, and then the original one responded with a further cut in prices. I do not remember that happening, ever.

In fact, the prices basically keep going up, even though the utilization is also going up. Even though people are using more drugs, they are buying more drugs; and it does not cost that much to make them. So when people use more Prilosec, or whatever, the profits go up at a very rapid rate; but even so, the pharmaceutical companies are increasing prices on brand-name drugs. We do not have competition.

Mr. PALLONE. We do not because we have a monopoly. Basically, the patent structure is giving a particular company a monopoly for that particular drug for a period of time. Unless we allow generics or others to come in, which they obviously try to prevent, as my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, mentioned, we essentially have a monopoly for a period of time and do not have competition.

The thing that was amazing to me, too, is this whole idea that they are going to create competition among the private insurance companies, but the private insurance companies do not even offer the insurance. How can there be any competition? That is the competition they are talking about with the private insurance companies.

Mr. STRICKLAND. If my friend, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE), will continue to yield, I keep going back to the fact, how long are the American people going to tolerate this situation? We can go to Canada, we can go to Mexico, Belgium, England, Japan, we can go anywhere on Earth and buy medications that are developed within this country, many of them, in part using American taxpayer dollars; and we can buy those medications with much less cost to the consumer than the American citizen must pay.

How much longer are the American people going to put up with that situation? This is just a matter of gross discrimination. American citizens are subsidizing the costs of prescription medications for citizens all over this world. When are we going to put a stop to it? When are we going to say that our people are being treated unfairly?

Then, when are we going to say that in this country, America's seniors are not going to continue to be gouged and charged more than insurance companies or HMOs for the same medication? It seems like a no-brainer to me. I cannot understand why there is so much determination on the other side of the aisle to keep us from taking action against this situation.

Mr. PALLONE. I want to thank my colleagues. The answer, obviously, is because of what the brand-name pharmaceutical companies are doing to pay for the ads and pay for the campaigns. It is the special interest money.

REPORT ON H.R. 5120, TREASURY, POSTAL SERVICE, AND GENERAL GOVERNMENT APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003

Mr. ISTOOK (during the Special Order of Mr. PALLONE), from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107-575) on the bill (H.R. 5120) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the United States Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain Independent Agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHUSTER). Pursuant to clause 1, rule XXI, all points of order are reserved on the bill.

REPORT ON H.R. 5121, LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003

Mr. ISTOOK (during the Special Order of Mr. PALLONE), from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107-576) on the bill (H.R. 5121) making appropriations for the Legislative Branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 1, rule XXI, all points of order are reserved on the bill.

RECOMMENDING VIGOROUS PROSECUTION OF CORPORATE WRONGDOERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHUSTER). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I have heard the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND), and I have heard the previous speaker make a little comment about political donations. I hope the gentlemen have the opportunity to read the article this morning about the Democratic Party, the Democratic National Committee, and their $100,000 sponsorship. They were hosted by Bristol-Myers this weekend. That is the prescription drug company. I think that is what these guys are talking about.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND) I have a good deal of respect for. He is very capable, a bright gentleman. But I would like the gentleman to show me anybody on this House floor, anybody on this House floor who opposes seniors.

He makes a statement out here on the House floor about, well, we should be the party, I guess he is referring to the Democrats, we should be the party that comes back here because the Republicans are against seniors. I challenge the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND) to show me one Republican or one Democrat or one Independent or Socialist, whatever our one party is registered as, show me one person on this House floor, just one, I say to the gentleman, that is opposed to seniors.

I do not know anybody opposed to seniors. That is as absurd as the statement we hear in here, well, they are against education. Show me one Congressman, show me one elected official in this Nation, whether it is a State representative, whether it is a school board member, whether it is a city council member, whether it is a Congressman, whether it is an appointed position in our political system, a cabinet member, that is opposed to education.

These statements are absurd on their face. They should not be made in a debate, where we really want results, or we want solutions. The prudent man is not going to come up here and accuse the other side of being against seniors: they do not support seniors, they do not like seniors, they want prescription care costs to continue to skyrocket. There is nobody in this country that wants that. I do not know anybody opposed to seniors.

If Members really want to get progress, if they really want to have bipartisan efforts towards a solution, do not stand up here and blatantly make statements that the other side is opposed to education, or the other side is opposed to seniors. We do not get anywhere doing that.

So I would suggest, constructively and in a positive fashion, to my colleagues to entertain a few more positive statements. Maybe they do not agree with the process, or maybe they have a disagreement with one of the proposals dealing with a matter that impacts seniors. Then address the proposal, instead of doing the politically expedient thing, and that is to take a jab at the other party by saying, well, they oppose seniors, in whole.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, that is not the purpose of me being here today, although I do mention it; and it was with interest that Bristol-Myers, who announced last week, one of these corporations that is looking at restating their earnings, or they took some income in by prepay of customers when they picked up their drugs at the pharmacy, I do want to note that as the Democrats, as they were attacking us this evening, take a look at who hosted their event this weekend, this last weekend.

So both parties need to be very careful about that kind of thing, because there is some corporate sickness out there.

Let me give an example. Go to any shopping mall we can find in the country and look for the most beat-up car, the most beat-up automobile we can find on the shopping mall lot and tell people around there that you are going to steal the car so somebody will call the police and say you are stealing the car. Then drive that car off the parking lot. Try and steal the car.

Do Members know what is going to happen in our society? No matter what the value of the car, and let us just say it is the biggest piece of junk we would ever see in our life, and the car is worth $200, that is all anybody would give us, $200, probably to drive it straight to a junkyard, you drive it off, get it on the street, and immediately the police, the law enforcement in our Nation, the police will stop the vehicle. They will surround you.

I used to be a police officer, and I know what it is like to make a stolen car arrest. We do not go up and issue a ticket. We get out of the car, hold a weapon on them, a deadly weapon, and we aim it at them, right where we could kill them if they tried to make any kind of move towards us. We demand and order them out of their car.

You have them lay on the pavement. You immediately go up. You take that car thief. You put them in handcuffs. You take them back to your police unit and you take them to jail. That is exactly what you do for somebody that steals a junk car. And yet today what we are witnessing in this country is corporate thievery the likes that we have never seen.

Last week we had a guy named Scott Sullivan, 40 years old or so, who was the chief financial officer for a corporation called WorldCom. And he was up here testifying in front of the United States Congress. Actually he refused to testify. But he was up here in front of the committee with a big smirk on his face. He took away tens and tens and tens of millions of dollars away from that corporation. By the way, he has never been in handcuffs. He has never ever been surrounded by police officers with their weapons drawn. And while he was smirking in front of that committee, as he was full of himself, construction continued on his 20 or $25 million home that he is building in Florida at the expense of not only the stockholders of WorldCom, not only the bondholders of WorldCom, but probably the most important components of WorldCom Corporation and that is the employees. How many employees of WorldCom saw their pensions wiped out, saw many, many years of service?

Now, understand that WorldCom is not that old of a corporation. What they did is went out and acquired other companies, companies that had been in business for a long, long time; companies that had employees who had worked for them for many, many years; faithful employees, had dedicated their careers to that company. And WorldCom bombed and Scott Sullivan and his boss, Bernie Ebbers, who went to the board of directors and borrowed $400 million from the corporation, walked away with a loan of $400 million, not from a bank where anybody else has to go to get their loans, from the board of directors, the people that he wined and dined.

One of the directors, in fact, he supplied him a jet for a year. Actually he leased him a private jet. This jet probably cost the corporation 50 to 100 to maybe $200,000 a month for that jet. And the president of the corporation loaned it to a member of the board of directors, leased it to him for a dollar a year. Those people are having these mansions built while they are testifying or appearing in front of the committee. And all of these thousands of employees of WorldCom, and many more to come, there will be layoffs, WorldCom will very likely file bankruptcy this week. It makes me ill to see the likes of Scott Sullivan building that mansion in Florida at the expense of our society. So I want to talk a little bit about that this evening.

I will keep my comments to about 30 minutes because we will shift from that to agriculture. Let me start out with kind of a basic lesson, and that is how corporations are formed. Remember that in America not all corporations are bad. In fact, most corporations are not bad. Most corporations in America, if you figure by the number of corporations, are small family businesses.

I will give you an example. My wife's family is in the ranching business.

They have that incorporated. It is a small corporation. Her dad runs the ranch and he is the president of the corporation. She and her brothers are on the board of directors. Her mom is chairman or the vice president of the corporation. So there are a lot of small businesses that are corporations. A lot of your friends in their little businesses are incorporated. So not all corporations are bad, just like not all priests are bad, but you have got a few bad apples.

The thing to think about is what is the structure of a corporation? Where are the checks and balances for a corporation? Our society works because we have checks and balances. What are the checks and balances of a corporation, and where do those checks and balances go wrong? What went wrong? Why did the system not correct itself?

Well, let us look at the structure of a corporation, and specifically look at the checks-and-balances system. A corporation consists of shareholders. Those are people in this country, a lot of people who have no idea that they own shares in a corporation or are actually shareholders probably through their mutual funds or through their pension funds. What they do is they put their retirement funds in trust for an organization that then turns around and uses those proceeds to buy stock in corporations. And there are a lot of people that have owned stock. Many Americans over the years, over the history of this country. The old corporations, the General Electrics, the General Motors, the car manufacturers like Ford and Chrysler and people like that. So the shareholders come together. They are the owners of the corporation. They are the people that invest the money, that put the capital, that is what the money is called, they put the capital in to purchase that and form that corporation.

What they do is oversee, because if you own a $30 share of Chrysler Corporation or a share of some other company out there, you are not going to be involved in the day-to-day management of a corporation like Chrysler, for example. What you do is the shareholder gets together and they elect people to represent them in the corporation, and the people that they elect are called the board of directors.

Now the board of directors are very, very important people, very important people for a corporation. They are the trustees of the corporation, so to speak. They are a fiduciary duality, not only to the shareholders of the corporation, but they also have a fiduciary duty in their responsibilities that they carry out on behalf of the corporations. And they have a fiduciary duty not to act in their own self-interest, not to act in such a way that they make themselves rich at the expense of the corporation.

We are seeing this time after time after time. These corporations that are in trouble today, I can tell you one of the points that the checks and balances failed, the check point that failed is right there on your board of directors. You can take a look at Enron Corporation. You can take a look at Kmart Corporation. You can look at WorldCom. You can look at Adelphia. You can look at TYCO Corporation. These are people that self-enriched themselves. Instead of carrying out their fiduciary duties to protect the shareholders, to represent the shareholders, because of the fact that they were induced for self-enrichment, in other words, put money in their own pockets, put it in their own pockets, they did this. They walked away from their very fundamental duties as a member of the board of directors. So we are having a failure in the system in some of these companies.

Well, the board of directors, remember, they were elected by the shareholders. They then turn around and they hire a president. They hire a president or a chief executive officer to run the corporation.

Now, the board of directors is not intended to be there every day, but the president of the corporation is. The president then installs his management team. And the management team in turn hires the employees underneath the management team that carry out the duties of the corporation. Now, obviously, these employees are very important, but the employees do not serve on the board of directors. The employees have to trust that the board of directors has the best interest of the corporation, which is the shareholders, in mind and the employees in mind. They have a lot of trust. These employees, they have a lot of trust in this board of directors. A lot of trust in that board of directors, and they got let down.

Without exception, in every one of these corporations you read about in Wall Street or you read about in your morning newspaper that are deceiving the shareholders, that are deceiving the American public, in every one of those cases you will see a fallacy or a letdown of the fiduciary duties by the board of directors.

Now, theoretically under the structure of a corporation, the board of directors should have legal counsel and they should have auditors. I do not have to say much about what has happened to the auditing profession with some of these corporations. What has happened, frankly, is they got in bed with the board of directors and they got in bed with the president. They have thought about self-enrichment. If there is one word that has led to the downfall of many of these major corporations, and I am not so concerned about the corporation as I am the employees of these corporations, the thousands and thousands of employees that are without their jobs, that their pension plans are wiped out, their savings plans are wiped out. They are not young people any more. They do not have a career ahead of them. Their career is behind them, and it gets wiped out. There is one word that describes all of that and that word is called self-enrichment. Self-enrichment.

The auditors did not do their job. I will tell you in the banking business, the auditors, when the Federal Government goes in and audits that bank, you cannot give the auditor his pencil. You cannot buy them a cup of coffee. You do not know those auditors. They do not go with you afterwards and have dinner. They do not go out and party with you. They do not socialize with you on weekends. That is what an auditor should be.

An auditor should be at arm's length. But that is not what happened. These little symbols mean arm's length. That is not what happened. What happened is the auditors, and in the case of the TYCO Corporation, the legal counsel got in with the president and the CEO, and this is the president who does not pay taxes on his art, sales taxes, so you can imagine what other deceitment he has worked on the American public, and the legal counsel gets in and starts paying himself bonuses of $20 or $30 million a year and then structures the bonuses in such a way that he can hide it from the board of directors. Or if the board of directors figures it out, he can say, do not worry, the reports that we give to the shareholders, and every year the board reports to the shareholders in what is called an annual report, I can structure our pay in such a way that we do not have to reveal it in this report to the shareholders. Because if the shareholders found out that the auditors were in bed with us or if the shareholders found out that our attorney was paid $30 million a year for bonuses, they might get upset about it. So how do we conceal it from them? And that is exactly what they did in TYCO.

Let me give you a few examples of where this structure has failed, and almost without exception, in fact, I do not think we can find exception on the examples I will give you, you will find a breakdown either with the legal counsel, the attorneys, a breakdown with the auditors that started getting too cozy. They started getting contracts with the president. They started getting opportunities to put other companies together where they could self-enrich themselves. Enron is the perfect example of that. Andrew Fastow, who was the chief financial officer on the management team, goes out and makes separate companies, makes a sweetheart deal with the auditors, makes sweetheart deals with the attorneys, and pays himself $30 million to run these partnerships.

By the way, where is Andrew Fastow this evening? He is in his multi-million dollar home in Texas. In Enron's bankruptcy, does he have to give that up? No, in Texas and Florida you get to keep your home from bankruptcy, so Scott Sullivan gets to stay in his $20 million home and Andrew Fastow gets to stay in his.

I can tell you if you went in and stole one hour of electricity from Enron, you would suffer more of a penalty than any of those people have suffered so far as far as criminal behavior is concerned. But let me go back here. I will point out to you where this breakdown occurred, where it has either been the board has not exercised proper oversight over the management or the management has gotten too cozy with the board and got the board intimidated to ask the management, where the management has concealed numbers with the auditors or concealed it from the auditors, or they got the legal counsel to buy into some of these deals.

Guess who the losers are? The losers in this case are at the bottom and top of this chart. The bottom, most important, the employees. They lose. They lose everything. Next, the shareholders. They lose. They lose everything. Now the shareholders knew there was some risk when they bought the stock, but they did not expect risk of fraud, but they knew there was a risk when they bought it. But the employees, they did not know there was a risk that the management would defraud the corporation, that management would walk away with multi-million dollar homes and money in accounts probably hidden all over the world. They did not know that.

Let us take a look at some of these examples. Well, let us take a look at a few examples here of where the corporate structure went wrong because some of the individuals contained within that corporate structure were focused on self-enrichment, broke or breached their fiduciary duties to their employees, to their customers, to their shareholders, to their profession, the accounting profession, which is an honorable profession. They breached their duties to the legal profession, which is an honorable profession. In any one of these cases you will see individuals who breached. They are thieves. They lied. They stole. These are two-bit crooks. That is exactly what they are, two-bit crooks. Remember my comparison at the beginning of the speech about you steal a car and the police surround you with their guns drawn. That is exactly what should have happened to the executives of these companies once they determine that they have stolen, these two-bit crooks.

Take a look at Kmart Corporation. How many employees lost their jobs because of the Kmart Corporation? What happened with the chief executives at Kmart? They went and got the money. The president of the corporation, I think the vice president of Kmart got the corporation to loan them millions of dollars; millions. Remember, the numbers we talked about tonight are not thousands of dollars, hundreds of dollars. They did not loan you a candy bar, a pen or a pencil. These are millions. We talk about numbers in the millions.

So Kmart Corporation executives loaned themselves millions of dollars, and then what did they do? They go back to the corporation and say we know it is a loan. Let us make it a grant. What does a grant mean? It means you do not have to pay back the loan. So at the expense of the employees of the Kmart Corporation, at the expense of the customers of the Kmart Corporation, at the expense of the shareholders of Kmart Corporation, the executives of Kmart Corporation go get this money. And what do they do a week after they get the loans? Forgiven. In other words, you do not have to pay me back.

They sign their own papers saying the corporation does not have to be paid back. They take it into bankruptcy. Where are those executives with Kmart Corporation this evening? They are probably filling their bellies at a local steakhouse.

Let us look at WorldCom. I have talked about WorldCom a little, but let us talk about the loans again. How can you have a board of directors, for example, where the chief executive officer, Bernie Ebbers, allows one of the board members to have one of the corporation's private jets for $1 a year, $1 a year? Do my colleagues think that board member's going to stand up to Bernie Ebbers when Bernie Ebbers said, look, I need $400 million.

Why did that board director not say we are not bank, we represent the shareholders, we represent the employees? We are not going to loan you $400 million. What do you mean you want it forgiven, $400 million. But that is not what happened. In WorldCom, they gave Bernie Ebbers $400 on a so-called loan.

Then Scott Sullivan dances in. Scott Sullivan's a little numbers guy, the guy who wears the green shades. He is the one that moves numbers, moves expenses into capital expenditures so that he can show higher income so his bonus is higher. Scott Sullivan takes out millions and million of dollars. What is Scott Sullivan doing tonight? Right here. Here is what Scott Sullivan, and Gary Winnick of Global Crossing. Global Crossing, Gary Winnick's been here before. He walked out with 900-and-some million dollars. I want you to see what they are doing tonight. You see that headline in USA Today, "Homes of the Rich and the Infamous." There is Gary Winnick's home in Bel Air, California, $90 million. Here is Scott Sullivan's home and I have got a poster.

Let me show you Scott Sullivan's home. That is where Scott Sullivan is this evening. While I am giving this speech, he is sitting somewhere in that mansion. That is a $20 million mansion. He is the guy. He is the accountant. He is the one that broke his fiduciary duties to WorldCom. And where are most of the employees of WorldCom this evening, the ones that do not have jobs? Probably sitting there in a family room with their family in tears, trying to figure out what they are going to do, all because of the corruption of these individuals.

We have got to nail these people. The Bush administration, I think, has made a solid commitment to do that. They ought to have the IRS at these people's doors. They ought to have the Securities and Exchange Commission at these people's doors; and by the way, kudos to the Securities and Exchange Commission and kudos to the Justice Department.

The Justice Department today under the President's direction came out with indictments against Adelphia, that is the cable company where the family took $3.5 billion out of the corporation, not million, $3.5 billion out of that corporation, self-enrichment, but they got indicted today. Good, good, good.

Every one of these people I speak about ought to be indicted. Andersen corporation, they are the auditors. Where are their fiduciary duties? Unfortunately, because we have got a few crooked two-bit crooks, two-bit accountants in Andersen, they brought the whole corporation down.

I hope that the Justice Department or the Attorneys General of these various States or whatever local enforcement agency can do it brings charges against the individuals. There are a lot of good hardworking people for Andersen corporation, and a few of these auditors who got money in their pockets, who became the two-bit crooks, brought down the entire corporation.

How many jobs were lost with Andersen, 20, 30,000? How many of them were crooked, couple hundred? The rest of the people were hardworking people, but they have lost their careers thanks to the people at the very top of Andersen who did not maintain their fiduciary duties to the people of that corporation.

ImClone Systems Incorporated, oh, what an ironic situation there. That is the Martha Stewart case. How ironic that Martha Stewart sells her stock the day before the announcement is made, which everybody knows will result in the stock collapsing, and the president of the corporation, close friend of hers and close friend of her daughter. Start taking a look at the interrelationships that exist. I am not talking about sexual relationships. I am talking about looking at the inter-related business transactions they have with the auditors, with the lawyers, with their buddies at these parties. Take a look at how many fiduciary duties were breached as a result of that.

Who suffered there? Every investor that did not know to sell their stock. Ironically, Martha Stewart had some kind of divine message to sell her stock right before the thing collapsed, the day before, hours before it collapsed. What about the poor suckers that bought that? What about the employees of that corporation? Does the president of that corporation and the chairman of the board of that corporation feel good tonight about what he has put those employees through?

We talked about Enron, Tyco. What a ripoff Tyco was. Take a look at the attorney for Tyco. The legal profession, why does the local bar in that State, the legal profession not have this guy up for disbarment? That attorney of Tyco ought to be in front of the State bar of New York trying to fight for his license to practice law, but he is not. I hope somebody from New York asks their State bar association why the attorney for Tyco is not in front of their bar fighting for his legal license. He ought to go to jail; and of course, I am addressing the Members on the floor, but I would hope that he might hear my comments here.

Here is what ought to happen to him: Go to jail, just like that monopoly card. Now, some people say you are giving a charged speech tonight, you are speaking with a lot of emotion tonight, you are making a lot of charges.

I am not just making them on this. I can pull up another chart. Sunbeam Corporation, Global Crossing and I could talk for quite a bit of time on that, Conesco, Waste Management. The reason I feel so deeply committed to this issue, the reason I feel so strongly about this is our system has to work based on consumer confidence, based on credibility.

The system has to have self-correction in it. If one side gets out of kilter, the other side kicks in so you keep it generally in balance. We have got to make sure that the prudent standards are upheld.

What is happening is I am not so concerned about Scott Sullivan's $20 million home in Florida or Gary Winnick's home out there in California, $90 million. I am concerned about why the system did not catch them earlier, why is the system not in balance.

What about the employees of these corporations? What about all those people for Global Crossing or Enron or WorldCom, just about to lose it, why did not all those people, they are wiped out. That is why I am emotional this evening.

It was not the Democrats, although Sunbeam and Conesco and several of those occurred under the Clinton administration. It was not the Republican administration, although we have had this last couple of weeks. This is not a partisan issue. This is not politicians who have gone astray, who are corrupt or a massive bribery scandal. That is not what we are talking about here. This is a breakdown that must be addressed immediately by very aggressive and active and unforgiving prosecution of the people who have violated the trust of the employees and who have violated the trust of the shareholders and who have violated their fiduciary responsibilities to their professions and to the corporations and the people for whom they work.

That is not asking too much. I hope in the next few weeks we see action like we have seen from the Bush administration in the last 24 hours, and that is criminal indictment against those families with the Adelphia Cable Corporation that stole 2.3 or 3.3, I cannot remember, but I can tell you it was in the billions. We need indictments. We ought to have indictments every day.

We ought to have the IRS. About 6 weeks ago, the IRS announced they are going to start doing random audits. They will come down here and just randomly pick somebody seated behind me and say hey, they may make $40,000 a year, we are going to audit them. IRS ought to give up their random audits and focus audits strictly on these people, like that lawyer with Tyco, like WorldCom, like the Kmart people.

We need to come together on this, Republicans and Democrats. Again, it is not a Republican issue; it is not a Democrat issue. It is an issue that challenges the very business community, which we need in this country. This is a cleansing process. We have got to make sure that we cleanse correctly. We have got to make sure we get the cancer out, and it does require active prosecution and active pursuit of these two-bit crooks. They should not be treated any better than the way we treat somebody that steals a car. They ought to be treated exactly like that and that is go directly to jail and do not collect your $200 as you pass go.

Enough of that subject, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, we have a fascinating half an hour. I would like to have my colleague, we have chatted about it, on agriculture, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE). All my colleagues know of his reputation. Obviously, he is one of the most reputable people here. His integrity is impeccable, and his knowledge on agriculture is second to none. I would like to at this point in time yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) so we can have some discussions on the issue of agriculture and farming.

GENERAL PERCEPTION OF THE FARM BILL

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from Colorado for yielding this time, appreciate his insights on the business community and some of the difficulties we have been having; and Mr. Speaker, tonight I would like to discuss the general perception of the farm bill that was passed in May, the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act.

It has been very interesting as we have watched what has gone on around the country, particularly in the urban areas, particularly areas of both coasts here in Washington.

The farm bill has been labeled as obscene. It has been labeled as fat. It has been labeled as pork, et cetera. I would like to read just three quotes from leading newspapers that pretty much express the general sentiments that we have been hearing.

This was from the Las Vegas Review Journal. The headline was "Farm Welfare," and the body of the article said this: "The House voted to slide backwards some 70 years, choosing socialism and abandoning market-based reforms in the Nation's Stalinesque farm policy in voting for the new farm bill." Those are very strong words, that we decided to slide back 70 years, chose socialism and Stalinesque policy.

The Washington Post, under the headline: "Grins for Mr. Bush," editorialized, "Mr. Bush signed a farm bill that represents a low point in his presidency, a wasteful corporate welfare measure that penalizes taxpayers and the world's poorest people in order to bribe a few voters." So the farm bill was labeled as a bribe and was a low point of the Bush presidency.

The Wall Street Journal, under the headline, "The Farm State Pigout," says this: "That great rooting snorting noise you hear in the distance, dear taxpayer, is the sound of election year farm State politics rolling out of the U.S. Congress. This alone amounts to one of the greatest urban to rural wealth transfers to wealth in history. A sort of farm bill great society."

The question is are these perceptions, are these quotes truly representative of the farm bill? Is this what we are all about? I would like to take a look at some of the actual data concerning this farm bill that was passed in May.

We will see that the spending on agriculture in 1999 was about $19 billion. In 2000, under Freedom to Farm, spending was roughly $33 billion; and in 2001, a year ago, it was roughly $23 billion. So those were the last 3 years of Freedom to Farm, and the amounts above these marks here were emergency payments. In other words, farmers were losing their livelihood so Congress passed emergency payments.

Here we see a substantial increase of about $12 billion emergency here, an increase of 6 or $7 billion for emergency payments. The interesting thing is that if we look at this very carefully, we will find that the average here of these last 3 years of Freedom to Farm were $24.5 billion per year.

We look at the new farm bill, 2002. We are projecting roughly $19 billion. Then it goes up to 22. Then it starts to level off, and from that point on it is projected to go down. So what we are talking about in the first 4 years of the new farm bill, the projection, a little less than $21 billion a year, which means that is $3.5 billion less than what we averaged in the previous 3 years under the old farm bill.

Now, as far as I can tell, this does not represent a huge increase. Actually, it is a decrease. I do not believe that this is irresponsible policy.

And so the thing that people need to remember is that the reason that the new farm bill was passed was people decided that we could not continue to rely on emergency payments. These emergency payments were not made until October–November, so the banker did not know at the planting time what the farmer was going to receive and the farmer did not know what he was going to receive until well after harvest. So in this policy we have folded in what is emergency payments, and we believe this is a more reasonable approach and, actually, probably, will save money at this point.

Is this farm bill 15 percent of the Federal budget? We have heard of all the anguish, the weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth about how expensive it is. Is it 20 percent of the total tax bill? Is it 25 percent of the Federal budget? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that this farm bill costs roughly one-half of 1 percent of the total Federal budget. Roughly one-half of 1 percent. And, actually, less than one-half of 1 percent goes to farmers, because 30 percent of the farm bill goes to school lunch programs through nutrition programs.

So we feel the question probably should be asked then at this point, is that one-half of 1 percent being well spent? Certainly, even though it is not a huge amount of the Federal budget, do we want to waste that money? I guess if people think about it, they will realize that in that one-half of 1 percent, the United States has the safest food supply in the world. We have no foot-and-mouth disease in this country. We have no mad cow disease in this country. When we buy a piece of fruit at the grocery store, we know it has not been sprayed by DDT. So we have the safest food supply, we have the most diverse food supply, and we also have the cheapest food supply in the world.

We spend roughly 9 percent of our total income on food in this country, whereas most countries are spending 20, 25, 30, sometimes as much as 50 percent for food. So I think that this one-half of 1 percent is certainly well spent.

Another question that might arise is, are farmers getting rich? That is the perception, that this farm bill makes farmers wealthy and it is sort of a welfare system, as one of the newspaper articles said, for agriculture. Actually, I guess I can speak in terms of what my own home State has experienced. Last year, we lost 1,000 farmers in the State of Nebraska. These were farmers who no longer could keep going. Most of them left because of financial reasons.

The census figures in 1997 indicated that there were 5,500 farmers in the State of Nebraska that were under the age of 35 years of age. Ten years before that, in 1987, there were 12,600 farmers under 35 years of age. So we lost 60 percent of our farmers 35 years of age and younger. There simply are not young farmers in the business any more because it is not profitable.

So you may say, well, certainly the older farmers increased. And actually, again in Nebraska, the ages between 60 and 64 declined. Two thousand farmers left the profession at that point. So we have been losing all age brackets in the farm community.

In addition, I might mention, Mr. Speaker, that at the present time Nebraska has the three poorest counties in the country in terms of average per capita income. Now, that does not mean just three of the poorer. It is the three poorest, one, two and three. In one of these counties, the average per capita income is a little over $4,000 a year per person. The other two counties are in the $5,000 range. All of these counties do not have any urban area. They are totally rural. They are totally dependent upon agriculture. So I can assure my colleagues that we do not find that agriculture is something where people are getting rich.

The environmental working group has published a Web site in which all of the farm payments over the preceding 4 years have been published and anyone can access that site and see the horror stories that Scotty Pippin, the NBA player, got some farm payments; and we see cases where multiple entities of 10 or 15 or 20 or 30 people have gone together and maybe they have received payments of $1 million. So the assumption is that those payments represent net profit. And yet I guess anybody in agriculture understands that that is not the case.

Now, let me give an example. Over the past 3 or 4 years, the pricing of a bushel of corn, what it will bring at the elevator, has probably averaged about $1.70 per bushel. The cost of production for a bushel of corn is roughly $2.20 per bushel. So after paying for fertilizer, seed, equipment, the combine, the tractor, the pesticides, it costs about $2.20 a bushel, on the average, to produce a bushel of corn, which means, obviously, that the farmer is losing 50 cents a bushel.

So if that farmer has a couple thousand acres of corn and they are losing 50 cents a bushel and their yield is roughly 200 bushels per acre, that means, essentially, that the farmer would need a $200,000 payment just to break even. Now, that does not allow the farmer any profit. It does not allow for any surplus of any type and obviously, he goes out of business if all he does is break even. So most of these farm payments have been to cover rather severe deficits in the farm economy.

The question we might ask ourselves is, well, why do we need a farm bill? People often wonder, well, the person who runs the drugstore on Main Street, the person who has an implement dealership or a clothing store has no guarantees. If Wal-Mart moves in, they have trouble. Why in the world should we help farmers? Let me talk a little about that tonight, Mr. Speaker.

I believe there is some reasons why we want to think about the importance of agriculture and why agriculture deserves some special attention.

First of all, farming is a unique industry in this sense. Farming is almost totally weather-dependent. I cannot think of any other industry where you can work a whole year and do things right, and in 10 minutes of hailstorm lose your whole crop. You cannot make it rain nor can you have it rain too much. You cannot prevent a 60 or 70-mile-an-hour windstorm that knocks down all your corn or your wheat. So because of the fact that agriculture is totally weather-dependent, it is somewhat unique.

Second, in regard to agriculture, it is impossible to control inventory. When you start to plant your crop in the spring, you have no idea what your yield is going to be, you have no idea what the yield around the United States is going to be, you have no idea what the yield in Australia or China or the European Union is going to be. And so there is no way, if there is too much of a crop, to cut back at that point.

Now, if you work for Ford, and there are too many SUVs on the road, you close down a production line or you begin to cut back on a whole plant. If there are too many suits of clothes on the market, then you begin to produce fewer suits of clothes. It is impossible for the agriculture industry to do this in adjusting their inventory.

Third, producers do not set the price. Now, I cannot think of any other industry where the person producing does not decide what it is going to cost, what the price is going to be. If you produce an automobile, you put a sticker on there that says $20,000, $25,000, $30,000. A suit of clothes is $300, $400, or whatever. Yet the farmer, when he has harvested his crop, goes down to the elevator and finds out what the elevator operator will pay him for his crop. It may be $2.50 for a bushel of corn, it may be $1.50 for a bushel of corn. The same is true of the livestock producer. The cattleman has to go to the packer, the pork producers go to the packer to find out what he can receive. So in agriculture, the producer does not set the price.

Fourth, and this is a very important point, farming is critical to national security. And the reason I say this is if we think about our oil industry, our petroleum industry, about 15, 20 years ago we realized that we could buy petroleum from OPEC for roughly $12 a barrel, $10 a barrel. In this country, it was costing $18, $22 a barrel to produce. So what we did is we quit exploring, we shut down our wells, and we began to decrease the number of refineries and began to shift our petroleum industry overseas. We decided if we could get it for $12 a barrel from OPEC, that was a good deal. So now, all of a sudden, we wake up and one day we find that we are roughly 60 percent dependent on OPEC for our oil.

As we begin to add up the price of the Gulf War, as we begin to consider what it cost to keep the fleet in the Gulf and all of the military maneuvers that we have had to protect our oil supply, we would probably have to admit that we are now paying $60, $70, $80, maybe even $100 a barrel for that oil. So we have let our petroleum industry slip overseas.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that this can easily happen to our agriculture. If we begin to ignore agriculture, it can easily go to other countries and then, all of a sudden, we are dependent upon our food supply, which is even more critical than being dependent upon the petroleum industry from OPEC.

Fifth, there is no level playing field worldwide. So it is assumed right now by many who have criticized the farm bill that the United States is the only country in the world that is helping our farmers, or farmers in general. And, actually, Mr. Speaker, the European Union subsidizes their farmers more than $300 per acre, Japan subsidizes their farmers more than $1,000 per acre, and in the United States our average subsidy is $45 per acre. So it is a tremendous disparity here. It is much less than these other nations are subsidizing their agriculture.

So when we throw in the fact that our agricultural exports are being taxed or have tariffs of roughly 60 percent as they are sent overseas to other countries, and as goods come in from other countries to our Nation the tariff is roughly an average of 12 percent, and we look at that great disparity and then look at the difference in subsidization, we realize our agriculture producers right now are at somewhat of a disadvantage.

Sixth, I might mention this, that land, labor, and production costs vary widely worldwide. In Brazil, for instance, you can buy top quality land for $100 to $500 an acre. About an average of $250 an acre. And that is top grade land. The topsoil is 50 feet deep, enough rainfall to sometimes produce two crops in one year on that cropland. And cropland like that in the United States would cost at least $2,500 to $3,000 an acre. So you can buy it in Brazil for one-tenth what you would spend here in the United States.

The labor cost in Brazil is 50 cents an hour. Here in the United States it would be at least 20 times that amount. And, of course, in Brazil and many South American, many Third World countries, there are absolutely no environmental regulations. Of course, here in the United States, we have those regulations.

So the point of all this argument is that if we do not do something to protect our farmers, if we do not have a farm bill of some kind, we will simply be run over by what is going on around the rest of the world, and we need to be competitive because we do not want to rely on someplace else and the rest of the world for our food supply.

Let me also mention another item here, Mr. Speaker, that I think is very important. It may have some relationship to our previous speaker, the gentleman from Colorado. And the reason I am going through all of this background work is that at the present time we are experiencing a tremendous drought throughout much of this country, particularly in the Western States.

At the present time, roughly 40 percent of the United States is in a severe drought situation. In an average year, we have 15 percent of the country in a drought. So we have reached a crisis situation. Looking at this chart, we can see the areas that are heavily affected. Most of the western States are in severe drought. For instance, the home State of the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS) had the driest spring ever in recorded history, the last 97 years. They are in this black area. Arizona is in a huge drought. Southern California is in the same situation. We see the same thing in North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska and so on.

Our livestock producers, particularly our cattlemen, have no pasture. The roots are dead in the pasture. There is no moisture. Cattlemen are very independent people. These people have no safety net. They do not participate in hardly any of the farm bill. Right now we are concerned because these folks need some type of disaster assistance. Yet because of the perception of the farm bill, that it is so fat, there is so much money for agriculture, it is going to be very, very difficult to get any help for these people who are going to have to sell their herds because there is no pasture.

When everybody sells their herds at the same time, there is a huge glut and the price goes way down. We have been told that we have to have an offset from the present farm bill. In other words, we have to get some money from the farm bill that is already in the bill from somewhere else, and that is going to be very, very difficult to do. So the perception makes it difficult for agriculture at the present time.

If we think about New York State, if they had a huge flood, we would expect that they would get some disaster assistance, and we would hope that somebody would not say New York State has already received a great deal of disaster help for other causes and, therefore, they really should not get any more. This is the mentality that we are concerned about with regard to this drought and particularly with regard to our livestock producers at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, this really is pretty much the summary of what I wanted to say tonight. I appreciate the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS) yielding me this time. I would imagine that the gentleman has a comment or two regarding the drought situation that he has endured in his State.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I think the comments by the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) are particularly appropriate at this point.

Out in Colorado, we are suffering the most significant drought that we have seen in the last 97 years that the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) mentioned. The only reason I say that, that is as far back as the records are kept. It is impacting our cattle people significantly. We are looking for a pretty tough year out there. I appreciate the gentleman's comments, and I thank the gentleman for working with me this evening.

AMENDMENT NO. 3: At the end of title I of the bill, insert after the last section (preceding the short title) the following:

ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS—
DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

SEC. 151. Section 620(a)(1) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2370(a)(1)) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence, by striking the period at the end and inserting the following: "; except as needed to promote and facilitate commercial exports of agricultural commodities from the United States to Cuba."; and

(2) in the second sentence, by striking the period at the end and inserting the following: "; except that any such embargo shall not apply with respect to the commercial export of any agricultural commodity or with respect to travel or financing (or other transactions) incident to the commercial marketing, sale, or delivery of agricultural commodities. As used in this paragraph, the term 'agricultural commodity' has the meaning given the term in section 102 of the Agricultural Trade Act of 1978.".

SEC. 152. Upon the enactment of this Act, any regulation, proclamation, or provision of law, including Presidential Proclamation 3447 of February 3, 1962, the Export Administration Regulations (15 CFR 730 and following), the Cuban Assets Control Regulations (31 CFR 515), and section 102(h) of the Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity (LIBERTAD) Act of 1996 (22 U.S.C. 6032(h)), that authorizes sanctions with respect to, prohibits, or otherwise restricts exports to Cuba or transactions involving exports to Cuba and that is in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, shall not apply with respect to the commercial export to Cuba of agricultural commodities, with respect to travel or financing (or other transactions) incident to the commercial marketing, sale, or delivery of agricultural commodities, or with respect to the receipt of payment for agricultural exports.

SEC. 153. After the enactment of this Act, the President may not restrict the commercial exportation to Cuba of agricultural commodities—

(1) under the Export Administration Act of 1979; or

(2) under section 203 of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act.

SEC. 154. (a) TRADE SANCTIONS REFORM AND EXPORT ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2000.—

(1) INAPPLICABILITY.—The Trade Sanctions Reform and Export Enhancement Act of 2000 (title IX of H.R. 5426, as enacted into law by section 1(a) of Public Law 106-387, and as contained in the appendix of such Public Law) shall not apply with respect to commercial exports to Cuba of agricultural commodities.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The Trade Sanctions Reform and Export Enhancement Act of 2000 is amended—

(i) by striking "export of agricultural commodities" and inserting "commercial export of agricultural commodities to Cuba, or with respect to the export of agricultural commodities"; and

(ii) by adding at the end the following: "The commercial export of agricultural commodities to Cuba shall be allowed without the issuance of a specific license therefor.";

(B) in section 908—

(i) by striking subsection (b);

(ii) in subsection (a)—

(I) by striking "PROHIBITION" and all that follows through "(1) IN GENERAL.—" and inserting "IN GENERAL.—";

(II) by redesignating paragraph (2) as subsection (b) and conforming the margin accordingly; and

(IV) by redesignating paragraph (3) as subsection (c) and conforming the margin accordingly; and

(iii) in subsections (b) and (c) (as redesignated), by striking "paragraph (1)" each place it appears and inserting "subsection (a)"; and

(C) in section 910—

(i) in subsection (a), by striking "The Secretary of the Treasury" and all that follows and inserting "The Secretary of the Treasury shall authorize travel to, from, or within Cuba for purposes of the marketing, sale, delivery, or financing of a sale of agricultural commodities to Cuba, and any related transactions thereto, without the issuance of a specific license therefor."; and

(ii) in subsection (b)(2), by adding at the end before the period the following: "or that does not relate to travel to, from, or within Cuba incident to the marketing, sale, delivery, or financing of a sale of agricultural commodities to Cuba, or any related transactions thereto"

(b) SANCTIONS UNDER CUBAN DEMOCRACY ACT OF 1992.—

(1) INAPPLICABILITY.—Section 1706(b) of the Cuban Democracy Act of 1992 (22 U.S.C. 6005(b)); prohibiting certain vessels from entering United States ports) shall not apply with respect to vessels that transport agricultural commodities to Cuba on a commercial basis or that transport persons whose travel is incident to the delivery of agricultural commodities to Cuba on a commercial basis.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1705(b) of the Cuban Democracy Act of 1992 (22 U.S.C. 6004(b)) is amended—

(A) in the subsection caption by striking "DONATIONS" and inserting "EXPORTS"; and

(B) by striking "donations of food to non-governmental organizations or individuals in Cuba" and inserting "commercial exports of agricultural commodities to Cuba".

SEC. 155. Subparagraph (A) of section 901(j)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to denial of foreign tax credit, etc., with respect to certain foreign countries) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new flush sentence:

“Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, this subsection shall not apply to Cuba with respect to income or excess profits taxes paid to Cuba that are attributable to activities with respect to articles permitted to be exported to Cuba, or travel or financing (or other transactions) incident thereto that is permitted, by virtue of the enactment of the Treasury Department Appropriations Act, 2003. The preceding sentence shall apply after the date which is 60 days after the date of the enactment of this sentence.”

SEC. 156. (a) STUDY.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct a study of United States agricultural export promotion and credit programs in effect as of the date of enactment of this Act to determine if changes to current law are needed to improve the ability of the Secretary of Agriculture to utilize United States agricultural export promotion and credit programs with respect to the consumption of United States agricultural commodities in Cuba, and to otherwise enhance, assist, and remove any limitations on, commercial sales and other agricultural exports to Cuba.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

SEC. 157. In this title, the term “agricultural commodity” has the meaning given the term in section 102 of the Agricultural Trade Act of 1978 (7 U.S.C. 5602).

OFFERED BY MR. WYNN

AMENDMENT NO. 8: At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following new section:

SEC. _____. (a) CENTRALIZED REPORTING SYSTEM.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, each agency shall establish a centralized reporting system in accordance with guidance promulgated by the Office of Management and Budget that allows the agency to generate periodic reports on the contracting efforts of the agency. Such centralized reporting system shall be designed to enable the agency to generate reports on efforts regarding both contracting out and contracting in.

(b) REPORTS ON CONTRACTING EFFORTS.—(1) Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, every agency shall generate and submit to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget a report on the contracting efforts of the agency undertaken during the 2 fiscal years immediately preceding the fiscal year during which this Act is enacted. Such report shall comply with the requirements in paragraph (3).

(2) For the current fiscal year and every fiscal year thereafter, every agency shall complete and submit to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget a report on the contracting efforts undertaken by the agency during the current fiscal year. Such reports shall comply with the requirements in paragraph (3), and shall be completed and submitted not later than the end of the first fiscal quarter of the subsequent fiscal year.

(3) The reports referred to in this subsection shall include the following information with regard to each contracting effort undertaken by the agency:

(A) The contract number and the Federal supply class or service code.

(B) A statement of why the contracting effort was undertaken and an explanation of what alternatives to the contracting effort were considered and why such alternatives were ultimately rejected.

(C) The names, addresses, and telephone numbers of the officials who supervised the contracting effort.

(D) The competitive process used or the statutory or regulatory authority relied on to enter into the contract without public-private competition.

(E) The cost of Federal employee performance at the time the work was contracted out (if the work had previously been performed by Federal employees).

(F) The cost of Federal employee performance under a Most Efficient Organization plan (if the work was contracted out through OMB Circular A-76).

(G) The anticipated cost of contractor performance, based on the award.

(H) The current cost of contractor performance.

(I) The actual savings, expressed both as a dollar amount and as a percentage of the cost of performance by Federal employees, based on the current cost, and an explanation of the difference, if any.

(J) A description of the quality control process used by the agency in connection with monitoring the contracting effort, identification of the applicable quality control standards, the frequency of the preparation of quality control reports, and an assessment of whether the contractor met, exceeded, or failed to achieve the quality control standards.

(K) The number of employees performing the contracting effort under the contract and any related subcontracts.

(c) REPORT ON CONTRACTING EFFORTS.—(1) For the current fiscal year and every fiscal year thereafter, every agency shall complete and submit to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget a report on the contracting efforts undertaken by the agency during the current fiscal year. Such reports shall comply with the requirements in paragraph (2), and shall be completed and submitted not later than the end of the first fiscal quarter of the subsequent fiscal year.

(2) The reports referred to in paragraph (1) shall include the following information for each contracting in effort undertaken by the agency:

(A) A description of the type of work involved.

(B) A statement of why the contracting in effort was undertaken.

(C) The names, addresses, and telephone numbers of the officials who supervised the contracting in effort.

(D) The cost of performance at the time the work was contracted in.

(E) The current cost of performance by Federal employees or military personnel.

(d) REPORT ON EMPLOYEE POSITIONS.—Not later than 30 days after the end of the current fiscal year and every fiscal year thereafter, every agency shall report on the number of Federal employee positions and positions held by non-Federal employees under a contract between the agency and an individual or entity that has been subject to public-private competition.

(e) COMMITTEES TO WHICH REPORTS MUST BE SUBMITTED.—The reports referred to in this section shall be submitted to the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate.

(f) PUBLICATION.—The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall promptly publish in the Federal Register notices including a description of when the reports referred to in this section are available to the public and the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of the officials from whom the reports may be obtained.

(g) AVAILABILITY ON INTERNET.—After the excision of proprietary information, the reports referred to in this section shall be made available through the Internet.

(h) REVIEW.—The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall review the reports referred to in this section and consult with the head of the agency regarding the content of such reports.

(i) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

(1) The term “employee” means any individual employed—

(A) as a civilian in a military department (as defined in section 102 of title 5, United States Code);

(B) in an executive agency (as defined in section 105 of title 5, United States Code), including an employee who is paid from non-appropriated funds;

(C) in those units of the legislative and judicial branches of the Federal Government having positions in the competitive service;

(D) in the Library of Congress;

(E) in the Government Printing Office; or
(F) by the Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

(2) The term “agency” means any department, agency, bureau, commission, activity, or organization of the United States, that employs an employee (as defined in paragraph (1)).

(3) The term “non-Federal personnel” means employed individuals who are not employees, as defined in paragraph (1).

(4) The term “contractor” means an individual or entity that performs a function for an agency under a contract with non-Federal personnel.

(5) The term “privatization” means the end result of the decision of an agency to exit a business line, terminate an activity, or sell Government owned assets or operational capabilities to the non-Federal sector.

(6) The term “outsourcing” means the end result of the decision of an agency to acquire services from external sources, either from a non-Federal source or through interservice support agreements, through a contract.

(7) The term “contracting out” means the conversion by an agency of the performance of a function to the performance by a non-

Federal employee under a contract between an agency and an individual or other entity.

(8) The term “contracting in” is the conversion of the performance of a function by non-Federal employees under a contract between an agency and an individual or other entity to the performance by employees.

(9) The term “contracting” means the performance of a function by non-Federal employees under a contract between an agency and an individual or other entity. The term “contracting”, as used throughout this Act, includes privatization, outsourcing, contracting out, and contracting, unless otherwise specifically provided.

(10)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), the term “critical for the provision of patient care” means direct patient medical and hospital care that the Department of Veterans Affairs or other Federal hospitals or clinics are not capable of furnishing because of geographical inaccessibility, medical emergency, or the particularly unique type of care or service required.

(B) The term does not include support and administrative services for hospital and clinic operations, including food service, laundry services, grounds maintenance, transportation services, office operations, and supply processing and distribution services.

(j) APPROPRIATION.—There is appropriated $2,000,000 for fiscal year 2003 to carry out this section, to be derived by transfer from the amount appropriated in title I of this Act for “Internal Revenue Service—Tax Law Enforcement”. The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall allocate such amount among the appropriate accounts, and shall submit to the Congress a report setting forth such allocation.

(k) APPLICABILITY.—(1) The provisions of this section shall apply to fiscal year 2003 and each fiscal year thereafter.

(2) This section—

(A) does not apply with respect to the General Accounting Office;

(B) does not apply with respect to depot-level maintenance and repair of the Department of Defense (as defined in section 2460 of title 10, United States Code); and

(C) does not apply with respect to contracts for the construction of new structures or the remodeling of or additions to existing structures, but shall apply to all contracts for the repair and maintenance of any structures.

SENATE—Monday, July 15, 2002

The Senate met at 12 noon and was called to order by the Honorable JON S. CORZINE, a Senator from the State of New Jersey.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, strong source of strength for those who stretch the human limits and go beyond, we praise You for courage to stand firm for truth as You have revealed it to us. Give us convictions that require Your courage. We know that courage is fear that has said its prayers. Here we are, Lord, relinquishing any fears that may cripple us in being bold leaders. We can take hold of courage because You have taken hold of us. You give us power to overcome rather than overreact. We accept the admonition of the psalmist: Wait on the Lord, be of good courage, and He shall strengthen your heart. Wait, I say, on the Lord— (Psalm 27:14).

Bless the women and men of this Senate as You solidify their convictions and then give them the gift of courage. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JON S. CORZINE led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, July 15, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JON S. CORZINE, a Senator from the State of New Jersey, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. CORZINE thereupon assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Chair will announce that the time until 1 o'clock will be evenly divided between Republicans and Democrats, with the Republicans having the first hour and Democrats having the second half hour.

At 1 o'clock, we will again go to the resumption of the accounting reform bill, with 5 hours remaining under postcloture proceedings.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it is my understanding there are three bills at the desk that have been read for the first time. They are H.R. 4954, H.R. 4635, and H.R. 5017.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that it be in order, en bloc, for these bills to receive a second reading, but I object to any further proceedings at this time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Without objection, the clerk will read the titles of the bills.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4954) to amend Title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for a voluntary program for prescription drug coverage under the Medicare Program, to modernize and reform payments and the regulatory structure of the Medicare Program, and for other purposes.

A bill (H.R. 4635) to amend title 49, United States Code, to establish a program for Federal flight deck officers, and for other purposes.

A bill (H.R. 5017) to amend the Temporary Emergency Wildlife Suppression Act to facilitate the ability of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into reciprocal agreements with foreign countries for the sharing of personnel to fight fires.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection to further proceedings having been heard, the bills will be placed on the calendar.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 1 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

Under the previous order, the first half of the time shall be under the control of the Republican leader or his designee.

The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

THE USE OF SNOW MACHINES IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I will take a few minutes to talk about an important issue specifically to Wyoming, the Yellowstone National Park. In a broader sense, it is an issue that affects all kinds of parks and Federal public lands. It has to do with the question of access to these lands. Particularly, I am very interested in national parks, having grown up just outside of Yellowstone. I served as chairman of the National Parks Subcommittee for a long time. So I am very interested in parks.

We are in the process of working on an issue that I think has broader implications. It is the ability to use snow machines to see Yellowstone National Park in the wintertime. It is something that has been done, of course, for a number of years, and certainly there have to be changes that take place with use, and, as people are involved, unfortunately, those changes have not taken place as much as they should. Now we find ourselves in a dilemma with efforts made to eliminate the opportunity for people to use these machines in the wintertime.

As I mentioned, I think the purpose of the park is to maintain the resource, and all of us would agree to that. It is one of the national treasures that we have. We spend a lot of time here on parks—to establish new parks, and so on.

The second purpose of having a park, of course, in addition to saving the resource, is to give the opportunity for the park's owners to enjoy it—the people of America. And of course it needs to be done in an orderly way so there is not a problem with destroying those resources.

As I mentioned, snow machines in Yellowstone Park have been used for a good number of years. They are limited to the roads that are prepared for snow machining. You cannot go off the road; you stay on those roads. That has been the rule through the years. They enter, basically, in three of the entryways that come into Yellowstone Park, which is fewer than there are in the summer.

Of course, the wildlife remains in the park in the winter, for a good part of the time at least, and so one of the problems or complaints has been that the idea of preparing the roads for the use by snow machines provides an exit for the buffalo, and they go into Montana. There are concerns about brucellosis, and so on, and they don't like to have that happen.

The fact is that the roads are going to be prepared for use, whether visitors can use them or others, because they have to be used by the rangers and the people who are in the park.

In any event, this issue kind of came to a head about 2, 3 years ago when the Clinton administration had prepared a regulation that there would be no more use of snow machines in the wintertime. Well, many of us do not agree with that. We think there can be ways in which snow machines can be managed so that they can be changed if they need to be, that would take away the problems of that exit, and rather than to eliminate them, we think there ought to be a way to change them.

Indeed, during the course of this time, there have been a number of changes being made, partly by the manufacturers. Of course, there can be a regulation and a standard as to how the machines would be allowed to reduce emissions they have had in the past. They would also reduce the noise, which has been something people have been concerned about.

So we are prepared—and the manufacturers are prepared—to go into the market with machines, probably four-cycle engines rather than two, that would change both the emissions and the noise.

As this went on, of course, as the Clinton administration pushed their regulation, there were lawsuits brought. Then there was a change in the administration. The original EIS that was done was extended, and we took action in the Congress to extend the use period for another couple of years, and another supplemental EIS was held so there could be some additional alternatives.

The alternatives, of course, could be: Continue as it is now; eliminate it entirely; allow for coaches rather than individual snow machines; or change the rule so there could be some combination of the two.

The time is down now pretty close to where there should be, in this month, as a matter of fact, a reestablishment of the options that would be available, any favored option by the administration.

I met recently with the superintendents of the two parks, both the Grand Teton and Yellowstone, and they are prepared to do that. I think they are prepared to favor the option that would allow for the changes to be made in the machines and also for additional noise, but they could potentially have limitations on the numbers that could travel.

It is kind of interesting because those who oppose it, of course, do not want to include any machines, regardless of the situation. There are now machines that have less emissions than an automobile. There are only about 600,000 of these machines and 1.6 million cars in the summer, so it is quite hard to figure out how they are going to do extensive damage.

As I mentioned, there was a lawsuit. The snowmobile manufacturers, the State of Wyoming, and others brought a suit over the ban last summer. The settlement was agreed to. It called for a supplemental EIS, which I mentioned, which now has been done, and it called for some reasonable and commonsense resolutions and changes to the debate.

The public process has been open. There have been lots of responses. Because the environmentalists organized it, they had more people against it send in a card than those who were for it, but those who really took time to examine the issue and come up with alternatives, that was pretty evenly divided between those who want to continue and those who do not.

We are down now to making some decisions, and I think that is what we ought to do, and we are in this process.

I am disappointed that since then, a bill has been introduced in the Senate to eliminate snow machines in the park. It seems to me that is entirely inappropriate when we go through this whole process that has been laid out where people can be involved in this decision, and then suddenly we decide we are going to make the decision here. I hope that is not the case. I think we have had, as I said, an opportunity, and we can continue to talk about it and we ought to certainly let that process work its way through, which I think it will.

Everyone is for the protection of our parks. We all want to do that, and we can do that. We have had this sort of a problem in public lands, where you have to get a balance between usefulness and protection, and we can do that.

We are into another thing now on limiting roads in the forests. Obviously, there ought to be some limitation, but there also has to be access. It is not only access to people who want to hunt or do those kinds of things. I have received lots of communications from veterans, for instance, who say: Gosh, I cannot hike 5 or 10 miles to get there.

So we have to find a balance, and this is one of the areas in which a balance is necessary—not the only one. But I am saying that our resources of public lands and public uses also have to have access for a number of reasons. It also is an economic issue for people who live around the parks, as we do in Wyoming. So we hope we can go ahead with this and that the administration will continue to pursue the idea of having a resolution that provides for management, provides for protection, but provides people an avenue to still continue to enjoy the park.

I thought it was kind of interesting that one of the complaints about the noise—and I understand that—is people who go there do not want to have noise in the wintertime. Well, there is nobody there unless they go on machines because there is no place they can go without them. It is too far away. I wanted to raise that point. I feel very strongly about it, of course, as do many of us.

We certainly hope we can go on through this process and end up with an alternative that allows for the use of visitors to Yellowstone Park in the winter. It is a beautiful place. When one goes up there by Old Faithful and goes up the river, talk about the wildlife. One of the things that is sort of interesting is you drive along and if you want to stop, there is a buffalo right alongside the road in about 2 or 3 feet of snow, and they move right along in this little place pushing the snow out of the way so they can eat what is left of the grass below. They are not concerned whether someone is there with a snow machine.

I see my friend from Alaska is present to speak, and I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alaska.

LEGAL SYSTEM REFORM

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I wish to indicate my concern about the recent ruling of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in regard to the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in school as unconstitutional, noting its reference to "one nation under God."

I think we were all a bit surprised at that particular ruling. Perhaps for more years than I care to acknowledge, I have witnessed one bizarre decision after another arising from what I consider a very troubled court. During that time, a number of us in the Senate have worked to bring about fundamental reform in our legal system, including a wholesale restructuring of the Ninth Circuit.

I quote from the court's decision on the pledge, and this was Judge Alfred T. Goodwin who wrote:

A profession that we are a nation "under God" is identical, for establishment clause purposes, to a profession that we are a nation under Jesus, a nation under Vishnu, a nation under Zeus, or a nation under no god, because none of these professions can be neutral without respect to religion.

I find that troubling because it is totally inconsistent. It tries to establish a parallel that there is virtually no difference whether we are under Zeus, under Vishnu, or under no god because, as is stated in the opinion, none of these professions can be neutral with respect to religion. This is a type of extremism carried out by individuals who want to eradicate any reference to religion in public life. It is clearly wrong. I am confident this ruling will be overturned. After all, it is quite common for a ruling from the Ninth Circuit to be overturned.

It is fair to take a few minutes and look at the record of the Ninth Circuit. Part of the problem is the Ninth Circuit is simply too large. It extends from the Arctic Circle to the Mexican border and spans the tropics from Hawaii, Guam, the Marianna Islands, the International Date Line, back to Montana and encompasses some 14 million square miles. It is the largest circuit by any measure. It is larger than the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Eleventh Circuits combined.

For these reasons and more, I am going to be introducing legislation in the balance of this Congress to split the Ninth Circuit. I will now be offering an amendment to all legislation for the remainder of this Congress to enact this commonsense legislation until such time as I can get a vote. I am joined by a number of our colleagues: Senators STEVENS, BURNS, CRAIG, GORDON SMITH, INHOFE, and CRAPO.

A little history will show this is not the first attempt to solve the crisis of the Ninth Circuit. I believe the need for change, however, has never been greater. The Ninth Circuit has grown so large and has drifted so far from prudent legal reasoning that sweeping changes are in order. Congress has already recognized that the change is needed. Back in 1997, we commissioned a report on structural alternatives for the Federal court of appeals. The commission was chaired by the former Supreme Court Justice, Byron R. White. They found numerous faults within the Ninth Circuit. In its conclusion, the commission recommended major reforms and a drastic reorganization of the court.

This legislation divides the Ninth Circuit into two independent circuits. The new Ninth would contain basically California. I understand there is an interest from Nevada to stay with California. Basically, we propose to leave the Ninth containing California and perhaps Nevada. A new Twelfth Circuit would be composed of the following: Arizona, Alaska, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Washington, Guam, and the Northern Marianna Islands. Immediately upon enactment, concerns of the White commission would be addressed. A more cohesive, efficient, and predictable judicial group would emerge.

The circuit serves a population of more than 54 million, almost 60 percent more than are served by the next largest circuit. By 2010, the Census Bureau estimates that the population of the Ninth Circuit will be more than 63 million people. How many people does this court have to serve before the Congress of the United States realizes the Ninth Circuit is overwhelmed by its population? Congressional Members are not alone in advocating a split.

In 1973, a congressional commission on the revision of Federal Court Appellate System Commission, commonly known as the Hruska Commission, recommended the Ninth Circuit be divided. Also that year, the American Bar Association adopted a resolution in support of the split. In 1990, the U.S. Department of Justice endorsed legislation to split the Ninth Circuit in a surprising reversal of the official "no position" approach it had previously assumed. That is significant in relationship to a fair evaluation based on facts in the White commission on the need for splitting the court.

In 1995, a bill was reported from the Senate Judiciary Committee to go ahead and split the Ninth Circuit. There were objections. Most of those objections came from California and were simply based on the theoretical concept that California has been the headquarters of the Ninth, and there is a certain amount of prestige associated with having the largest court, so it is quite natural that there should be such a response from California. But it was not necessarily based on what is good for justice.

Supreme Court Justice Kennedy, a former member of the Ninth Circuit for 12 years, testified before a Senate Appropriations Committee and stated he has increasing doubts about the wisdom of retaining the circuit's current size.

Arguments in support of a divided Ninth Circuit are both qualitative and quantitative. The magnitude of cases filing in the Ninth Circuit creates a slow and cumbersome docket. In 2001, the caseload of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals was 10,342 filings.

I refer now to a chart which shows the filings of the court relative to the Ninth Circuit. We have the various circuits: The First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Circuits. The Ninth has a population of 54 million; the caseload is 10,000 filings. The nearest would be the Eleventh Circuit. Clearly, the workload is significant in this court.

I refer you now to chart 2, which shows the current size of the court. This gives a better understanding showing the makeup of the Ninth Circuit covering Alaska, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, California, Nevada, and Arizona. It covers a population of 54 million. The caseload is 10,000 cases. The Ninth Circuit area is 1.4 million square miles.

It is interesting to reflect on the east coast. On the east coast, we have Maine, the eastern States, with their own court in red on the chart in the First Circuit. The green is the Second District. Third is in the raspberry color. The Fourth Circuit includes the Carolinas. We have five circuit courts covering a significant population. Clearly, this chart points out the difference between the size of the area of the Ninth and the caseload.

I will quote from various Justices relative to their views on splitting the court. It is imperative we reflect on those who have studied this issue and evaluated it on its merits.

From retired U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren Burger: I strongly believe the Ninth Circuit is far too cumbersome and it should be divided.

Justice Anthony M. Kennedy:

I have increasing doubts and increasing reservations about the wisdom of retaining the ninth circuit in its historic size, and with its historic jurisdiction. We have very dedicated judges on that circuit, very scholarly judges. . . . But I think institutionally, and from the collegial standpoint, that it is too large to have the discipline and control that's necessary for an effective circuit.

We go to the Honorable Diarmuid O'Scannlain, a Ninth Circuit judge:

We—the ninth circuit—cannot grow without limit. . . . As the number of opinions increases, we judges risk losing the ability to know what our circuit's law is. In short, bigger is not necessarily better. The ninth circuit will ultimately need to be split. . . .

Former Alabama Supreme Court Chief Justice Howell Heflin, one of our former colleagues:

Congress recognized that a point is reached where the addition of judges decreases the effectiveness of the court, complicates the administration of uniform law, and potentially diminishes the quality of justice within a Circuit.

Last, former U.S. Senator Mark O. Hatfield, State of Oregon:

The increased likelihood of intracircuit conflicts is an important justification for splitting the court.

These are gentlemen who have reviewed this issue and evaluated it objectively on its merits.

We see here the Supreme Court agrees that reform is needed. Here is a quote from Justice Scalia:

The disproportionate segment of this court's discretionary docket that is consistently devoted to reviewing ninth circuit judgments, and reversing them by lop-sided margins, suggests that this error-reduction function is not being performed effectively.

That is a pretty strong statement on the manner in which the Ninth Circuit has been conducting itself. As the reference is from Justice Scalia, he cites a disproportionate segment of the Supreme Court's discretionary docket that is devoted to reviewing Ninth Circuit judgments reversing them by lop-sided margins. That is certainly a critique against the Ninth Circuit's performance.

Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor:

With respect to the ninth circuit in particular, in my view the circuit is simply too large.

Finally, Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens:

In my opinion, the arguments in favor of dividing the circuit into either two or three smaller circuits overwhelmingly outweigh the single serious objection to such a change.

So there you have three Justices indicating that in their opinion the court is too large, there have been too many reversals coming to the Supreme Court. It is the criticism of the function of the court.

Let me continue because I think it is important to reflect on just what these figures are, relative to the filings and the increase. The number of filings continues to increase in the Ninth, from 8,415 in 1995 to 9,070 in 1998, and now 10,342 in the year 2001. We have seen the chart with the caseloads increasing. Here is a vivid comparison of the years, as this caseload jumps, particularly from 2000 to 2001, as one can see, in the red.

The ever increasing, expanding docket in the Ninth Circuit creates an inherent difficulty in keeping abreast of legal developments within its own jurisdiction, rendering inconsistency in constitutional interpretation within the court. Interestingly, the statistical opportunities for inconsistency on a 28-panel court calculate out to about 3,276 combinations of panels that could resolve any given issue.

I have had conversations with judges on the Ninth Circuit who have indicated the caseload is such that it is impossible for them to communicate among themselves on the activities going on within the court, as opposed to the usual process of judges having an opportunity to review other judges' opinions. As a consequence, the caseload is simply too big to allow, not for leisure, but it is a necessity, given the manner in which judges reflect upon their observation.

I would like to point out to my colleagues an article from the June 30 New York Times entitled "Court That Ruled on Pledge Often Runs Afoul of Justices." I would like to read highlights. Obviously, there is too much material in it, but specifically I quote: . . . judges on the court said that they did not have time to read all of the decisions it issued.

According to the commission's 1998 report, 57 percent of judges in the Ninth Circuit, compared with 86 percent of federal appeals court judges elsewhere, said they read most or all of their court's decisions.

That does not take place in the Ninth Circuit.

Critics say the Ninth Circuit's procedure for full-court review accounts for much of the reversal rate. All other circuits sit as one to hear full-court, or en banc, cases. The Ninth Circuit sits in panels of 11.

The procedure injects randomness into decisions. If a case is decided 6 to 5, there is no reason to think it represents the views of the majority of the court's 23 active members.

The procedure injects randomness into decisions. If a case is decided 6 to 5, there is no reason to think it represents the views of the majority of the court's 23 active members.

One only needs to review the appallingly high reversal rate of Ninth Circuit cases to appreciate the severity of the problem.

During the 1995-1996 session, the Supreme Court overturned an astounding 83 percent of the cases heard from the Ninth Circuit—83 percent, Mr. President, a figure which is 30 percent higher than the national average reversal rate.

In the 1996-97 session alone, an astounding 95 percent of its cases reviewed by the Supreme Court were overturned. This number should raise more than a few eyebrows.

A split in the circuit would enable a more complete and sound review, thereby reducing the circuit's rate of reversal before the Supreme Court.

The uniqueness of the Northwest cannot be overstated. An effective appellate process demands mastery of State law and State issues relative to geographic land mass, population, native cultures that are unique to the relevant region, and particularly public land issues.

Presently, California is responsible for almost 50 percent of the appellate court's filings, which means that California judges and California judicial philosophy dominate judicial decisions on issues that are fundamentally unique to the Pacific Northwest.

Let me show on this chart the specifics of where all the cases come from. Nearly half of them—46 percent—come from California; Arizona, 7 percent; Alaska 1.3 percent; Hawaii, 1.9 percent; Idaho, Montana, Nevada, 5.6 percent.

Clearly, you see the significant overwhelming evidence that most of the cases, of course, are from California.

As a consequence, this need for greater regional representation is demonstrated by the fact that the east coast of the United States is composed of five Federal circuits. I wonder what the justification for that was. Clearly, it was justified in the sense of good judicial decision. But here we have on the west coast one court. The division of the Ninth Circuit would enable judges, lawyers, and parties to master a more manageable and predictable universe of relevant case law.

Establishing a circuit comprised solely of States in the West would adhere certainly to congressional intent. Alaska, Washington, Oregon, Hawaii, Idaho, and perhaps Nevada—although I understand Nevada, in the minds of some, is in the State of California. In any event, we share similar land-based populations and economics. Each State contains a high percentage of public land, a fairly comparable population, is financially dependent on tourism and is blessed with an abundance of natural resources.

In conclusion, while I may believe even more sweeping changes are in order, I strongly urge that this body address the crisis in our judiciary system. It is the 54 million residents of the Ninth Circuit who suffer from our inaction. These Americans wait years before their cases are heard, and, after those unreasonable delays, justice may not even be served by an overstretched and out of touch judiciary.

Congress has known about the problem in the Ninth Circuit for a long time. Justice has been delayed too long. The time for reform has come. I urge action on this legislation. I will be offering it on every bill until we obtain a vote on this issue.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. CORZINE. Thank you, Mr. President.

ECONOMIC SECURITY FOR ALL AMERICANS

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, today I want to talk about the corporate scandals and financial problems we have been experiencing, and discuss how these problems highlight the importance of keeping the "security" in Social Security.

Last week, American financial markets plunged dramatically in response to the ongoing litany of corporate scandal and earnings restatements. The New York Times called the current 2½-year slide in the stock market the "worst bear market in a generation." For ordinary investors, retirees, and near-retirees—last week, and certainly the year—the post-bubble environment has been a financial nightmare. What felt like a hard-earned, secure retirement for many became an open question filled with uncertainty for many Americans. People are feeling compelled to go back to work and evaluate when they will retire, continue their careers, or cut back on their standard of living. They are experiencing a real sense of economic insecurity.

U.S. equity markets have lost nearly $7.5 trillion since the peak of the market—that is a mind-boggling number, frankly—and roughly $2.5 trillion in market value has been lost this year alone.

That loss has created a profound sense of insecurity among American families. We are seeing it in the real economy, we are seeing it in consumer confidence, and in a whole series of measures.

Trees don't grow to the sky. We sometimes lost track of that in the 1990s. Markets will not fall to zero either. But markets pose real risk and real challenges to the economic security of all Americans. That is, of course, why we must pass the accounting reform measure before the Senate, the Investor Protection Act. I hope we will do that today. We must also stand firm on the principles and elements of this legislation as we continue in the conference committee, which will try to piece together this strong piece of reform legislation with a fairly weak and tepid response in the House.

Obviously, investors are deeply affected by the wave of corporate scandals and financial restatements that infect too much of the corporate world: The so-called Enron Syndrome, WorldCom, Global Crossing, to Adelphia—the litany goes on, and, unfortunately, appears to be lengthening. I think we may just be at the head of this wave.

What we have is not merely a few bad apples but a systemic breakdown—a breakdown in our accounting system, a breakdown in our auditing structures, and, more fundamentally, a breakdown in the trust that is the foundation of our entire market-based economic system—trust in our corporate leadership and trust in the truthfulness of their word.

As a former businessman and a CEO, I must say I am ashamed of this wave of corporate corruption. As a Senator, I am appalled at the continuing attempt of some lobbyists and too many in public office to substitute a token response for a strong and effective governmental response.

Frankly, I was disappointed with President Bush's response last week, which was long on rhetoric and short on reform. Nothing was really said about the accounting industry conflicts, the conflicts with regard to research in investment banks, as Attorney General Spitzer has brought to light, the expensing of options, or about many other serious steps that will be needed to restore public confidence.

The President also failed to face up to the urgent need for major strengthening of the SEC, which today is drastically outgunned in the battle against corporate fraud. We need not define the SEC by who is leading the SEC, but we need to make sure we speak to the scope of the resources they have and the tools they have to deal with the issues that are involved in problems that have led to the crisis of consumer confidence that we have today.

Many of my colleagues have expressed similar concerns in recent days, and I believe the American people are watching us closely today, and will see how this process unfolds as the 107th Congress proceeds to completion, and whether we can put this strong reform legislation on the President's desk not only by passing a strong bill in the Senate but by making sure that when we get to conference, we put the public's interest ahead of special interests.

With that said, there is another very important question that is reinforced by these events. It is really where the dots connect and what I will focus on today. That is something I have been speaking about often here on the floor—the implications of a market meltdown and the President's drive to move toward the privatization of Social Security.

For anyone who has any doubt about the importance of providing a guaranteed safety net—a bedrock safety net—for America's retirees, recent events prove how that is absolutely necessary.

In just the past week, millions of Americans have seen the value of their 401(k)s plunge dramatically. For some, this decline will mean their retirement will have to be delayed. For others already retired, it will bring a real decline in their standard of living. I have read about and talked to people who will have to return to work. And for millions of Americans, recent events have highlighted the risk of relying on the stock market as the primary guarantor of retirement security.

We have always talked in this Nation about a three-legged stool to support people in their retirement: Certainly, individual savings, and some of that undoubtedly is well spent in the stock market; then there are pension benefits that are provided by employers; and then there has always been this bedrock of Social Security. That is the three-legged stool.

I think we need to make sure we reinforce that fundamental leg, Social Security. The purpose of Social Security is to ensure, despite the inherent uncertainties of the marketplace, that retirees who have contributed to our Nation will be guaranteed a basic level of retirement income. In other words, the Social Security system guarantees a degree of certainty, a certainty that will give people that sense of security.

Privatizing the program, as the Bush Social Security Commission has proposed, will undermine that security and tear apart a program that has been successful—enormously successful—for the American people for over 70 years. In fact, we have gone from where we had more than 50 percent of the American population retired and living in poverty down to almost 10 percent in recent years. In my view, moving away from that would be a mistake.

For 50 percent of working Americans, the whole of their retirement security is Social Security; they have no other means of retirement security. And for about 70 percent, the primary means of their retirement security is Social Security. So we are really talking about putting at risk something that I think is very vital for most Americans.

Ever since Franklin Roosevelt signed it into law, Social Security has been critically important for our Nation's seniors. Its importance has grown even more in recent years. That is because fewer and fewer Americans now have access to traditional defined-benefit pension plans. Those plans have declined from 175,000 programs in 1983 to just about 50,000 programs today. There has been a dramatic decline in these defined-benefit programs—ones that were secure. Increasingly, companies have switched from traditional plans, under which the company bears the investment risks, to defined-contribution plans, under which workers and retirees are themselves the risk takers—market risk takers.

Proponents of privatizing Social Security would compound those defined-contribution or 401(k) market risks by making Social Security benefits equally dependent on the uncertainties of the stock market. In my view, that would be a cruel betrayal of America's senior citizens and a denial of the promise of Social Security.

Consider what has happened to the employees at MCI. MCI is another telecommunications company that was merged into WorldCom about 2½ years ago. Before the takeover by WorldCom, MCI maintained a traditional defined-benefit plan; that is, the retirement security risks were borne by MCI and guaranteed by a Government institution called the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. But that plan was abolished after WorldCom merged, except, by the way, for senior management; they continued to have defined-benefit programs for their retirements. Instead, MCI employees, as most WorldCom employees, were offered only one type of retirement program, a 401(k) plan.

I am not against 401(k) plans. They are a great idea for an additional element, on top of Social Security, a guaranteed benefit. But I think when we mix apples and oranges, we undermine economic security for Americans.

By the end of 1999, over 103,000 workers and retirees participated in this WorldCom 401(k) program. Their accounts at that time held more than $1.1 billion of WorldCom stock, about one-third of the plan's assets. At that time, the stock was worth $54 a share.

Today, that stock and their retirement funds are almost worthless. And we read in the paper today that WorldCom is about to file its bankruptcy petitions. After WorldCom's massive accounting scam, the stock is not at $54 a share but 3 cents a share. The WorldCom stock in WorldCom 401(k) plans is not worth $1.1 billion, but it is now worth $20 million.

By the way, the 401(k) plan isn't guaranteed by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. It is actually imposing a cruel reduction in the security of all those 104,000 folks. I say, as an aside, this situation certainly argues for diversification in pension plans as well. The WorldCom plan started with about one-third concentration in WorldCom stock. It now has less than 1 percent in the WorldCom stock, but that is just because of the loss of value. It is really a very difficult situation for a lot of working Americans.

These are not just numbers or abstract entries on a corporate balance sheet or somebody's notification of what their 401(k) plan returns are, they represent the destruction of people's hopes and dreams for a secure retirement life, after working responsibly and contributing responsibly to their retirement.

Last week we had one WorldCom employee say:

I put all my money in WorldCom stock, and I'm pretty sure I've lost everything. I knew what happened at Enron, but I thought we [at WorldCom] were different.

Management told them they were different, and, as most people, employees trusted the executives they worked for and wanted to be proud of their company and its leadership.

The experience of WorldCom employees, and those of hundreds of other companies—some of them, by the way, not falling prey to the whims of fraud but just simply market realities—shows that diversification is an absolute essential in pension reform. I hope we have that debate also on the floor.

When retirees lose all their money through no fault of their own, when nothing is left in their retirement portfolio, one thing, and one thing only, stands in the way of total economic devastation. Social Security. Because no matter the state of the stock market, Social Security is always there—not with enough to live in luxury but enough to make a real difference for millions who have little or no savings on which to rely. Social Security is the ultimate safety net. We must not let the administration shred it.

Privatization schemes would irresponsibly gamble with the guarantee of security for retirees, present and future. The average Social Security benefit last year was only about $10,000 a year—not the princely sums received by executives who have failed their companies—and not enough in some parts of our country to have a secure retirement. In New Jersey, for instance, $10,000 a year can only get you so far given the high cost of living in our part of the country.

Yet President Bush's Social Security Commission called for substantial cuts in guaranteed benefits. Cuts for some workers would amount to 25 percent and future cuts could exceed 45 percent. If anyone wants to apologize for privatization by disputing these numbers, I just encourage them to read the report of the nonpartisan actuaries at the Social Security Administration themselves. For more evidence, let me refer you to the recent economic analysis by Professor Peter Diamond of MIT and Dr. Peter Orszag of the Brookings Institution.

The Bush Commission parades its proposals as promoting choice. But if the Bush privatization plans were ever approved, seniors would have no choice. Their benefits would be cut. They would be cut if they shifted to privatized accounts, and they would be cut if they did not. The only choice is this: If they opted for privatized accounts, their guaranteed benefits would be cut more deeply.

The effective destruction of Social Security's guaranteed benefits recommended by the Bush Commission is bad economics and bad social policy. Fifty Senators have written the President urging him to publicly reject his Commission's proposals. So far, his response has been the same kind of silence we heard for months after the corporate scandals first broke with Enron.

Sometimes facts and reality ought to bring about a change in thinking for individuals, for corporations, and for an administration on important topics of the day.

Cutting guaranteed Social Security may have sounded like a good idea when the stock market was only going up, but now the fallacy of that assumption is clear to everybody. I hope the Bush administration will reconsider its plans to privatize and cut Social Security.

Let's not take the security out of Social Security.

Mr. President, before I leave the floor, I would like to take a few minutes to discuss a different matter but one that I believe is fundamentally important as we seek to address the structural problems facing our economy and what we need to face in the financial world to straighten out some of the problems we have. We need to better account for employee stock options.

This, too, is an issue that regardless of where one may have been historically, facts and reality ought to bring about a change in reasonable folks' thought with regard to options.

While the depth of liquidity and efficiency of our markets is still unrivaled, our markets need to make sure they are based on a presumption of integrity and accuracy in the information provided to the country. Our entire financial system depends on the broad availability of timely, truthful and transparent information. To secure that and restore the confidence of investors, it is absolutely urgent that we address this treatment of employee stock options.

The fact is, in many instances where we continue to allow this without an acknowledgment of what is going on, two things are happening: Earnings are overstated, and there is an enormous amount of dilution going on to the ownership of shares.

People may argue that you can derive this from financial statements and footnotes that are highly complicated even for the most sophisticated investor to read. But I argue that there is no common sense in making it as difficult to understand what the earnings statements of a company state and, more importantly, protecting investors from the dilution that comes from the whole premise of issuing more stock without having an understanding of when that is going to happen. This needs to be put in the context of the asymmetrical incentives it gives management that has undermined confidence in our corporate executives.

To be brief: We have a chance to address this issue in a very serious manner in the next few hours before we take our final vote on this legislation. I compliment Senator LEVIN and all those who stand to straighten out and put into responsible format what needs to be done with option accounting. We should do that not by writing option rules, at which I do not think the Senate has the capacity to be effective, but making sure that an independent body, which we will independently finance, has the ability to deal with a very complicated issue.

I hope with the help of all my colleagues, we can get around to straightening out something that, as we saw today in news reports, even corporate executives understand can lead to misallocation of resources and certainly misunderstanding of the performance of companies. We ought to get to real economic performance being reflected, not accounting performance. I am glad to see Coca-Cola take the steps they did. We need to move firmly and surely by passing the Levin amendment which would facilitate a solution that would make this permanent for everyone.

All three of these are important issues—accounting reform and corporate responsibility, the treatment of stock options, and protecting Social Security and rejecting privatization. The stakes are high for our economy. I hope we will move swiftly and certainly to reform and provide economic security to all Americans.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

PUBLIC COMPANY ACCOUNTING REFORM AND INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT OF 2002

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 2673, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2673) to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independence of firms that audit public companies, to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Edwards modified amendment No. 4187, to address rules of professional responsibility for attorneys.

Reid (for Carnahan) modified amendment No. 4286 (to amendment No. 4187), to require timely and public disclosure of transactions involving management and principal stockholders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Michigan, Mr. LEVIN, is recognized.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wonder if I might inquire as to how much time I have on my allotted time under postcloture rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 36 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the Chair.

I will at a later time ask unanimous consent that the pending second-degree amendment be laid aside so I can offer a germane second-degree amendment relative to stock options.

My amendment, which is at the desk, would direct the independent accounting standards board to review the accounting rule on stock options and adopt an appropriate rule within 1 year.

It should not be necessary to seek unanimous consent. The whole purpose of our postcloture rules is to allow those of us who have germane amendments such as this one to offer that amendment, to have it voted on. It is a frustration of the clear intent of our rules to not allow germane amendments to be voted on after cloture is invoked.

We have a strict rule. It is called cloture. It ends debate. When cloture was invoked, I had pending an amendment which would have given the Securities and Exchange Commission greater powers to impose civil fines administratively. It is an important addition to SEC powers. They now have that power over brokers, but they don't have it over corporate directors. They don't have it over corporate managers. They ought to have the power to impose civil fines administratively—subject, of course, to appeal to the courts—relative to corporate directors and corporate officers.

That amendment, as relevant as it is to this bill, was frustrated when cloture was invoked and when all the time up to that vote was utilized so that my SEC amendment was not allowed to come up for a vote.

Now we are in postcloture. Now we are under postcloture rules. The question is whether or not the intent of those rules is going to be carried out, which is to allow those of us who have germane amendments to have a vote on those amendments.

The amendment on which I would like to have a vote cannot be voted on because there is a pending first-degree amendment and a pending second-degree amendment. So the second-degree amendment would have to be laid aside in order to allow a vote. As long as the opponents of this stock option accounting amendment don't allow the first- and second-degree amendments that are pending to come to a vote, we are foreclosed from offering germane amendments.

That is not the intent of our postcloture rule. I believe it is an abuse of the intent of our postcloture rule. I hope it will not happen here. I am hoping against hope that there will not be an objection to my unanimous consent request so that this most critical issue can be addressed by the Senate.

If we don't address this issue, it seems to me we are leaving a significant gap in the reforms we are struggling so hard to adopt to try to restore honesty to accounting rules.

In 1994, the Financial Accounting Standards Board issued a tentative rule which said that stock options should be expensed like all other forms of compensation. That is what they decided was the right thing to do.

Well, Congress intervened. The executives intervened strongly, beat back FASB with huge pressure, all set out in the FASB account of its rule. By the way, one of the most extraordinary documents I have ever read, as a matter of fact, in 24 years in the Senate, is that Financial Accounting Standards Board history of their effort to bring honesty to accounting for stock options, in their judgment, and how that effort was beaten back by pressure from executives and from Congress so that their very existence was at stake if they proceeded in a way which they thought was right. All set forth in the record. It is quite an amazing document.

So what FASB did was, they said: We can't survive if we do what we think is right. So what we will do instead is we will urge people to expense options. We will urge corporations to expense their options, but we will not mandate it.

FASB said: If you don't expense options, at least disclose the cost of the options as a footnote in your financial statements.

That was the way they decided to survive. This body voted, put some of the pressure on FASB, basically told them to leave stock option accounting alone. So we intervened on an accounting issue with a vote of something like 90 to 10 or thereabouts.

The executives weighed in. I was at one of the meetings in Connecticut when the executives weighed in heavily on this issue. So I saw the pressure that was brought to bear on what should be an independent accounting standards board.

Now we are doing something different in this bill. We are saying to the board that we are going to give you an independent source of funding. We are not going to make you dependent directly for your funding from the very people you are seeking to regulate through your accounting standards. So we are making some progress now by giving them an independent source of funding.

What my amendment would do is take what is the most significant post-Enron issue that is left open, which is accounting for these huge amounts of stock options that go mainly to executives, and direct this board that now has an independent source of funding to review—"review" is the key word—this matter and make an appropriate decision within 1 year.

Mr. MCCAIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LEVIN. I wonder if I can yield on the time of the Senator from Arizona, because time is so limited here that I am going to have very little. I think the Senator has a half hour and, assuming that the Senator can be recognized, I believe that I only have about 10 or 15 minutes of time remaining. I wonder if the Senator from Texas would permit that I be allowed to yield to the Senator from Arizona, if the Senator from Arizona is willing to ask a question to be taken out of his own time.

Mr. GRAMM. Reserving the right to object, the Senator started out with a unanimous consent request and then launched into a speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no request pending.

Mr. GRAMM. Maybe if the Senator would do his unanimous consent request and then yield, that would be fine.

Mr. LEVIN. I would rather do my unanimous consent request at the end of the time, rather than at the beginning of the time. I make a parliamentary inquiry. If I make a unanimous consent—

Mr. GRAMM. I don't object to the Senator yielding. I wanted to be sure we had the time we were supposed to have.

Mr. LEVIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arizona, if he is willing, be able to ask a question on his time. I yield to the Senator from Arizona for that question and then I retain the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I will be very brief, due to the shortness of time. I wonder if the Senator from Michigan remembers my comments last Thursday when I referred to an old boxing term, "the fix is in." There was no vote allowed on my amendment, which is a clearcut, absolutely unequivocal statement about the use of stock options for accounting. Does the Senator really believe that, since my amendment was blocked by that side, his amendment is not going to be blocked by this side?

The fix is in, I say to the Senator from Michigan. I hope he knows that. This is a terrible mistake, a terrible mistake, because we are not addressing what every observer knows is a vital and critical aspect of reforming this system, which continues to so badly erode the confidence of the American people, the investors, which is over half of the American people.

I wonder if the Senator from Michigan remembers what I said last week, that the fact is the fix is in. I didn't get a vote on my amendment and the Senator from Michigan won't get one on his. Very frankly, since that side blocked my vote, I can understand them blocking this vote. I think it is wrong on both sides.

The American people deserve to know how we stand on the issue of stock options. Does the Senator understand that?

Mr. REID. Will my friend yield for a question on my time?

Mr. LEVIN. I am happy to.

Mr. REID. The Senator will recall the Senator from Arizona talking about the fix being in, and the RECORD will clearly reflect that the Senator from Arizona asked that his amendment be in order postcloture, and, as the Senator from Michigan will recall, I objected to that because at that time we had 56 other amendments that were pending. They also wanted them to be in order.

Mr. MCCAIN. If the Senator will yield, that is not correct. Mine was a motion to recommit.

Mr. REID. I am talking about the objection about which I was involved, and does the Senator from Michigan recall that objection to the unanimous consent request by the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LEVIN. I believe I do recall the objection to the request, and I would rather let the RECORD speak for itself as to the other matters because I think the issue before us is a somewhat different issue than we faced on the McCain-Levin amendment last week. Now we have a Levin-McCain-Corzine amendment, which is somewhat different. I supported Senator MCCAIN's amendment, and, indeed, I have been very active in trying to get this accounting rule adopted in the way the independent accounting board wants to have it adopted. That is the key emphasis.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield on my time for a question?

Mr. LEVIN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. As I understand the Senator's amendment—the one he will be seeking to offer.

Mr. LEVIN. I will be seeking unanimous consent to have the second-degree amendment laid aside so that I can do so.

Mr. SARBANES. As I understand it, this amendment is not the Congress trying to legislate what the accounting standard should be; is that correct?

Mr. LEVIN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. I think that is important because I, frankly, do not think that the Congress should get into the business of trying to legislate accounting standards. I don't think we have the expertise or the competence to do it. And it turns established accounting standards into a straight-out political exercise, and I don't think that is wise.

As I understand the Senator's amendment, it would simply reference the issue of the treatment of stock options to the financial accounting standards board, for them to make their own independent judgment as to how this matter should be treated, is that correct?

Mr. LEVIN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. And I understand that the terms of reference are such that it does not presuppose a particular substantive conclusion; it is, in effect, left open, or even level, however you want to describe it—a level playing field for FASB, the expert body that has been established to make these judgments to make its own independent judgment as to how these matters should be addressed, is that correct?

Mr. LEVIN. The amendment directs FASB to review the issue and adopt an appropriate standard. Those are the words in the amendment. I must tell my good friend from Maryland, however, that there is a history here that cannot be ignored.

The history is that FASB tried to adopt a standard in 1994. They said what the right standard was. They were beaten back and brow-beaten and pressured, so they had to give up what they believed was right. That is in their own history. Then they recommended to corporations to expense options, because that is the right thing to do. But they offered an option to corporations to simply disclose the value of options in their financial statement in a footnote. They left that option open.

So I have two hopes here. One is that there will not be an objection to a vote on this amendment. For the life of me, I cannot see how anybody can object to a vote on an amendment, which simply tells the independent accounting standards board to reach an appropriate decision.

Now, we did intervene 8 years ago, and I believed it was wrong for us to intervene. Nine of us voted no; 90 voted yes. We told them: Do not change the rule; do not expense options.

In my judgment, it was wrong procedurally and it was wrong in terms of the substance. But it is my hope that,

No. 1, we will be allowed to have a vote, and, No. 2, it would be my expectation, however, if it is left to the independence of FASB, that FASB would continue to do what they said was the right thing, which is to expense options.

It is left to their independent judgment to reach an appropriate conclusion under the language of my amendment.

Mr. SARBANES. So it would be FASB's call?

Mr. LEVIN. It would be FASB's call.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I simply want to say I am supportive of this amendment. I think this is the right way to go about it.

Let me repeat. I do not think the Congress itself should be in the business of legislating accounting standards, but this amendment does not do that. It references the issue to the very body that has been established to accomplish that, which has the expertise and the competence. The amendment also helps to underscore the independence of FASB and a congressional perception that they should call it as they see it. I hope at the appropriate time the Senator will be able to obtain permission to bring his amendment before the body.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DASCHLE. I am sorry. I think the Senator from Michigan has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. LEVIN. I ask unanimous consent that I yield to the majority leader for whatever time he wishes to take and that time not be taken from the few minutes I have remaining, and that the floor be returned to me at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I will use my leader time so as not to take any time still allotted to the Senator from Michigan.

I hope we can get the unanimous consent request that the Senator from Michigan is propounding. I will also say that this is not a question of if he can get consent and ultimately bring the amendment to the floor. One way or the other we will have a vote on the Levin amendment. It may not be on this bill this afternoon if we fail, but our colleagues need to know we will have a vote on this amendment. This will occur. If I have to offer it myself, we will have a vote on this amendment. So we can do it this afternoon, we can do it tomorrow, or we can do it next week. We are going to have a vote on this amendment. Senators need to take that into account before they object.

Let me say as strongly as I can, this amendment belongs on this bill. This is exactly what I think we ought to be doing, and I think on a bipartisan basis there is strong support for what Senator LEVIN is proposing.

I want to speak briefly this afternoon, in my leader time, on the amendment itself. I think it is important, as my colleagues have been noting, that the Levin amendment contains precisely the right solution to the difficult problems of determining the proper accounting treatment for stock options. It reserves that judgment for the appropriate body, the Financial Accounting Standards Board. They are the ones given the authority, they are the ones with the credibility, they are the ones with the standing to make the right decisions about this very important and complex matter.

I argue this is the heart of our ability to deal with the accounting reforms that are in the Sarbanes and Leahy bills.

It has become all too clear that accounting standards are complex and can be easily manipulated by aggressive and sometimes unscrupulous corporate executives. Unfortunately, FASB's weak, dependent condition has contributed to those manipulations. In fact, it is arguable that the undermining of FASB's independence was the necessary precondition to the crisis in confidence afflicting our capital markets today.

One of the many virtues of the Sarbanes bill is that it corrects that situation. It provides for a new, improved FASB, giving it for the first time full financial independence from the accounting industry. That certainly is the first and most vital improvement we need with respect to establishing clarity and regularity of accounting standards.

Another needed improvement is for those of us in Congress to allow FASB to do its job. In 1994—and my colleagues have referenced this—when this issue was last taken up by the Senate, I am proud to say I was one of nine Senators who voted against the Senate intruding itself on FASB's decisionmaking process. That is the only reason I opposed my colleague's amendment last week. As well intended as it is, in my view it did the same thing on the other side that they were trying to do 9 years ago. It asserts Congress's authority to undermine the independence of that board. I opposed it 9 years ago, and I oppose it today, but for obviously different results.

At the same time, the Senate was coming at the options issue from the direction of prohibiting expenses back in 1994, and as I said today the momentum is the opposite, but the right course is the same. Let the experts on the accounting standards board do their job and make the appropriate decision. Eight years ago, the technical accounting questions were essentially the same as they are today, although obviously 8 years have given us an entirely different perspective than the one we had back then. Nonetheless, the questions are still real. Accountants still debate the relative merits of the opposing sides. We still have expert opinion going both ways. On the one hand, the argument is made that if options are not expensed, bottom lines look far more attractive than they actually should be, and the investors can be deceived by the distorted financial pictures that result.

On the other hand, we hear that it is inherently impossible to value options with no concrete reality behind what the options will actually be worth when they are exercised. There is also a real debate about the incentive effects of options.

Supporters argue that they better align an employee's interests with the company's. Opponents contend they result in a "pump and dump" mentality, with senior executives seeking to inflate their stock prices at any cost so they can quickly and cynically enrich themselves.

In contrast to those complex questions, the Levin amendment is simplicity itself. It is one sentence. It says that FASB shall:

Review the accounting treatment of employee stock options and shall, within one year of enactment, adopt an appropriate generally-accepted accounting principle for the treatment of employee stock options—

End of issue.

The business of setting accounting standards is lodged, by the Levin amendment, in the board that the Sarbanes bill expressly seeks to strengthen and improve. I fully support the Levin amendment and the philosophy behind it. Congress should not be engaged in setting technical accounting rules. We should be seeking to do the reverse: Establish an independent FASB that can help restore confidence in the accuracy of financial information.

I observe in this context that because of that principle, as I said a moment ago, while well intended, I believe the McCain amendment went too far and did exactly what we were trying to do in 1994 but on the flip side. Restoring independence to the accounting standards is one of the overriding objectives of the Sarbanes bill, and that is one of my main reasons for supporting it as strongly as I do. That was my primary reason for voting in 1994 against a previous attempt to direct FASB in its decision about expensing, and it is the primary reason for supporting the Levin amendment today.

So I will end on this particular issue where I began. There will be a vote on the Levin amendment. It will be today, tomorrow, next week, or at some point in the future, but Senators should not be misled. If there is an objection today, it by no means ends the debate. We might as well have it. We might as well get it. We might as well include it in the Sarbanes bill because it will be included in one fashion or another, ultimately, before the work has been done in the Senate on this very important, complex, and comprehensive challenge we face.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. LEVIN. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I quote from a few observers what the stakes are in this vote and what the stakes have been in terms of the way in which stock options have not been expensed, have been stealth compensation, have fueled the incredible increase in terms of executive pay, and have been a driving force behind the deceptive accounting practices which have bedeviled this Nation and undermined public confidence in the credibility of our financial statements.

Robert Samuelson, an economist, said the following:

The point is that the growth of stock options has created huge conflicts of interest that executives will be hard-pressed to avoid. Indeed, many executives will coax as many options as possible from their compensation committees, typically composed of "outside" directors. But because "directors are [manipulated] by management, sympathetic to them, or simply ineffectual," the amounts may well be excessive. . . .

Stock options are not evil, but unless we curb the present madness, we are courting continual trouble.

This is what a retired vice president at J.P. Morgan and Company said: There can be no real reform without honest accounting for stock options. A decade ago, the Financial Accounting Standards Board recommended options be counted as a cost against earnings like all other forms of compensation, but corporate lobbyists resisted and Congress did their bidding. Alan Greenspan and Warren Buffett, among others, are calling for the same change now, but it remains to be seen whether the accounting profession can act without congressional interference. Treating options like other forms of pay would make executive compensation transparent, diminish the temptation to cook the books, and make managers less inclined towards excessive risk taking.

Warren Buffett, who was quoted by Senator MCCAIN last week, said the following: If options aren't a form of compensation, what are they? If compensation isn't an expense, what is it? If expenses shouldn't go into the calculation of earnings, where in the world should they go?

A New York Times editorial of March 31 of this year stated:

We have no quarrel with the business lobby's claim that stock options have helped fuel America's entrepreneurship, particularly in Silicon Valley. But in the interest of truthful accounting and greater financial integrity, options should be treated as what they are, a worthy form of compensation that companies must report as an expense.

Robert Felton, director of McKinsey & Company's Seattle office, said:

Because they have so much at stake with these huge grants, options are likely to have encouraged some managers to cheat and cook the books.

Allan Sloan of Newsweek:

... options are a free lunch for companies.

I'm all in favor of employees becoming millionaires via options—I'm an employee, after all—but I'm also in favor of companies providing profit-and-loss statements that show the real profit and loss. Ignoring options' costs and low-balling CEO packages are simply outrageous. When campaigns start expensing options and disclosing true CEO and director compensation numbers, I'll believe that they've seen the light.

According to the Economist, last year, stock options accounted for 58 percent of the pay of chief executives of large American companies. So over half the compensation of our CEOs of major companies now comes from stock options. To leave that expense off the financial statements' bottom line is to distort what is going on at companies. It is part of the reason we have not had accurately reflective financial statements at our corporations. It is part of the reason for the soup we are in right now.

Where financial statements have been giving a false picture of what a company's financial situation is, it has provided stealth compensation in huge amounts to executives, it has watered down the value of stock to the owners of a corporation. That is why now we have such tremendous support from the organizations which represent stockholders.

That is why, for instance, TIAA-CREF, the largest pension fund in the United States for teachers is supportive of changing the accounting for stock options. It is why the Council for Institutional Investors, which is the leading shareholders organization for pension funds, now favors expensing stock options in order to give an accurate reflection of what a company's financial statement is. It is why the AFL-CIO supports the amendments offered last week and the amendment which hopefully will be offered today if we are allowed to have a vote on this.

Alan Greenspan says this is the top post-Enron reform. Expensing stock options is the top post-Enron reform. That is the Chairman of the Federal Reserve. Paul Volcker, former Federal Reserve Chairman, supports a change in stock option accounting. Arthur Levitt, former SEC Chairman, supports the change; Warren Buffett, as we mentioned; and a host of economists. Standard & Poor's believes you have to expense stock options if you are going to show an accurate earnings calculation; Citizens for Tax Justice; Consumer Federation of America; Consumers Union, and on and on.

The Washington Post of April 18 says the following:

... expert consensus favors treating options as a corporate expense, which would mean that reported earnings might actually reflect reality. . . . But nobody wants to ban this form of compensation; the goal is merely to have it counted as an expense.

That is the end of that particular quote. I would like the entire quote printed in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that all the editorials and comments that I referred to be printed in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STOCK OPTION MADNESS

(By Robert J. Samuelson)

As the Enron scandal broadens, we may miss the forest for the trees. The multiplying investigations have created a massive whodunit. Who destroyed documents? Who misled investors? Who twisted or broke accounting rules? The answers may explain what happened at Enron but not necessarily why. We need to search for deeper causes, beginning with stock options. Here's a good idea gone bad—stock options foster a corrosive climate that tempts many executives, and not just those at Enron, to play fast and loose when reporting profits.

As everyone knows, stock options exploded in the late 1980s and the '90s. The theory was simple. If you made top executives and managers into owners, they would act in shareholders' interests. Executives' pay packages became increasingly skewed toward options. In 2000, the typical chief executive officer of one of the country's 350 major companies earned about $5.2 million, with almost half of that reflecting stock options, according to William M. Mercer Inc., a consulting firm. About half of those companies also had stock-option programs for at least half their employees.

Up to a point, the theory worked. Twenty years ago, America's corporate managers were widely criticized. Japanese and German companies seemed on a roll. By contrast, their American rivals seemed stodgy, complacent and bureaucratic. Stock options were one tool in a managerial upheaval that refocused attention away from corporate empire-building and toward improved profitability and efficiency.

All this contributed to the 1990's economic revival. By holding down costs, companies restrained inflation. By aggressively promoting new products and technologies, companies boosted production and employment. But slowly stock options became corrupted by carelessness, overuse and greed. As more executives developed big personal stakes in options, the task of keeping the stock price rising became separate from improving the business and its profitability. This is what seems to have happened at Enron.

The company adored stock options. About 60 percent of employees received an annual award of options, equal to 5 percent of their base salary. Executives and top managers got more. At year-end 2000, all Enron managers and workers had options that could be exercised for nearly 47 million shares. Under a typical plan, a recipient gets an option to buy a given number of shares at the market price on the day the option is issued. This is called "the strike price." But the option usually cannot be exercised for a few years. If the stock's price rises in that time, the option can yield a tidy profit. The lucky recipient buys at the strike price and sells at the market price. On the 47 million Enron options, the average "strike" price was about $30, and at the end of 2000, the market price was $83. The potential profit was nearly $2.5 billion.

Given the huge rewards, it would have been astonishing if Enron's managers had not become obsessed with the company's stock price and—to the extent possible—tried to influence it. And while Enron's stock soared, why would anyone complain about accounting shenanigans? Whatever the resulting abuses, the pressures are not unique to Enron. It takes a naive view of human nature to think that many executives won't strive to maximize their personal wealth.

This is an invitation to abuse. To influence stock prices, executives can issue optimistic profit projections. They can delay some spending, such as research and development (this temporarily helps profits). They can engage in stock buybacks (these raise per-share earnings, because fewer shares are outstanding). And, of course, they can exploit accounting rules. Even temporary blips in stock prices can create opportunities to unload profitable options.

The point is that the growth of stock options has created huge conflicts of interest that executives will be hard-pressed to avoid. Indeed, many executives will coax as many options as possible from their compensation committees, typically composed of "outside" directors. But because "directors are [manipulated] by management, sympathetic to them, or simply ineffectual," the amounts may well be excessive, argue Harvard law professors Lucian Arye Bebchuk and Jesse Fried and attorney David Walker in a recent study.

Stock options are not evil, but unless we curb the present madness, we are courting continual trouble. Here are three ways to check the overuse of options.

(1) Change the accounting—count options as a cost. Amazingly, when companies issue stock options, they do not have to make a deduction to profits. This encourages companies to create new options. By one common accounting technique, Enron's options would have required deductions of almost $2.4 billion from 1998 through 2000. That would have virtually eliminated the company's profits.

(2) Index stock options to the market. If a company's shares rise in tandem with the overall stock market, the gains don't reflect any management contribution—and yet, most options still increase in value. Executives get a windfall. Options should reward only for gains above the market.

(3) Don't reprice options if the stock falls. Some corporate boards of directors issue new options at lower prices if the company's stock falls. What's the point? Options are supposed to prod executive to improve the company's profits and stock price. Why protect them if they fail?

Within limits, stock options represent a useful reward for management. But we lost those limits, and options became a kind of free money sprinkled about by uncritical corporate directors. The unintended result was a morally lax, get-rich-quick mentality. Unless companies restore limits—prodded, if need be, by new government regulations—one large lesson of the Enron scandal will have been lost.

Alan Greenspan, perhaps the nation's most revered economist, thinks employee stock options should be counted, like salaries, as a company expense. Warren Buffet, perhaps the nation's foremost investor, has long argued the same line. The Financial Accounting Standards Board, the expert group that writes accounting rules, reached the same conclusion eight years ago. The London-based International Accounting Standards Board recently recommended the same approach. In short, a rather unshort list of experts endorses the common-sense idea that, whether you get paid in cash or company cars or options, the expense should be recorded. Yet today's Senate Finance Committee hearing on the issue is likely to be filled with dissenting voices. There could hardly be a better gauge of money's power in politics.

Why does this matter? Because the current rules—which allow companies to grant executives and other employees millions of dollars in stock options without recording a dime of expenses—make a mockery of corporate accounts. Companies that grant stock options lavishly can be reporting large profits when the truth is that they are taking a large loss. In 2000, for example, Yahoo reported a profit of $71 million, but the real number after adjusting for the cost of employee stock options was a loss of $1.3 billion. Cisco reported $4.6 billion in profits; the real number was a $2.7 billion loss. By reporting make-believe profits, companies may have conned investors into bidding up their stock prices. This is one cause of the Internet bubble, whose bursting helped precipitate last year's economic slowdown.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the expert consensus favors treating options as a corporate expense, which would mean that reported earnings might actually reflect reality. But the dissenters are intimidated by neither experts nor logic. They claim that the value of options is uncertain, so they have no idea what number to put into the accounts. But the price of an option can actually be calculated quite precisely, and managers have no difficulty doing the math for the purposes of tax reporting. The dissenters also claim that options are crucial to the health of young companies. But nobody wants to ban this form of compensation; the goal is merely to have it counted as an expense. Finally, dissenters say that options need not be so counted because granting them involves no cash outlay. But giving employees something that has cash value amounts to giving them cash.

The dissenters include weighty figures in both parties. Sen. Joe Lieberman (D-Conn.) is the chief opponent of options sanity in the Senate, and last week President Bush himself declared that Mr. Greenspan is wrong on this issue. What might be behind this? Many of the corporate executives who give generously to politicians are themselves the beneficiaries of options—often to the tune of millions of dollars. High-tech companies, an important source of campaign cash, are fighting options reform with all they've got. But if these lobbyists are allowed to win the argument, they will undermine a key principle of the financial system. Accounting rules are meant to ensure that investors get good information. Without good information, they cannot know which companies will best use capital, and the whole economy suffers in the long run.

STOCK OPTION EXCESSES

In his Congressional testimony last month, Jeffrey Skilling, Enron's former chief executive, offered a primer on the misuses of stock options. Options, he said, are the most egregious way for companies to pump up their profits artificially. They also netted him a tidy $62.5 million in 2000 and helped Enron pay no income taxes in four of the last five years.

Stock options, in theory, aren't a bad idea. By giving employees the chance to buy a company's stock in the future at today's price, corporations can provide an extra incentive for hard work and can augment compensation. The New York Times Company awards option to its top executives. But like other rational business practices that got out of hand during the boom years of the late 1990's, options have been abused by some companies and are in need of reform.

A good place to start would be for Congress to end the conflict between how the tax laws and the accounting rules treat employees options. Alan Greenspan, the Federal Reserve chairman, has identified that as one of the most pressing post-Enron reforms affecting corporate governance.

That conflict creates a loophole that has allowed companies to treat stock options as essentially free money during the recent dot-com bubble. A company does not have to report grants of stock options as an expense on its profit-and-loss statements, as it does with other forms of compensation, but it can deduct the options as an expense from its tax liability when employees exercise them.

As a result, corporate executives can award themselves oodles of stock options without fear of denting their profit reports. Once the options are exercised, the company can treat the appreciation in the shares' value—the employees' profit—as an expense for tax purposes. At Enron, stock option deductions alone turned what would have been a federal income tax bill of $112 million in 2000 into a $278 million refund. Mr. Greenspan said last week that Federal Reserve Board research found that the average earnings growth rate of the S&P 500 companies between 1995 and 2000 would have been reduced by nearly a quarter if the companies had reported their stock options as expenses on financial statements.

A decade ago, the accounting industry proposed a sensible rule to make companies report options as expenses, but it was beaten back by fierce corporate lobbying. Now Senators John McCain and Carl Levin have proposed a bill that would end the double standard, disallowing the tax deduction for any company that fails to report options as an expense.

They are backed in that effort by investors like Warren Buffett and big institutions like pension plans, which are rightly incensed by abusive executive compensation schemes. They are tired of unseemly practices like the repricing of options to ensure that executives still get windfalls if the stock price falls. Making interest-free loans for executives to acquire stock (often forgiven if the bet does not pay off) is another dubious compensation practice.

We have no quarrel with the business lobby's claim that stock options have helped fuel America's entrepreneurship, particularly in Silicon Valley. But in the interest of truthful accounting and greater financial integrity options should be treated as what they are: a worthy form of compensation that companies must report as an expense.

Congress must end the dot-com-era notion that options equal free money. That would be a first step toward reassuring investors that top executives cannot treat publicly traded companies as Ponzi schemes created for their own enrichment.

[From Newsweek, May 20, 2002]
SHOW ME THE MONEY (ALL OF IT)
(By Allan Sloan)

Watching corporate America these days is like watching drunks at a revival meeting.

They're vowing to sin no more, to tell shareholders the straight truth instead of playing accounting games, to embrace "transparency" so outsiders can see what's going on. But talk is cheap. When it comes to action on two key reforms—accounting for stock options, and showing the value of chief executives' compensation packages—corporations are as opaque as ever.

The accounting first. As things stand now, options are a free lunch for companies—employees place a high value on them, but companies can issue as many as they want without hurting corporate profits. That's because companies don't have to count options value as an expense. With reform in the air because of Enron, old-math types like Warren Buffett and Alan Greenspan are pushing to change accounting rules to force companies to count the value of stock options as an expense in their profit-and-loss statements. Accounting rule makers proposed this a decade ago, but backed down under political pressure generated by corporations, especially in options-happy Silicon Valley. Then there's a second, little-known aspect of the options-accounting debate. If companies have to count the value of options as an expense, they would come under huge pressure to report their value as compensation to the CEO, and to members of the board. Under current rules, a company has to show shareholders a table that includes how much it gave the CEO in salary, bonus, long-term compensation and other benefits. But the table has to show only the number of options granted to the CEO, not their economic value. To find that, you have to hunt on other pages—and you may not find it at all if the company opts to report a different way. "The original idea was to have the value of options in the table, not the number of options," says Graef Crystal, a compensation expert who worked on the disclosure rules. But, he says, the SEC backed down after companies objected.

It's easy to see why companies would have been upset at having to count options as compensation. In most pay filings I see these days, the economic value of CEO and directors' options exceeds their cash payments. So counting options would more than double the typical package.

To see how this works, let's look at Dell Computer and Knight Ridder, two companies I just happen to have looked at recently. Dell's most recent statement shows that Michael Dell, its billionaire owner and founder, earned $2.6 million in salary and bonus. Not starvation wages, but not much for a big-time CEO. On a different page, you see that he got options the company valued at $26 million. That's major mooah. Dell directors were paid a $40,000 annual retainer fee, but also got options on $850,000 worth of Stock. The option's economic value: around $300,000. Note that I'm not accusing Dell of hiding anything—it's following the rules.

Dell shows why options have economic value when they're granted, even if the stock subsequently falls. The directors got their options when Dell stock was about $52, double today's price. By getting options on $850,000 of stock rather than buying 16,298 shares, directors avoided losing money—and didn't have to tie up $850,000. Meanwhile, they had the same upside as regular investors who risked $850,000. The company says its compensation packages are skewed toward options, so that employees and directors don't make out unless regular stockholders do.

Now to Knight Ridder, which has been on a cost-cutting kick for years. Last year chairman Tony Ridder got $935,720 in salary and no bonus. He also got options on 150,000 shares. Knight Ridder values the options at about $1.6 million, but by most rules of thumb, they were worth twice that much. Knight Ridder directors got a $40,000 annual fee—and 4,000 options. The options were worth about $42,500 by Knight Ridder's math, about $85,000 by conventional math. Knight Ridder says its figures are lower because it assumes its options are exercised much quicker than other analysts assume.

I'm all in favor of employees becoming millionaires via options—I'm an employee, after all—but I'm also in favor of companies providing profit-and-loss statements that show the real profit and loss. Ignoring options' costs and low-balling CEO pay packages are simply outrageous. When companies start expensing options and disclosing true CEO and director compensation numbers, I'll believe they've seen the light. Until then, I'll assume that they're still on the bottle.

ACCOUNTING FOR OPTIONS

(By Joseph E. Stiglitz)

Déjà vu. The post-Enron imbroglío over stock options is a reminder that history—if forgotten—does indeed repeat itself. Eight years ago, while serving on President Clinton's Council of Economic Advisers, I was involved in a heated debate over information disclosure. The Financial Accounting Standards Board had proposed a new standard that would require firms to account for the value of executive options in their balance sheets and income statements.

When FASB made its proposal for what would have clearly been an improvement in accounting practices, Silicon Valley and Wall Street were united in their opposition. The arguments put forward then are the same as those put forward today, and they are as specious and self-serving now as they were eight years ago.

OUTRAGEOUS

The most outrageous argument—but the one that had the greatest impact—was that disclosing the information would adversely affect share prices. That is, if people only knew how much their equity claims on the firm could be diluted by options, they would pay less for their shares! True, and that is precisely why the disclosure is so important. Markets can only allocate resources efficiently when prices accurately reflect underlying values, and that requires as good information as possible. If markets overestimate the value of a particular set of ventures, resources will mistakenly flow in that direction. This is partly what caused the dot-com and telecom bubbles. Irrational exuberance played its part, but so too did bad accounting—i.e., distorted information.

To be sure, information will never be perfect and asymmetries of information are pervasive. But one of the key insights of the modern theory of information is that participants do not always have an incentive to disclose fully and accurately all the relevant information, and so it is important to have standards.

This is where the second specious argument enters: Critics of FASB's proposal claimed that it is impossible to value options accurately, and accordingly, it would be misleading to include the options within the standard accounting frameworks. To better understand the falsity of this argument, let's take a closer look at how stock options really work.

The basic economics of stock options are simple. Issuing stock options does not create resources out of thin air. Executives like stock options because they have value. But the value however measured, comes at the expense of other shareholders. The right of managers to buy shares is the right to dilute the ownership claims of existing shareholders. When markets work well—when information is good—the market will value today the issuance of a right to dilute, even when that dilution may never occur, and if it does occur, would happen sometime in the future.

The existing owners of the firm will participate less in the upside potential of the market than they would have in the absence of the options. In principle, they can calculate the circumstances when the executives are likely to exercise their options, and therefore can calculate the diminution in their potential gains from owning shares in the company. That is why when this information is disclosed in ways that can easily be understood by investors, it will lead to a fall in the company's share price.

Making such calculations, however, is not easy or costless. In principle, each shareholder could go through each of the items in the firm's accounts to construct his own "estimates" but that would be a foolish waste of resources, and the transaction costs would put a major damper on capital markets and the market economy. That is why we have accounting standards. Such information is like a public good: Better standards—more transparency—lead to better resource allocation and better functioning markets; and if participants have more confidence in markets, they will be more willing to entrust their money to markets.

Which brings us back to the argument that it is "impossible" to value options. Companies do, of course, have ways of calculating the value of options and do it themselves all the time for their own internal planning purposes.

AS for the question of whether an estimate based on a publicly-disclosed formula would be misleading, because it is only an estimate, that is true of many line items that are central to our accounting frameworks, such as depreciation. Calculations about the value of options would be just as, or even more, accurate than standard depreciation estimates are of the market value of the declines in asset values that come with use and obsolescence—something which is a line item on every accounting framework in corporate America and most of the world. Of this much we can be sure: zero, the implied valuation used by companies now when describing the cost of options in their balance sheets and income statements, is a vast underestimation.

Those who argue against including options within the standard accounting frameworks try to have it both ways: They believe that market participants are smart enough to read through dozens of footnotes to figure out the implications of options for the value of their shares, but so dumb that they would be misled by the more accurate numbers that would be provided under the reform proposals, and unable to redo the calculations themselves.

TRANSPARENCY

There is one more reason for the U.S. to be resolute in improving our accounting standards by including better accounting for options. During the East Asia crisis the U.S. preached the virtues of transparency but then refused to do anything about regulating the murky world of offshore banking. America also preached the virtues of our accounting standards only to find that the world was laughing at Enron and Arthur Andersen. Tightening our rules on accounting of options would signal that the U.S. is serious about openness, serious about improving its accounting standards—despite the special interests opposed to changes—and willing to learn from its mistakes.

Many of the same forces that allied themselves in the 1990s against changes in accounting for options are now trying to suppress this attempt to make our market economy work better. In the earlier episode, the National Economic Council, the U.S. Treasury, and the Department of Commerce intervened in what was supposed to be an independent accounting board, and put pressure on FASB to rescind its proposed regulations. They won, and the country lost. Today, there is a risk once again of political intervention. At least this time, the voices of responsible economic leadership, such as Alan Greenspan, are speaking out. I only hope that this time they will succeed.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the Republican staff of the Joint Economic Committee put out a report called, "Understanding the Stock Option Debate."

They have gone through a lengthy analysis dated July 9, 2002, in which they conclude the following:

Existing accounting principles provide an unambiguous answer. Stock option awards should indeed be treated as a cost in financial statements.

It is quite clear to me that two things are true. No. 1, that how we treat stock options is an essential part of the post-Enron reform effort. That is No. 1. No. 2, it seems clear to me that there is at least a likelihood that a majority of this body, if allowed to vote on this amendment, will vote to refer this matter to an independent accounting standards board which has its own source of revenue, free from the kind of pressure which it was under in 1994 and 1995, to reach an appropriate conclusion.

Do I believe that conclusion will be the same as they reached in 1994? I do. It is very clear to me they would reach such a conclusion and should reach such a conclusion. But as our colleagues have pointed out, that is up to the board under this amendment. We would not be adopting a standard.

In all honesty, I expect they would continue on the same course they were on 8 years ago when they were violently thrown off course by people who had control over the purse strings of the organization. I would expect that would happen. But under this amendment, it is their call, not ours.

I support the McCain amendment because I believe, as I believed then, that the accounting standards board wanted to expense options and that we, in executive pressure, interfered with that decision on their part. That is why I believe Senator MCCAIN's amendment is also appropriate. But we cannot even get a vote on that amendment. Last week, we were not able to bring that amendment to a vote.

But this amendment is different. This amendment says to the independent board: review this issue. Make an appropriate decision within a year.

For the life of me I not only do not see how folks—regardless of the side of this particular issue that they are on—could vote against such an amendment when it does not tell them what to do but just asks them to review it and decide within a year as to what the appropriate accounting method is. I do not understand why, in the middle of a debate on the reforms which are essential to restore public confidence after the Enron fiasco, this Senate should not be allowed to vote on this issue on this bill.

When the majority leader announced that one way or another we will get to a vote on this amendment, I was glad to hear that. I didn't know he was going to say that, but I certainly was glad he said that. But it seems to me that adds a reason we ought to vote for this amendment on this bill.

This is the right place. Surely it is the right time. There has perhaps never been a more critical moment in our economic history in the last few decades than we are facing right now, to help us restore public confidence. It will be an additional contribution to that restoration of public confidence if we take this action. If we say yes, 8 years ago we did intervene, but now we don't want to tell the accounting standards board that they should not expense options. That was 8 years ago. What we are telling them now is: Do the right thing.

We know what they tried to do 8 years ago. It is laid out in the record by them. They wanted to do what they believed was the right thing. If they had done so, they would have been put out of business.

Now we have an opportunity, it seems to me, to do the right thing ourselves, which is to tell the board that has the responsibility to adopt accounting standards, to adopt what they believe is the appropriate standard. That is the right thing to do.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question on my time?

Mr. LEVIN. I will be happy to.

Mr. REID. Is the Senator aware that the stock market, the Dow as of now is down 338 points as of today?

Mr. LEVIN. I was not aware of that. But it surely adds an additional urgency, if we need additional urgency, for why we should do everything in our power to restore public confidence in the financial systems in this country.

I left off one of my cosponsors before. Senator BIDEN is a cosponsor of the amendment, which is at the desk.

I will ask unanimous consent we be able to vote on that at a later moment. I wonder if I could ask the Chair how much time I have remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVIN. I understand Senator MCCAIN would like to speak at this time. I see the Republican manager on the floor, so I do not know if this fits his particular timetable or not.

I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to yield to Senator MCCAIN on his—

Mr. REID. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, at this time I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the pending second-degree amendment, No. 4286, and call up for consideration my amendment 4283, on stock options, which is a second-degree amendment to the Edwards amendment No. 4187.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me say there is something on which I agree with the majority leader. That is, at some point we are going to make a judgment on this issue. But we are currently in a situation where we have 97 first-degree amendments that have been filed. We have 24 second-degree amendments. We have 3 different approaches to this issue.

Senator MCCAIN wants to make a decision and set a policy.

Senator LEVIN, as I read it, wants a fair trial and then a hanging.

And Senator ENZI and others would simply like to have a fair trial.

What is the right outcome? I think that is subject to debate. That is why I think we ought to have the debate. The idea that when we have three different approaches, we are going to decide that one of them is going to be debated on, voted on, but not all three of them is something we should not expect to happen.

I do not support Senator MCCAIN's amendment, but he has every right, it seems to me, to have it considered. And I am certainly willing to vote on it. There may be people who do not want to vote on this issue, but I am not one of them. So I certainly do object. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the only way we are going to get to debate and votes is if we allow the pending amendments which are the first- and second-degree amendments to be voted on so we can move to other amendments without having one gatekeeper denying opportunity for all the others on this floor to offer amendments and have them voted on. That is not the intention of cloture and postcloture.

I do not believe this process has been used in this way before, where, postcloture, germane amendments are supposed to be taken up and voted on, where first- and second-degree amendments have not been disposed of so they can be used, not with the consent of their sponsors, but they are used by others to block consideration of the amendments.

The Senator from Texas says he would like to have a debate and vote. There is one way to do it. Let's dispose of the second-degree amendment, take up the Carnahan amendment and vote on it, take up the Edwards amendment and vote on it.

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEVIN. I will be happy to yield on the Senator's time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DORGAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan is claiming his 1 hour. I understand he has been yielding back and forth. I assume we could, under these circumstances, have one Senator run the entire 30 hours, as long as they keep yielding to other Senators.

There are others of us, of course, who want to be heard and who want to offer amendments.

Mr. GRAMM. I think that is fair. I withdraw my request.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I think if we want to deal with this issue today, probably the way to deal with it is to have a unanimous consent agreement and have a vote on all three amendments—have a vote on Senator MCCAIN's amendment, have a vote on the Levin amendment, have a vote on Senator ENZI's amendment so that we would have the full range of choices. But to suggest that nothing is standing in the way except a few obstacles to everybody having their will is to neglect the fact that 97 amendments have been filed as first-degree amendments and 24 second-degree amendments.

So, therefore, by definition, I assume if I suggest and ask unanimous consent that each and every amendment be voted on, someone would object since our leadership has plans for this week and next week. I think it might be possible if we want to deal with this issue today to have a unanimous consent agreement where Senator MCCAIN would get a vote on his amendment, where the Senator from Michigan would get a vote on his amendment, and where Senator ENZI would get a vote on his amendment. Then we would have a range of choices.

I would be amenable to such an agreement if the Senator wanted to shop that around on his side of the aisle. We could do a hotline and see if it would fly. But in the absence of some agreement where the other two gradations on this spectrum of opinion would have their day to debate this amendment and have it voted on, I don't think we are going to be able to do that. It might very well be that we need a separate bill to deal with this issue. If a Senator were to offer this amendment in earnest, I would want an opportunity to amend it. I think having FASB look at this issue—which they are certainly going to do after this bill is agreed to because this is going to be a self-funded agency, and they are going to have greater independence—I think having them look at it is something that we ought to do. But I think we shouldn't pretend to ourselves that the Levin amendment is a neutral amendment.

Asking them to look at it when it mandates by law after having looked at it that within 12 months they adopt in appropriate generally accepted accounting principles for the treatment of employee stock options—there is nothing neutral about that; in other words, study it and within a year adopt a rule.

As I understand it, Senator ENZI and others would have the SEC do a study and make a recommendation based on their study.

If this amendment were going to be dealt with in isolation, I would want an opportunity to at least leave it to FASB as to what they determine rather than mandating that they ought to issue a new accounting principle. It may be that they would determine not to do that.

Let me reiterate that I don't have any concern about voting on this issue. Maybe I should reserve my time. I want to speak on this at some point. We have several Members here who are going to speak. I have to be here for the whole time.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. REID. I don't think this is necessary. But so there is no question about it, I ask unanimous consent that the time Senator DASCHLE used be counted against the 30 hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. Reserving the right to object, I did not hear.

Mr. REID. I wanted Senator DASCHLE's time to be counted against the 30 hours.

Mr. GRAMM. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, we are in a postcloture period of some 30 hours. I understand we will complete that at 6 o'clock or so this afternoon.

What is happening here is really an outrage, from my standpoint. We are in postcloture. I have a germane amendment. I have been here every single day since this bill came to the floor of the Senate prepared and ready to offer my amendment. Now, postcloture, I have a germane amendment. And the only way, apparently, that I can offer my amendment is if the Senator from Texas is willing to allow me to offer it. That is not the way the Senate should work.

I want to briefly describe my amendment.

My amendment requires the disgorgement of profits, bonuses, incentives and so on that the CEOs of corporations receive 12 months prior to bankruptcy.

That is not in the bill at the present time. It ought to be in the bill.

The bill contains a disgorgement provision requiring the return of incentives and bonus payments received prior to a restatement of earnings. I support that being in the bill, but there is nothing about the requirement to divest all those bonuses and incentive payments 12 months prior to bankruptcy. That ought to be in this bill.

Let me describe some of the problems that we are dealing with. We have been holding some hearings over in the Commerce Committee on the subject of Enron. Here is what some Enron officers got before Enron went bankrupt:

Kenneth Lay, $101 million; Ken Rice, $72.7 million; Jeffrey Skilling, $66.9 million; Stan Horton, $45 million; Andy Fastow, $30.4 million.

They did pretty well at the top. Of course, they have already filed bankruptcy with their corporation.

Should some of this be given back?

I have a constituent in North Dakota who wrote to me and said: I worked for Enron for a good many years. I built up a retirement fund of $330,000. It is now worth $1,700. That was my family's retirement fund. What am I to do? I have lost it all.

But not everybody lost it all with respect to Enron. Those close to the top made a fortune, and the folks at the bottom lost their shirts. Most of the investors and employees lost everything.

The question I ask with my amendment is, Should we include a provision in this bill that requires the give-back of this unwarranted compensation in the form of bonuses, incentives, and various things 12 months prior to bankruptcy? The answer is, of course, we should require it. We ought not to be debating this. This amendment ought to be accepted.

Let me describe some of the other folks who believe this ought to be done.

Mr. Richard Breeden, former SEC Chairman from 1989–1993 says:

We have long required officers and directors to disgorge "short-swing" profits for purchases and sales within a six-month period . . . we should consider disgorgement to the company of any net proceeds of stock sales or option exercises within six-months or a year prior to bankruptcy filing.

That is Mr. Breeden, former SEC Chairman.

Henry Paulson, CEO, Goldman Sachs, who worked in the Nixon administration, said:

The business community has been given a black eye by the activities of and behavior of some CEOs and other notable insiders who sold large numbers of shares just before dramatic declines in their companies' share prices . . . in the case of CEOs and other inside directors, we should raise the bar and mandate a one year "claw-back" in the case of bankruptcy, regardless of the reason.

He is right. This bill doesn't require it. There is no "claw-back" in this bill. There ought to be 1 year prior to bankruptcy.

I don't mean to diminish the importance of other issues that we have just discussed. The other issues are very important. On the issue of how stock options are treated, in 1994, I was one of nine Senators who voted against the proposal back then that would handcuff FASB. I come to that issue with fairly clean hands.

Let me say that while that issue is important, I have been here every single day this bill has been on the floor to offer this simple amendment on disgorgement in the face of bankruptcies. If there are people in corporations at the top of those companies who make $100 million or $70 million or $50 million, and then the company files for bankruptcy, do you not believe that some of that ought to be required to be given back? The folks at the bottom lost everything they had. They lost their life savings. They lost everything, and the folks at the top got rich. Shouldn't there be a requirement in this bill to disgorge those profits? Does anybody think that is unreasonable?

The Senator from Texas left the Chamber as I was beginning to speak. I was hoping I might get his attention. But as I understand where we are, we have a first- and a second-degree amendment. The first-degree amendment is the Edwards amendment. It is followed by a second-degree amendment, which is the Carnahan amendment.

In order for anyone to offer an amendment postcloture today, we must ask consent to set aside these amendments so we can offer our amendment. My understanding is, if someone here does not agree with that, then he can prevent that from happening. My understanding is that that is precisely what would happen.

So the result is, for the next 5 hours, we will have gatekeepers who require us to say: Captain, may I? May I offer an amendment? And they will say: No, you may not. We will not allow the setting aside of the pending amendments.

So we will limp along to the end of the 30 hours not being able to offer germane amendments to this bill. It is outrageous, simply an outrageous process that puts us here. I think there will be a good number of Members of the Senate who, in the future, will consider this and find ways to avoid our being put in this position again.

But what I would like to do is have a debate about this amendment at some point. And perhaps there are people in the Senate who want to stand up and say: Do you know what I think? I think if somebody takes home $50 or $80 million 6 months before bankruptcy, in the form of incentive payments and bonuses, they ought to be able to keep it, even if they drove this company right straight into the ground.

Is there one person who will stand up in the Senate today to support that? Does one person want to support that position? Well, we will see.

In the year before the Enron Corporation filed for bankruptcy, Kenneth Lay, the chairman of that company, and 140 other company officials received $310 million in salaries, bonuses, long-term incentives, loan advances, and other payments.

Does anybody here want to stand up and say: "That makes a lot of sense."? Anybody? Does anybody agree they should keep all that money? Do we hear nothing because they don't have the floor, or is it that nobody here believes the top officials of Enron should keep $310 million prior to filing for bankruptcy, where their employees lost their jobs, lost their life savings in their 401(k)s, their investors lost their money?

How about NTL, Incorporated? It is a Manhattan TV cable operator that filed for bankruptcy in May, just several months after it gave its chief executive officer $18.9 million. It made him one of the 30 highest paid CEOs in New York, putting him ahead of IBM's Louis Gerstner. That company had $14 billion in losses. And the CEO, Mr. Knapp, had a salary of $277,000, a bonus of $561,000, and stock options worth $18 million.

So does anybody here think he ought to keep all that money, just let the investors and the employees lose, but the people at the top keep it—just walk away on some gilded, golden carpet?

There are plenty of other examples, of course.

In recent months, we have heard all of these discussions about what has happened at the top in the boardroom by companies that wanted to find the line, and then go right to it, and then go across it, if they could. And there are accounting firms that were the enablers, who said: Yes, go ahead and do that. And the law firms were on the side, collecting big fees, saying: Yes, go ahead and do that—and the CEOs without moral conscience. The result is, they got rich and the little folks got broke.

My amendment is very simple. My amendment says that 1 year prior to bankruptcy, if you are getting the big bucks, big bonuses, big incentives, big stock options, and you want to take off with $50 or $100 million, and leave everybody else flat on their back, you cannot do it; you have to give it back. Very simple.

No one can misunderstand the amendment. This amendment is not strange or foreign to anyone. This bill will fall short of the mark, this bill will be incomplete, if we just proceed now to the final vote this afternoon and we are told: You cannot offer this amendment. We will not consider this amendment. And we do not want to require the give-back of millions of dollars by CEOs who receive that money prior to bankruptcy.

If that is the message this Senate sends from this bill this afternoon, this Senate has a lot of explaining to do.

We came to this debate with great promise. I have been to the floor a couple of times complimenting the Banking Committee, complimenting all on the Banking Committee who worked to put this bill together. But I said there were areas where it needed to be improved. This is one of them. This is the lightest load you will ever be asked to carry, in my judgment, to support an amendment of this type: The disgorgement of ill-earned profits by CEOs who led their corporations to bankruptcy but waltzed off with millions of dollars in their pockets and left everyone else—the bondholders, the stockholders, the employees—holding the bag.

This is not heavy lifting, to do this amendment. It is absurd if the Senate says: No, we will have nothing to do with that. Our position is, let's call this corporate responsibility. Let's change the accounting standards. But, by the way, let's let those people who essentially looted the corporation from the top—drove it into bankruptcy, and then left town—let's give them a big wave and say: So long, God bless you, and I hope your future is a good one with all those millions of dollars. If we do that, this Senate has a lot of explaining to do.

A good many corporate leaders, respected business officials in this country, have said this must be in a bill, this should be in a bill, there is no excuse for it not being in a bill.

So I have amendment No. 4214 at the desk. Let me ask unanimous consent that we set aside the Carnahan amendment, which is a second-degree amendment to the Edwards amendment, for the purpose of allowing consideration of amendment No. 4214. Let me make the first unanimous consent request first.

I ask unanimous consent that we set aside the Carnahan second-degree amendment for the purpose of considering my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WYDEN). Is there objection?

Mr. ENZI. On behalf of the ranking member of the Banking Committee, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, let me say, again, I think the process is an outrage—an outrage. We are in a situation today where we have 4 or 5 hours left postcloture, and we are told that no one in the Senate has a right to offer an amendment because someone has set himself up as a gatekeeper saying: I will object to setting aside the Carnahan second-degree amendment.

What kind of a way is that to legislate? Is someone afraid he will lose on this amendment, that he will lose the vote? Is that the purpose of the objection, that he is afraid we will have a vote, Senators will vote for my amendment, and therefore he will lose, so the words "I object" become a proxy for avoiding a loss on an important amendment?

How many votes do you think would exist in the Senate for saying: We want to enable CEOs, who ran the corporation into the ground and took $20 million out and then filed bankruptcy, to keep the money; we want them to keep the bonus, to keep the stock option, to keep the commission payment, to keep the money? How many votes do you think exist for that? Ten, maybe 12? Probably zero.

I think the Senator from Virginia is correct. Probably no one would stand up and support that proposition. So the question is why are we not allowing amendments to be voted on this afternoon? I would be happy to yield to someone to answer that. Is there someone who can answer that? Perhaps we could find out on whose behalf the Senator from Wyoming objected.

How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has 29 minutes remaining.

Mr. DORGAN. Parliamentary inquiry: Are we entitled, as a Senator, to 1 hour postcloture, those of us who are recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is correct.

Mr. DORGAN. Several of my colleagues wish to speak. I want them to be able to speak. I hope they will offer amendments.

I will guarantee them this: I will not be objecting to an amendment if they want to offer them. They have a right to offer an amendment today. They have a right to get a vote on the amendment. I will not object to that.

The parliamentary inquiry is, I have just made a unanimous consent request that has been objected to. Am I prevented from making an identical request following the presentation by the two Senators on the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is not prevented from making unanimous consent requests.

Mr. DORGAN. That will give me some time then to snoop around the cloakrooms and the corners and the nooks and crannies in the Capitol to find out who won't come to the floor and answer the question I have asked.

Why will we not get a vote on the simple proposition that those corporate leaders who run their corporation into bankruptcy and who take $10, $20, $30, or $50 million out of it just prior to bankruptcy—why will we not allow a vote on an amendment that would require them to disgorge themselves of that profit? Why should that ill-gotten gain not be used to help the employees, help the investors, help others recover, who lost everything? Why should one group in this circumstance walk off into the sunset with a pocketful of gold, leaving everyone in their wake, employees, investors, and others who lost everything they had?

Perhaps in the next hour or so, I will find someone in the Chamber or in the anterooms who will say: I am the one who decided you should not get a vote because I believe that those CEOs ought to be able to get away with that money; that is the American way.

My guess is the Senator from Virginia was right when he shook his head. I think this amendment passes 100 to nothing or very close to that, and I hope he and others will help me get it to a vote before 6 o'clock.

Obviously I am a little irritated about the process. It stinks. That is not a genteel way to say that. But postcloture, if we have germane amendments, we should be able to be here to offer those amendments. That is not now the case.

I will be here the next couple of hours trying to see if we can find a way to cause enough trouble in as short a time as possible to allow these amendments to be offered.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would like to use a portion of my 1 hour of time to say I agree with the purpose and the intent of the Dorgan amendment. I understand Senator GRASSLEY of Iowa has a similar amendment that would disgorge or claw back into some ill-gotten gains of executives for the benefit of creditors and victims of their malfeasance or illegal acts.

I wish to speak not on process. Although, process seems to drive a lot of what happens in this body.

I would like to talk to my colleagues and the American people about the merits of certain ideas or the demerits of certain ideas that have been raised. There have been several measures dealing with the issue of stock options.

Senator MCCAIN's measure was a direct hit. I don't like it, but it was an accountable approach in getting rid of or killing stock options. We had Senator LEVIN's amendment, with Senator MCCAIN, which was more of an indirect or ricochet killing of stock options by granting that study to FASB, when everyone knows what FASB's position is.

There is another option regarding stock options which I would like to discuss as the approach that ought to be taken. The majority leader, Senator DASCHLE, mentioned that we may have a vote on it today. We may have a vote on it tomorrow, but some day we will have a vote. There ought to be a full and fair discussion of the approach we ought to take as well as what the potential adverse impacts could be if either the study by FASB or the direct killing of stock options, as far as requiring the expensing of them, were to occur.

The more wise and prudent approach is one that was chiefly sponsored by my good friend Senator ENZI of Wyoming, along with Senators LIEBERMAN, BOXER, myself, and others who joined with us, Senators MURRAY, CANTWELL, BENNETT, WYDEN, LOTT, BURNS, FRIST, CRAIG and ENSIGN. Our amendment is a more comprehensive, reasonable alternative that has the Securities and Exchange Commission review and make regulatory or legislative recommendations to Congress.

Clearly, in today's climate, with the stock market dropping again today, with the scandals from Global Crossing, Enron, the crisis at WorldCom, it is axiomatic that there is a pressing need for accounting reform to address the corporate abuses and accounting firm malfeasance. The bill, as it is presented, is a very good bill. I think it addresses the two key areas that need to be addressed.

It is focused, number one, on transparency. That means that people can readily and easily discern the true financial condition of a company in which they may want to invest.

Secondly, you need deterrence, stiffer criminal and civil sanctions for illegal actions by corporate officers. There may be a few things added to make it better, but this bill essentially addresses those two focused goals. Indeed, enhanced transparency and improved corporate governance may restore some investor confidence and foster proper disclosure for investment decisions. More stringent penalties will provide a deterrence and substantial disincentive for the corporate wrongdoing that has led to this understandable firestorm of skepticism as a fallout from the scandalous, fraudulent misrepresentations by executives in many companies.

In our effort to reform, we must not enact measures that stifle innovation and endanger the American entrepreneurial spirit. Congress should not harm future opportunities for employees to own a part of their company for whom they work. Unfortunately, the Levin-McCain amendment does just that by unjustifiably upsetting the current tax treatment of stock options. It is unnecessary and unwise to change these particular accounting policies.

It is virtually impossible to accurately determine the worth or value of a stock option.

Now, how are you going to predict the future performance of a company? How are you going to predict the future share value of a company, especially with the vicissitudes of the stock market these days? For example, somebody is granted a stock option by a company—a new company—and the stock is trading, after an IPO, at $5 a share. The option to this employee is to be able to purchase 1,000 shares of that company at $10 a share.

Now, nobody is going to exercise a stock option until the share value reaches the strike price, or $10, and it may never get to $10. It may take 5 years before that share value gets above $10 a share, where somebody would exercise the option. So it is very difficult to determine what is the actual value of that stock option when it is granted.

The amendment Mr. LEVIN has proposed will affect current law. Currently employers are not required to expense stock option grants on their financial statements. But they are permitted to deduct the employees' gains at exercise—that is, down the road—as a compensation expense.

Now, this makes good sense. After all, a stock option grant does not require a cash outlay like other expenses such as wages.

Moreover, there is no transparency problem with failing to expense stock option grants because they are disclosed on the company's financial statement. If somebody says there ought to be better disclosure, or it should be in bolder print, or it should be highlighted more and the disclosure needs to be more clear, that is fine. But I don't think it is necessary, in the midst of better disclosure and transparency, to kill this otherwise largely salutary idea and beneficial idea of stock options. Nonetheless, the amendments by Senators MCCAIN and LEVIN mandate that any company taking a deduction must report the stock option as an expense on their income statement, profit and loss statement, and the deduction may not exceed the reported expense.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. LEVIN. Is the Senator aware that the Levin-McCain amendment he is referring to is not the amendment being offered at this time? There is another amendment, and they are totally different matters involving the taxation issue. This is not a taxation amendment at all. Hopefully, it will come before the Senate today.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Michigan, I understand his amendment offered today was one to have FASB study the issue. Senator MCCAIN's amendment was one to require the expensing of stock options. I realize they are two different matters.

Mr. LEVIN. And that neither one addresses tax issues. That is a totally separate bill, not in either the McCain-Levin or the Levin-McCain accounting standard.

Mr. ALLEN. I say to the Senator that in the event you, in effect, require the expenses of stock options, that does affect the tax treatment and the desirability of stock options.

Mr. LEVIN. Thank you.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator from Michigan.

Now, the problematic aspect of these ideas is that, if you take away the current method of accounting and taxation of stock options, a company can only take a deduction up to the amount they expense at the time of the grant. Since the expense would be taken at the time of the grant, the tax deduction would be taken at the time of the exercise. If the value was too low at the time of the grant, then you are not going to get the full extent of your deduction. So the point is that if we are not careful here, with all these approaches of changing the tax treatment, changing the expensing rules, or having it be done by FASB, the result is a convoluted tax increase on companies.

Now, what will happen if these tax increases or this inability to actually determine the value of the stock option occurs, which may or may not be exercised at some unknown future date, all of this consternation, inaccuracy, unpredictability—the potential of actually a tax increase, in effect—many companies will find this tax and accounting scheme is so onerous they will discontinue offering options to all but maybe a few senior executives who can bargain for them.

I think the idea of doing away with stock options, or making them less desirable, is a substantial detrimental impact on not only companies but many, particularly those companies in the high-tech sector and small startups. New businesses have powered our economy in the last decade and, hopefully, they will do so in the future. Small companies motivate employees with stock options. That is the way they keep employees. Especially the startups who will get folks to serve on the board and pay them for that service in stock options.

I think it is a good idea for people to care about a company doing well in the future; not only looking for a paycheck, but also caring about how well a company will do.

Indeed, in the last 10 years, the number of workers who received stock options has grown dramatically—from about 1 million in 1992 to 10 million today. First, as I said, the benefits of stock options has enabled companies to recruit and keep quality workers. Absent stock options, many smaller companies lack the capital. They don't have the money to attract top-notch talent. Investors will be less likely to invest in companies that retain stock option plans because the company's earnings will be artificially deflated by this phantom expense.

Finally, and perhaps most important, stock options enhance productivity by providing employees with a greater stake in their company's performance.

Mr. President, these options are particularly important to rank and file employees who receive relatively modest salaries and wages. There is one company that has a pretty good presence in Virginia—Electronic Arts—which recently told me that stock options enabled many of its employees to purchase their first homes, to send their children to college, or to provide for their aging parents. Thus, the desirability of stock options as incentives is readily apparent, and we should not adopt any measure that would effectively eliminate their use as a form of employee compensation.

That is not to say that I oppose all stock option reform. In fact, I fully support President Bush's proposal that requires shareholder approval for stock option plans. I think the idea of equitable treatment in the exercise of options by employees or executives is well founded. But I am joining with Senators LIEBERMAN, BOXER, ENZI, and others in offering the amendment that directs the Securities and Exchange Commission to conduct a comprehensive study and to make recommendations regarding the accounting treatment of stock options, which is the way to go.

We may introduce this proposal as a free-standing bill. Maybe we will not vote on it today but here is the approach that we ought to take. The SEC will conduct an analysis and make regulatory and legislative recommendations on the treatment of stock options in which the Commission shall analyze the following: No. 1, the accounting treatment for employees' stock options, including the accuracy of available stock option pricing models; No. 2, the adequacy of current disclosure requirements to investors and shareholders on stock options; No. 3, the adequacy of corporate governance requirements, including shareholder approval of stock option plans; No. 4, any need for new stock holding period requirements for senior executives; No. 5, the benefit and detriment of any new option expenses rules on, A, the productivity and performance of large, medium, and small companies and startup enterprises and, B, the recruitment and retention of skilled workers.

The Commission shall submit its regulatory and legislative recommendations to Congress and supporting analyses of those matters as far as any changes indicated in the treatment of stock options within 180 days.

In my view, this is the reasonable alternative we ought to be taking. I urge my colleagues to support this approach rather than adopting, whether it is today or in the future, Senator MCCAIN's measure that he introduced last week or Senator LEVIN's study today. I think either of those would be harmful and damaging to both American industry and to working men and women.

The Senator from Michigan mentioned evidence, or observations, of others as to the impact of his recommendations and his amendment. I think it is very good for us to look at what people who will be affected say about the measures that are passed in the Senate. I think it is important that we be accountable to those who are affected and we should listen to them.

I have some other observations, as far as the issue of stock options is concerned. This first I will share is the views of the Information Technology Industry Council. They expressed their support for the potential alternative amendment cosponsored by Senators LIEBERMAN, ENZI, BOXER, and ALLEN that would direct the Securities and Exchange Commission to examine the accounting treatment of stock options and make recommendations.

The Information Technology Industry Council stated that, in particular, those entrepreneurial high-tech companies that are willing to take the risk in the pursuit of technological innovation have offered stock options as an incentive to attract and retain employees.

Unfortunately, the expensing of options would end the practice of providing most employees with stock options. The result would be a reversal of the trends toward employee ownership and a significant reduction in financial opportunities for thousands of workers.

Let me share another observation, and this comes from the Telecommunications Industry Association, and I read, in part:

This sense of personal ownership referring to stock options helps develop the innovative entrepreneurial spirit that has characterized the high tech industry over the last decade. Should the rules for options suddenly change and be treated as a cash expense, the number of employees that receive the benefit would be drastically reduced, most likely leaving only members of the top management as recipients.

They conclude with this comment:

Adoption of this type of measure is a knee jerk reaction to situations such as occurred with Enron, which is not what we need. It is not in the best long-term interest of our country.

Another observation from a large group of trade associations: American Electronic Association, Bankers Association, Alabama Information Technology Association, the Arizona Software and Internet Association, Biotechnology Industry Organization, Business Software Alliance, Information Technology Association of America, National Association of Manufacturers, the Retail Federation, Semiconductor Equipment and Materials International, as well as the Semiconductor Industry Association, Software and Information Industry Association, Software Finance and Tax Executives

Council, the Tax Council, the Technology Network, and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce wrote me and said that the stock options tax bill—not the Levin amendment but, rather, the tax treatment changes—that legislation would, if enacted, discourage broad-based rank and file access to stock options. It would lead to investor confusion, less accurate financial statements, and raise taxes on companies issuing stock options.

Now we have heard also some scholarly points of view. It is nice to hear what some of these esteemed individuals may say from time to time on the issue of stock options. Others in the body have quoted from Warren Buffett, a person for whom we all have a great deal of respect. But in another scholarly work from two gentlemen, economics professors at Princeton University and New York University, Dr. Malkiel, professor of economics at Princeton, and Dr. Baumol, professor of economics at New York University, say this:

Warren Buffett and other critics suggest that the income statement should reflect an expense to the firm measured by the cash equivalent value of options. There are two problems with these views. First, if we were to consider the expense of options to be equivalent to that of cash wages, there is no way to measure that cost, the value of options at the time they are issued, with any reasonable precision. The Nobel Prize winning Black-Scholes model does an excellent job of predicting the prices at which short-term options trade in the market, but the Black-Scholes formula does not provide reliable estimates for longer term options such as those lasting 6 months to one year, and market prices often differ substantially from predicted values. Because employee stock options have durations of 5 to 10 years, are complicated by not investing immediately, are contingent on continuing employment and subject to various restrictions, it is virtually impossible to put a precise estimate on the options value. Moreover, employees' options cannot be sold, violating one of the key Black-Scholes assumptions.

They conclude by saying that by targeting all stock options rather than stock option abuses, politicians are risking destruction of equity compensation instruments that have been engines of innovation and entrepreneurship.

Finally, an observation today from the Software Finance and Tax Executives Council. They call themselves by the acronym SoFTEC.

SoFTEC believes that Senator LEVIN's amendment essentially dictates a pre-determined result without requiring the FASB to analyze other relevant issues surrounding stock options. Rather than mandate FASB to achieve a predetermined result, SoFTEC believes that the SEC currently has the ability and authority to properly study all of the issues surrounding stock options and make recommendations based upon not only the technical accounting issue but the public policy implications as well.

So I will conclude my time by requesting of my colleagues, whether we vote on it today, this afternoon, this evening, or in the future, that we act responsibly. It is fine to be worrying about the details of procedure and accounting minutia, but it is important also to understand the impact of this on our free enterprise system. While we are doing a lot of good as far as greater scrutiny, greater transparency, and greater punishment for wrongdoers are concerned, let us make sure we do no harm because the way that this stock market is going to change is with more investment, more risk taking, more jobs being created, and that entrepreneurial spirit that rewards people who take risks, who are creative, who are innovative. That is what is going to improve our economy, our competitiveness as a country, as well as the stock market eventually.

The point is we do not need to come up with new, convoluted ways to increase taxes on companies that we want to invest in and improve our country, and I hope we will support the free enterprise system and, in doing so, look at reasonable, logical, wise, and fully comprehended decision-making as we move forward in these very uncharted waters of making major changes in stock options.

The bill as it stands now is an outstanding bill. There can be improvements made to it, such as the amendments of Senator GRASSLEY and Senator DORGAN, but let us not have the perfect be the enemy of the very good, and let us make sure we do no harm. By fouling up stock options for many men and women working in this country, it would certainly do a great deal of harm.

I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I think the Senator from Delaware was first to seek recognition.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I say to my friend from Iowa if he has a time constraint, I will yield to him. Just so he knows, I was in the Chamber before he came. I took a phone call and came back. But if the Senator has a time constraint, I have 10 to 12 minutes, but I will be happy to yield.

Mr. GRASSLEY. If I only have to listen to a 10- or 12-minute speech, I will be glad to wait.

Mr. BIDEN. I hope the Senator listens very closely. He may learn something. I know I learn when I listen, and I do not always listen enough.

Mr. President, let me begin where the Senator from Virginia ended, and that is that I think the bill fashioned by Senator SARBANES and this committee does exactly what the Senator from Virginia was suggesting. That would be balanced; we do not do more harm than good.

If you look at other times—and I have been a Senator for a while—we faced crises such as this, we have had occasion to overreact. We have found sometimes that the cure is worse than the disease. I note we probably did that in my early days here with Senate campaign financing and other issues.

There is a real balance that the Senator from Maryland has struck. I compliment the Senator. I cannot think of any Senator better positioned to be chief spokesman for the Senate and Congress on this issue, not only for the American people but all our allies and the investors worldwide.

The dollar now has weakened drastically. In my capacity as chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, I have had occasion to meet with leading government officials from European countries and from Asia, asking me, as if I were some kind of broker: Can we continue to invest in your market? Is it real? What is going on? How much more is coming?

We are fortunate to have the steady and always cautious voice of the Senator from Maryland, whose background academically as well as politically suits him well, and in this moment, as probably no one else in this place is better prepared, to take on this issue. I compliment the Senator and his quiet, reasoned voice, and his profound understanding of the problem we face as well as his determination to move ahead and try to restore confidence. It is a welcome circumstance at the moment. I compliment the Senator.

I realize from listening to him and knowing him as well as I do, as a point of personal privilege, some will discount my remarks because they know the Senator and I are close personal friends and I admire him as much as anyone I have served in all my years in the Senate. I understand there are other things that he may or may not have wanted to put in the bill to strengthen our position and the Nation's position and the economy, but he wants to make sure there is consensus and overwhelming support of whatever we do. This is not a circumstance of questioning motives and wondering whether it is more for show than for serious reconstruction of the circumstances.

I say at the outset, I have one disagreement with the President of the United States. Although there probably, pray God, are only a "few really bad apples"—I think that was his phrase—in the corporate world, I do think we have a systemic problem. The marvel is that there are so many men and women in corporate America who have high moral standards and have overcome a fairly overwhelming temptation that exists in the way business is being done, the way in which we have loosened some of the not regulations, loosened some of the oversight on corporate America. It is a testament to the fact that there are so many honorable people running America's major corporations and multinational corporations.

The fact is, we have a systemic problem which leads me to my friend from Michigan, Senator LEVIN. Senator LEVIN, Senator MCCAIN, Senator CORZINE, Senator EDWARDS, myself, and several others, in varying degrees, think what this debate is all about is fundamental fairness and efficiency of our economy. A lot of what we read about these days is focused on corporate scandals, individual villains, their schemes, their greed. There is plenty of that and maybe more than I can remember any time in my Senate career.

I believe we need to focus on the behavior of corporate executives who have betrayed their positions of power, recklessly endangering the careers of tens of thousands of employees and the savings of millions of Americans. That is why it was so important the Senate unanimously adopted my amendment last week and the amendment which was contained in that of the Senator from Vermont for stronger penalties for corporate crime.

In the hearings I have held in my criminal law subcommittee in the Judiciary Committee, I made clear from the outset—and I try never to overpromise what criminal law can do, even though we are only now finally beginning to rectify and make our criminal justice system reflect our values more clearly—that is not a solution. It is a part of a solution. The Senator from Iowa and I conducted hearings in that subcommittee. We have asked for stronger penalties. We have passed them. One small example: If you were to violate the Federal law relating to pension security, ERISA, it is a misdemeanor that could cost someone their entire pension or 1,000 people their pensions, totaling hundreds of millions of dollars. It is a misdemeanor. All you get is up to 1 year in jail. Yet if you steal my automobile—I live 2 miles from the Pennsylvania State line, in Delaware—and you drive across the State line into Pennsylvania, you get 10 years under Federal law. Something is awry.

Criminal penalties are not the answer. They are just rectifying this incredible inequity within our system. Hopefully we are beginning to reestablish some sense of faith in the system where average people think big guys get away with it and little guys go to jail.

Punishing and deterring corporate crime, although it is a major part of our response to excesses committed by some of the most privileged and powerful corporate executives, is not enough. We face another fundamental problem. It is the loss of trust in our system, most apparent, perhaps, in the recent drop in the stock market. More than 200 off the DOW in the days following the President's speech, and when I came to the floor the DOW was down 300 points. I don't know where it is right now. I hope and pray to God it has moved up.

The fact is, there is a profound lack of confidence at the moment in our economy. There used to be a chairman of the board of the Dupont Company, a big, old farm boy from Ohio. He had great big hands. I remember, he was a wonderful guy, a first-rate chemist, first-rate scientist, as well as corporate executive. I was meeting with him one day and said: We have a problem; we are in the hole. And he turned and looked at me and said: My father always said, Joe, when you get in the hole, stop digging.

Maybe the President should stop making speeches for a couple of days. He has spoken twice and the market went down 500 points while he was speaking. It is not because of a lack of anything in the President, but people are looking for real change. They assume that if there is any rhetoric, it must not be likely to be followed by something real.

The Senator from Maryland has done something real. What the Senator from Utah and his committee has done is real. This is real. This underlying bill is real; it is positive; it is substantial. The bottom line is, no pun intended, there is a profound lack of confidence at the moment and that our economy can be shaken right now to the very foundations of our market democracy. For a market democracy to work, we have to have faith in our economy that will continue to create opportunities for job advancement and that our Government will continue to promote, as our Constitution requires, the general welfare.

In recent months, to be reminded how much we have in common, how much of our unique blessings we have come to take for granted prior to September 11, we were reminded that in the end we are all in this thing together. Among those blessings we had come to take for granted was the most dynamic economy in the world, that had just come off the longest, strongest expansion in history. In the new economic arena, we are now reminded how much we depend on trust in each other to make our markets work.

That sounds silly. No one was using the word trust before when we talked of the market economy. We talked innovation, the new economy, productivity, et cetera, but when you cut it all aside, it is all based upon trust, which is based upon transparency. If you cannot get out there and make your judgment to invest or not invest in a corporation with a clear sense that you have been told everything that is reasonable to tell you about the state of affairs of that company, then you might as well play the lottery.

You might as well come on over to Delaware and play the slot machines at Delaware Park. You have about the same shot, unless you are on the inside.

The task we are debating today is how to restore the strength of our economy, which is to restore the trust. At the core of that task is revival of confidence that consumers and investors, including foreign investors, need to get back into the market.

This is going to turn around, Mr. President. You and I both know it. I am absolutely sure it is going to turn around. The question is, how many bodies will be littered along the way; how many pensions will be lost; how many jobs will be lost; how long is it going to take? It will turn around.

I am sure the greatest strength of our system continues to be its resiliency: Our ability to see change as opportunity. I am sure of that because we have met this kind of adversity before. Every time we have come out stronger.

I remember when the Senator from Maryland and I were on the Banking Committee in those dark days of the savings and loan crisis. We made it through. We made some very difficult decisions that, I might add, Japan and other countries have not made, and it resulted in an even stronger economy. So I am confident we can come out of this stronger.

After the glare from all the glitter during the boom phase and as our vision becomes a lot clearer, we know that our economy is, in fact, fundamentally stronger than it was, notwithstanding what is going on now. Productivity gains were real. Information technology and corporate reorganization created real growth. It was not imaginary. It was not like these profit margins that people were suggesting they had on the balance sheets that were a lie. There actually was growth.

The economy, the marketplace has created real growth. In what economists like to call the real economy where jobs are created, where goods are produced, the real economy is faster and more efficient today than it was a decade ago. Even old industries in our manufacturing sector have gained from advances in new materials, as well as improvement in information sharing and organization.

We also know that a lot of what looked like growth, particularly in the financial sector, was only paper profits and a lot of it was written in disappearing ink. Profits and paper valuations were all too often inflated by wishful thinking, by self-dealing analysts, by accounting gimmicks, and by outright fraud.

The amendment I am proud to support offered by Senators LEVIN and CORZINE and others addresses one of the most glaring problems behind those inflated profit statements that fueled the stock boom that is now unwinding.

Stock options are, as advocates tell us, a useful device. They can reward employees when companies are so young that they have little else to offer. Of course, we all want to encourage startup companies in every responsible way we can. Also, stock options in theory, and sometimes in practice, keep employees' and corporate officers' incentives tied to the growth of their companies, but unlike virtually every other kind of compensation the firm can give its employees, stock options do not have to be listed on annual reports as an expense, and that means the more stock options you give, the less compensation you have to report, the lower your reported expenses, the higher your reported bottom line.

That part is simple, and that is a big reason stock options became so attractive not only for the good things they can do, but also for the convenient way they inflated earnings statements and I would even say, if I want to go overboard and defend corporate America, even defending those corporate executives who when they take the train up to Wall Street and have some 30-year-old or 35-year-old guy sitting around a table saying: OK, what are you going to do next quarter? And giant companies that are strong and mature would say: We are going to do as well as last quarter. That is not good enough. We are going to downgrade your stock and your company.

I remember one CEO of a major Fortune 10 company telling me, I have to do one of three things: I have to say, so be it, and keep on the long-term course or go out there and find some new product on the shelf, which I wish I had, that could increase productivity and profit, or go home and do something. The "do something" usually meant go home and cut the number of employees you have, cut expenses.

Guess what. I do not think these are bad, evil, and venal people. They went home, and there is an easy way to do it. Let's make sure compensation is not reflected as an expense. So instead of paying the top executives an additional $15 million in compensation, give them stock options. Guess what. The bottom line looked $15 million better than it did before.

That is not rocket science, and it may have been produced by Wall Street's desire for immediate gratification, immediate response. Whatever the reason, it turned out to be as much of a liability in the literal sense, as much as a damaging impact as the good things it could do by tying the employees' fate as well as the CEO's fate to their company.

I see my friend from Utah standing. Does he want to ask me a question?

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BIDEN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, the Senator is going into territory I will deal with in my statement, but to keep it all in context as he is talking, I must raise this question. The Senator is one of the historians of the Senate. He has been around a good long time and probably will be around for longer than I will.

Does the Senator from Delaware remember that in 1993 when we increased taxes in the Clinton tax increase, we also put a limit of $1 million on the total amount of deductions a company could take for salary for its employees?

In other words, that CEO could not be paid over $1 million for his or her services and have the company deduct that as a legitimate expense for tax purposes.

Mr. BIDEN. To be honest with the Senator, I do not remember that.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the Senator agree that might have been part of the reason why companies, in an effort to attract and hold the best executive talent, would have moved away from traditional compensation, that the Senator and I both understood when we were growing up and applying for jobs, and into the more esoteric area of stock options because stock options were, in fact, not deductible; whereas, good old-fashioned pay for services rendered was given a tax disadvantage as a result of the Clinton tax bill?

Mr. BIDEN. In response to the Senator, I have to check more closely. I have great respect for my friend from Utah. Based on what he says, it seems to me it would have had a negative impact rather than a positive impact. That is one of the things we talk about at the front end.

Whatever we do here should have a positive impact. There is something else stock options do, too. Because stock options are predominantly awarded to top executives, they are a great way to give yourself a sweetheart deal, with a powerful incentive for executives to look for ways to inflate stock prices so their stock options, at least for a while, are worth millions, even hundreds of millions of dollars.

Here is what Business Week said about stock options back in March:

Options grants that promised to turn caretaker corporate managers into multimillionaires in just a few years encourage some to ignore the basics in favor of pumping up stock prices.

And pump they did. Here is how much stock options distorted the bottom line for some of the biggest and best companies in America. One study by a London-based consulting firm, Smither and Company, looked at the use of stock options by 145 of the largest U.S. companies.

They found that those firms overstated profit by 30 percent in 1995, 36 percent in 1996, 56 percent in 1997, and 50 percent in 1998.

Other analysts, including the Federal Reserve, have found the same thing.

These are huge distortions in the picture the public was given about these companies and a huge distortion in information investors were using to allocate capital. That kind of distortion was clearly a big factor, maybe in addition to what my friend from Utah says, in driving up those stock prices that are now falling back to Earth.

This is no simple problem. The 200 biggest firms now allocate more than 16 percent of their stock in options. Let me repeat that.

The 200 biggest firms now allocate more than 16 percent of their stock in options, mostly for their very top executives.

The potential for distortion and the temptation to distort is great.

Remember these stock options are predominantly given to top executives.

One study in 1998 found that 220 of the top managers at Fortune 500 firms received an average of 279 times the number of stock options awarded to each of the firms' other employees.

Two hundred and seventy-nine times what ordinary employees got.

Despite the increased use of stock options this is clearly a device top management has largely preserved for itself, and the kind of incentives they created are now all too clear.

This amendment takes what I believe is the most restrained and most careful approach to the problem of stock options.

It does not legislate accounting standards, and it does not dictate outcomes.

It tells the Financial Accounting Standards Board that it is given new resources and new independence by the underlying Sarbanes amendment. It provides for FASB to come up with appropriate techniques to account for stock options, it does not dictate a one-size-fits-all at this moment, and it gives them a year to do it.

This is not about Government intervention this is about getting us out of the way of what every expert from Alan Greenspan to Warren Buffett and FASB itself says should be done.

It does nothing to interfere with the issuing of stock options.

It is about giving shareholders and investors the information they need to reassert their control over America's corporations. That will help to promote companies' long-term value, and reduce the temptation to pump up short-term stock prices.

This amendment can help promote a stronger form of stockholder democracy, to cure a system that a greedy few have turned to their own personal advantage. That kind of democracy needs openness and clarity—honest information to make informed decisions.

This amendment is real reform, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

I thank my friend from Utah for his intervention, and I thank my friend from Iowa for listening.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I yield to the Senator from Virginia, just to make a unanimous consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Nebraska). The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my hour to Senator GRAMM, the Senator from Texas, who is the Republican manager of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right. Time is yielded. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Before I forget, Mr. President, I make the request that the unused portion of my hour that I will not be using here, I would like to also have given to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I have five amendments I filed: (i) An amendment providing for a team of oversight auditors, (ii) an amendment providing for prebankruptcy bonuses paid to top executives be pulled back into the bankrupt corporation's estate, (iii) an amendment providing the Securities Exchange Commission with disgorgement remedies, (iv) an amendment providing that auditors who sell tax shelter products cannot opine on the financial effects of the tax shelter deal; and, (v) last, an amendment providing whistleblower protection to the accountants and others who want to disclose financial statement misconduct.

I am pleased, in regard to the last amendment I just announced about whistleblowers, Senators LEAHY and HATCH accepted that proposal as part of their amendment which has been adopted.

I am not going to speak about the other four. I am just going to speak about one of those. It is the first amendment I put on my list, an amendment providing for a team of oversight auditors.

As I said, I congratulate my colleagues, Senators SARBANES and ENZI on their hard work in moving S. 2673 out of Committee and bringing the bill to the floor for further debate. The reform bill is a great step in the right direction for tackling some of the difficult accounting problems our Nation currently faces. Nevertheless, I believe the reform bill isn't quite tough enough on several issues and should be strengthened further, consequently, the amendment.

In my view, the recent rash of accounting scandals did not result from incompetency or lack of rigorous training of accounting professionals. Neither has the problem lied principally with misguided auditing standards known as GAAS or ill-considered accounting rules known as GAAP.

The Worldcom debacle, among others, further demonstrated that the problem does not rest entirely with a company's external auditors—whose best efforts may not detect financial misrepresentations if fraud is repeatedly covered up by corporate insiders or contrived to defeat established internal controls. Instead, each of the most recent corporate accounting scandals appear to have arisen from egregiously bad behavior of corporate insiders and internal accountants—with varying degrees of complicity by those companies' external auditors.

Thus, as a matter of principle, I agree with the "bad apples" theory being offered by many. However, I believe addressing those bad apples requires additional oversight—and not just of a company's external accountants but of the internal accounting function itself.

To that end, I further respond to the President's call for increased oversight and would like to offer an amendment that would strengthen the provisions Sarbanes-Enzi bill by expanding the powers of the oversight board to require the performance of "spot audits." The underlying bill which focuses on monitoring external auditors would be amended to provide additional board oversight of internal corporate accounting.

Specifically, my amendment would charge the Board with responsibility for conducting oversight audits or "spot audits" of public companies. The board would serve in a role analogous to the Internal Revenue Service or the Federal Bank Examiner. The IRS, for example, achieves voluntary public compliance through review of a very limited number of federal tax returns each year. The IRS does not verify each and every tax return. Similarly, the Federal Bank Examiner sporadically and randomly audits various banks throughout the country. Such "spot auditing" has been an extremely effective oversight tool for the banking industry and one which has resulted in higher levels of regulatory compliance. In similar fashion, I believe that accountants and corporate America will prepare more carefully their financial statements if exposed to the risk of compliance review by the board's oversight auditors.

Even in self-regulated form, the accounting industry has long recognized the need for a second level of review. To that end, 24 years ago the ACIPA established the peer review process by which one accounting firm would review audit work of another accounting firm. For example, Deloitte & Touche was for many years the assigned peer reviewer of Arthur Andersen. Industry-wide self-checking on top of industry self-regulation seems ill-conceived and has been widely criticized for its effectiveness by lawmakers and the SEC.

Over the past 25 years, a Big Five accounting firm has never issued a qualified report against another Big Five accounting firm at the end of any peer review despite the subsequent discovery of numerous irregularities including numerous conflicts of interest from stock ownership in audit clients. This recognized need for a second level of review is longstanding although the mechanism originally established by the accounting industry seems to have proven largely inadequate.

Some may ask why the Board should be granted powers which may be exercised currently by the SEC. The answer is simply resources. Providing an effective mechanism for spot checking the books of various issuers requires a dedicated audit staff to carry out those purposes. Having resources dedicated to a regulatory review process would allow the oversight board to take a proactive approach in reviewing for accounting irregularities and take the SEC out of a purely reactive posture with respect to corporate accounting fraud. The SEC has done a great job of investigating corporate scandals once detected. Unfortunately, by the time many of the recent scandals were discovered, things had progressed too far. We were unable to salvage the companies and the life savings of thousands of employees and shareholders. I believe the oversight auditor would provide a deterrent to committing fraud when coupled with tougher criminal sanctions. I further believe that earlier detection could prevent the absolute destruction of companies in which fraud remains uncovered for too long a period of time.

I note that the concept of an oversight auditor within the public oversight board was rejected in the accounting reform proposal offered by the SEC and Harvey Pitt on June 20. The draft emphasized that the SEC's vision of a newly created public oversight board reassured corporate America that the newly-created oversight board would require the cooperation of audited corporations "only to the extent necessary to further . . . reviews or proceedings regarding the [audit corporation's] accountant." The draft further promised that the new oversight board would not conduct "roving investigations" of audited corporations nor would the board sanction those corporations. It occurs to me that by shifting exclusive focus and responsibility to accounting firms, we ignore the underlying behavior of corporate wrongdoers who have principal responsibility for fair and accurate financial reporting to corporate shareholders.

Under my proposal, the newly created oversight board would be charged with reviewing the financial statements of issuers and focusing its resources on highest-risk audit areas and questionable accounting practices of which it is aware from the SEC Division of Enforcement or other sources such as whistleblowers under provisions I heartily supported.

Upon discovery, the board would refer findings of possible accounting or auditing irregularity to the Division of Enforcement with respect to issuers or other appropriate federal and state enforcement officials such as the President's newly-created Fraud Task Force within the Department of Justice. This referral mechanism would ensure that those agencies continue to have primary authority and responsibility for conducting comprehensive corporate investigations of possible wrongdoing. The oversight board, of course, would have authority to conduct investigations of possible wrongdoing with respect to the involvement of accounting firms within its jurisdiction.

That is a basic summary of what this amendment would accomplish. I urge my colleagues to support establishment of an oversight auditor as a means of improving the compliance of corporate issuers and their external accounting firms and detecting irregularities at a much earlier point in the system when a shareholder value remains salvageable.

It seems to me that my amendment comes down to just a simple case of common sense. As I think proven so many times before, auditors need to be audited in the same way the IRS does it for tax returns and in the same way bank examiners do it in the case of bank audits. If auditors know their work will itself be audited, they will think twice about looking the other way on shady deals, as we have seen.

My amendment would put some very specific teeth in the Sarbanes-Enzi bill.

At this point, I was hoping the Senator from Texas was going to be here because I have done so much for him on a lot of Finance Committee bills. I'm referring to tax bills, including the recent CARE bill and the recent energy bill. I have helped him with so many amendments that he wanted. I was sure he would be willing to help me get unanimous consent to get my amendment up, particularly in light of the fact that last week I was assured when it wasn't on the list that it would be on the list. Then I came back and found that it meant being last on the list.

Now we are getting down to the end. I would like to have what I consider kind of a commitment, although it probably is not an ironclad commitment, that I be on the list, and, obviously, I would be able to get a vote on my amendment.

At this point, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be laid aside for the purpose of taking up my amendment just described, which is amendment No. 4232.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ENZI. In light of the discussions, I have to object.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Was the President going to put my unanimous consent before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I did.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I did not hear the President do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming objects.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, before I yield the floor, I would like to have just a short discussion of something that bothers me. In the Senate we have a right to be, and a responsibility to be, intellectually honest about these issues with which we are faced here.

I have heard so much during this debate—not so much during the debate, because that wouldn't be fair, but more probably in news conferences held by Senators on the other side of the aisle—about the Democrats wishing to use Enron and WorldCom events very much as, I think, political issues. I think maybe the Democrats are hoping for a “November storm” in which our economy is weak and no progress is made on accounting reforms.

As this bill goes through the Senate, through conference, and comes back, I hope we will realize that there is enough blame to go around. But, most importantly, I think it is wrong. For instance, the distinguished majority leader on “Face the Nation” recently attributed the current crisis to the alleged “permissive” attitude in the Bush administration toward business. I didn't see any “permissiveness” in the President's speech last week. I don't think very many people did.

But I think we also need to remember, while a lot of this mischief was going on by corporations, that during the decades of the 1990s and now in the 21st century there were 2 years in which Democrats controlled Congress. In those two years, we had a Republican President. That was the first Bush Presidency. There was a period of time when the Democrats controlled both Houses of Congress and the White House. That was 1993–1994. Then there were 6 years that Republicans controlled the Congress—1994–2000, and the Democrats controlled the Presidency. Then there were 135 days last year that Congress was controlled by Republicans, and the President of the United States, but only 135 days out of a 12-year period of time, if you want to use the 1990s plus now. And what has happened has happened on the watch of both Republicans and Democrats.

I think that to say a President has been President 18 months and this crisis before us is because of a “permissive” attitude in the Bush administration toward business just doesn't hold water.

I have a chart behind me. I hope I am very clear in making this more accurate than what I just said. The yellow is the 2 years of the Bush administration going back to 1994, and the other color covers the Clinton administration. But let's forget about the Bush administration and the Clinton administration. Let's just realize what the facts are.

In the case of Enron, it became public in the year 2001, but the restated earnings and the mischief went on all the way back to at least the beginning of 1997 because 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, and the first two quarters of 2001 were restated earnings.

Adelphia: Half of 1998, all of 1999, all of 2000—before they were public in 2001—but restated earnings for all those.

Go down to Xerox. It was found by the end of the year 2000 everything that was done wrong in Xerox. The restated earnings of 1997, 1998, 1999, and 2000 came before there was ever a President George Bush.

There were restated earnings for Rite Aid for 1998, 1999, and 2000. You can go down the list. What the chart says, better than I can say, is that it is not a permissive attitude by this President that has put us in this position. It is because of the lack of transparency that was implied in what the accounting profession and audit committees and boards of directors, who ought to be watching management, were doing, and the Securities Exchange Commission under the spirit of the 1933 law of what they should have been doing. I suppose there are a lot of others as well.

But now politics should be put to the side. We should not be making these statements. We ought to be correcting the situation so that people have confidence and so that the crooks who are running our corporations and doing these things that are evidenced here. When I say “crooks running our corporations,” I mean the ones who would do this sort of thing to their stockholders and to the country and to the economy—so that they cannot get away with that in the future.

That is what this bill is all about. I complimented Senator SARBANES and Senator ENZI about this bill. I think it would have been improved with my amendment. But, quite obviously, that is not the way the game is being played. So I am sorry that my amendment could not be put to a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I have spent most of the afternoon in the Chamber listening to this debate, which I have found to be illuminating, occasionally informative. I want to do what I can to perhaps add to the information, if not to some of the light.

I made reference, in my colloquy with the Senator from Delaware, to the decision that was made by the Congress back in 1993 to put a limit on the amount of compensation that executives could receive in terms of traditional dollar salary. And the limit was $1 million.

I remember some of the rhetoric that flew around this floor at that time, filled this Chamber—how terrible it was that people were being paid these outlandish salaries and that somehow it would benefit the people at the bottom of our economic ladder if there was a limit placed on those salaries. And so recognizing that they could not outlaw the salaries, Congress could do the next best thing—or, if I might say, the next worst thing—and say: All right, they can pay themselves these big salaries, but, by George, we will not allow a tax deduction for anything over $1 million.

Then, recognizing that would probably produce all kinds of difficulty, Congress said: Except in a number of areas. And one of the areas of exceptions was that nonsalary compensation could exceed $1 million and be expensed if it were approved by the shareholders.

In my view, this was a strong incentive to move toward stock options. After all, if you are running a public company and your services are worth $5 million or $10 million on the open market, you are not going to stay with a company that will only pay you $1 million in cash if a competing company will come along and offer you the $5 million or $10 million you think you are worth in the form of other compensation.

So as we get lyrical around here about how terrible stock options are, and how stock options lead to all kinds of excess, we should remember that Congress, in its excess of enthusiasm for a form of wage and price controls, helped contribute to this situation.

We do not like to have institutional memory. We do not like to be held accountable for our actions 4 or 5 years after those actions are taken. But, in this case, I think it is appropriate for us to remember the past while we are getting so exercised about what it is we plan to do in the future.

If I might, Mr. President, be a little autobiographical for a moment, I would like to trace my own experience with stock options. I have reflected on this, and I think it has perhaps some value in this debate.

I was working for the JC Penney Company in the mid-1960s. I was interested, when I went to work for the Penney Company, to find out that company had a tremendously innovative and singular form of compensation; that is, no one in the company was paid more than $25,000 a year—no one. The president, the chairman of the board, none of the vice presidents—no one was paid more than $25,000 a year.

There was a pool of profits that was created, and in addition to your $25,000 salary, you were given points in the pool. It was assumed that the pool was divided up in such a way that any one point in the pool was worth $1. So when I went to work for the Penney Company in 1964, my salary was, as I recall, $10,000 a year. I was not important enough to get to the exalted $25,000 a year stage. But I was given 2,500 points in the pool, which meant that if the company met its earnings objectives, I would get another $2,500; in other words, my real salary would be $12,500.

So I did everything I could to make sure that every point in the pool was, in fact, worth $1. I did what I could to turn off the lights. I did what I could to save expenses. I did what I could to drive sales so that the company would meet its goal.

My memory is that in one of those years each point was worth 93 cents; that is, the company fell 7 percent short of its projection. And every one of us in the company who was having that kind of a salary circumstance felt that 7 percent hit. In the example I have just given, instead of getting another $2,500 at the end of the year, I would have that $2,500 shaved by 7 percent. I would get my $10,000 salary, plus 93 percent of the additional $2,500.

There were stories in the Penney Company that were legendary about managers who would get transferred from one Penney store to another. At the time, as I recall, the limit was not $25,000, it was $10,000. So $10,000 per year was the maximum anyone in the company was paid. A store manager who was transferred from a relatively small store to a relatively large one in a large city was sure he was going to get a big raise. He got his first check, and it was for $10,000 a year. And he said: But my expenses are higher. I am running a store that is two or three times bigger. It doesn't matter; you get $10,000 a year. At the end of the year, when they added up the profits of that store, he got a bonus based on the profits of the store he was managing, and the bonus was about $100,000. Well, he had an obvious incentive to see to it that store was profitable.

What does any of this have to do with stock options? That system that was followed by the Penney Company that helped drive its growth all those years—where compensation was tied to performance, not only your personal performance as in the case of the store manager I described but in the company's performance, as in my own case—that program was scrapped. We went to a more traditional kind of compensation. As part of the traditional kind of compensation, we had stock options.

I got a little comfortable with the old system because I remember 1 year where each point in the pool was worth $1.23. The company did much better than it had anticipated, and I got a 23 percent upward kick in my compensation.

I questioned: Why are we getting away from this because it seems to me this works?

The answer was: Wall Street requires it.

Well, that wasn't enough of an answer for me. I said: What do you mean Wall Street requires it?

They said: The analysts at Wall Street have said to us, until you give stock options, we are not going to believe that you are serious about the future of your company because stock options are not tied to immediate profits. Stock options are tied to future profits. And until you put some of your compensation to your executives and key employees in the form of stock options, we will not believe that you believe the future of your company is as bright as you say it is. We want them to have a stake in the future.

So as it was explained to me, in the scrapping of this unique compensation plan that I think the JC Penney Company was the only company in the country, if not the world, that followed it, in the scrapping of that plan, you had to adopt some form of stock options. So they did adopt stock options.

I didn't stay around long enough to take advantage of them. I entered the Nixon administration in 1969 and gave up my vesting in a number of circumstances at the Penney Company. Frankly, I was a little nervous about that because I thought I had a bright future financially if I had stayed at the Penney Company. And again, as I say, at the end of the year, when they sent me the money that had been accumulating in my behalf during the part of the year I worked there, each point was worth $1.23. That said to me, once again, how much more money I would have had if I had stayed with Penney instead of coming with the Government. That is a separate issue. I will not go down that road any further. I am glad I made the decision I made. I probably would not be a Senator if I had not.

The point is, the compensation of employees should be tied to the future and benefit and prosperity of the company, and stock options were created with that in mind. What we have seen them become, since 1993, when they were not available as part of an intelligent compensation mix, but they were made more valuable by tax treatment by the Congress making an accounting decision, what we have seen is that stock options have accumulated the bad name we have been hearing about here on the floor. I am not sure I agree with everything that has been said about how terrible stock options are, but I do recognize they have led to some excesses.

In the New York Times, on July 12, there was an editorial signed by Walter Cadette, senior scholar at the Levy Institute of Bard College and retired vice president of J.P. Morgan. With a background at J.P. Morgan, in my view, he has a little bit more credibility than some of the people who write editorials for the New York Times. But he made the same point that has been going around the floor here in some of the rhetoric when he says:

Options . . . hold out the promise of wealth beyond imaging. All it takes is a set of books good enough to send a stock price soaring, if only for a while. If real earnings are not there, they can be manufactured—for long enough, in any case, for executives to cash out. This, in essence, is what happened at Enron, WorldCom, Xerox—indeed, at quite a long list of companies.

That is not congruent with the explanation about stock options I received back in the 1960s, when I had my first opportunity to participate in stock options in a Fortune 500 company. That is something that is new, that has come along.

So we are back to the fundamental question of this bill, which is, How do we account for the performance of a company in a way that will allow investors to make an intelligent judgment about the value of the company?

That is the fundamental issue here. It is fundamental enough that I think I ought to repeat it: How do we account for the performance of the company in an accurate enough manner to allow investors to make an intelligent decision about the future of that company?

Some will say to us: That is a very easy question to answer. Congressman GEPHARDT has been quoted in the press as suggesting that accounting is a science. It is a simple matter of black and white, of adding 1 and 1 and getting 2.

That is not the case, however much we would like to believe that is the case. Yes, when you are talking about some aspects of accounting for a company's performance, it is a simple matter of adding up the numbers and reporting them. But in a company as complex as today's modern industrial corporation, there are a whole series of judgment calls that must be made. It is not just a matter of adding up all of the sales. It is not just a matter of adding up all of the costs.

Back to my example of the JC Penney Company, this is a matter of a judgment call being made. What is the judgment of the value of this company if it does not trust its executives enough with stock options?

Analysts on Wall Street who are trained and experienced came to one judgment call: that the Penney Company was not worth as much without stock options as it would be with them—nothing whatever to do with the bottom line, nothing whatever to do with how many socks we sold or how many shoes we sold or how many shirts we sold. It was a judgment call on the value of the company based on accounting decisions.

Are we going to account for compensation strictly on the basis of the Penney Company's system or are we going to make a judgment call based on stock options?

Well, the Penney Company did what it believed it had to do under those circumstances and, of course, went forward in its history.

The point here is that there are judgment calls to be made every day in every circumstance with respect to accounting, and they will determine how the public, the investing public, will respond to the company that makes them.

That raises the question of what should those calls be and who should determine what those calls should be.

There is a term we use. It is called GAAP. It stands for generally accepted accounting principles. The very phrase itself defines what it is we are talking about. If we want to make an accounting decision as to what something is worth, we should make the decision within the parameters of GAAP; that is, we should make the decision on the basis that is generally accepted.

Let me give an example of what happens when you go outside the basis of what is generally accepted accounting principles. I was involved with an investor and he put out appropriate balance sheets, accounting information, profit and loss statements, and so on. He got a very angry call from one of the subinvestors. This was the kind of man who would sell shares in his overall project primarily to doctors and dentists.

He said to me once:

I will not sell shares to lawyers.

I said:

Why not? Isn't a lawyer's money just as good as a doctor's or a dentist's money?

He said:

No, because lawyers are trained to find problems and I don't want sub-investors who spend all of their time looking for problems.

Well, he got a phone call from a physician who said to him:

I have looked at your financial information and you are lying to me.

He said:

What do you mean I am lying to you?

He said:

It is right here in your documents. You said this particular venture made X hundreds of thousands of dollars last year. Now you have given me your financial statements and I have found out you didn't make a penny.

The man said:

What are you talking about?

He said:

I have it right here. Here is a list of your assets and a list of your liabilities and they match each other to the exact cent. You didn't make any money.

Well, generally accepted accounting principles say that a balance sheet always has to balance, that the number on one side and the number on the other side must equal each other to the penny. This man did not understand generally accepted accounting procedures, he wanted to keep books a different kind of way, and he was misled. The solution, of course, was to educate him on what those generally accepted accounting procedures ought to be. Once he generally accepted what those procedures were, he could read the profit and loss statement, the balance sheet, and he could discover that the man, in fact, was not lying to him and that, in fact, the venture had made several hundreds of thousands of dollars that year.

Now, let's come to Wall Street, let's come to Enron, let's come to all of the things that we are talking about here. One of the things we have heard in many of the hearings that I have attended on this subject is that if you were a sophisticated analyst of financial statements, you could, in fact, find all of the information that you needed in the footnotes of the various financial statements that were published. You did not need the kinds of disclosure that this bill is calling for.

Well, I examined that, listened to that testimony, listened to the people who made that point, and came to the conclusion that they are right. If you are sophisticated enough to be able to go through every single footnote, examine every single side comment, and plow through all of the boilerplate that makes up a standard financial release, you could create an accurate picture of that corporation—except in those cases where there was outright fraud. In my opinion, Enron was a case of outright fraud, not a case of hiding things in footnotes; it was a case of lying.

Quite frankly, there is nothing we can do in this Chamber, or anywhere else in a legislative forum, to stop people who determine that they are going to lie, who are determined they are going to commit fraud. That will happen no matter what kind of a bill we pass. We can raise the penalty and thereby discourage it a little more—and there are proposals to do that—but we cannot stop it. If someone is determined he is going to break the law, and he thinks he can lie and get away with it, he will still do it regardless of the bills that we pass here.

But what we can do, what we should do, and what this bill is crafted to do is to make it easier for the ordinary investor to understand what a company is worth, make it so that the generally accepted accounting principles conform with generally understood activities with respect to the business world.

The question is, how can we establish accounting rules that will make it possible for the ordinary investor to understand what is going on and not restrict understanding to those who can read the footnotes, who can decipher all of the boilerplate. I don't think we will ever get there in a perfect world. Life being what it is, with the lawyers coming in and requiring careful terms of art to be spelled out, we will never get to the point where someone who does not have any kind of legal understanding of the terms of art can read this as easily as he or she could read Harry Potter. However, we can move in that direction, and I feel this bill does so move.

The one thing that we should be most careful of, however, is to avoid having Congress set the accounting rules.

Why? If Congress sets the accounting rules, it will—to use a phrase we use here derisively sometimes—take an act of Congress to turn that around. And having set the rules, Congress is very reluctant to come back in an act of Congress and change them. But if the rules are set by the regulatory bodies over which Congress exerts some oversight responsibility, they can be changed much more easily as more information comes along and as people begin to discover that what they did previously maybe doesn't make as much sense.

I offer as exhibit A Congress's action to outlaw the deductibility of cash compensation above a million dollars—something that, in retrospect, now looks like it was a pretty stupid thing for us to have done. But we have done it, and the chances of trying to get a bill through that would undo it are very slim. If we stay out of the business—we in Congress—of making these kinds of accounting decisions, we will be better off, the economy will be better off, more people will keep their jobs, et cetera.

Let me close on that particular subject with that particular idea in mind, and that is that Congress from time to time wants to step into the marketplace, repeal the law of supply and demand, and assert our judgment over the judgment of the marketplace. I have said many times, and will say many times hence, if I could add to what we have carved in marble around here, I would say: "You cannot repeal the law of supply and demand." But we keep trying to do it with wage and price controls. We keep trying to repeal the law of supply and demand.

We tried to do it in 1993 when we said we will do something about the excessive compensation of executives. We won't say that the marketplace and the law of supply and demand will determine what people get paid; we will legislate it. We will legislate it with tax policy. We will do some social engineering through tax policy. We keep trying to do that all the time, and it almost always produces a perverse effect.

Let me address this question of overwhelmingly big salaries and compensation—as if there was something really evil about that, really corrupting about that. Maybe there is, in terms of the impact that that sort of compensation has in the lives of an individual, but it is the marketplace at work.

Let me give an example with which I think everybody might be familiar. I am not talking about Jack Welch, the CEO of GE. I am not talking about Ken Lay at Enron. Let's talk about somebody with whom most people can identify. Let's talk about Wayne Gretzky.

Wayne Gretzky has been called, accurately in my view, the greatest hockey player who ever lived. Along with that, Wayne Gretzky is the highest paid hockey player who ever lived. At the time the decision was made by the hockey team that brought Wayne Gretzky into the United States and paid him an incredible sum of money, there was a great hue and cry: How can one individual be worth this much money? For what? Knocking a solid piece of whatever hockey pucks are made out of around on the ice, for that he is worth $20 million, $30 million, $50 million—whatever it was—a year?

The owner of the team came out of some obscurity long enough to say: Yes, he is worth that much money, and let me explain to you why. Then he outlined what the ticket sales for his team were the year before he hired Wayne Gretzky and what the ticket sales for his team were the year he announced the hiring of Wayne Gretzky. The number was several times the total amount that Wayne Gretzky was being paid.

The owner said: On a percentage basis, he is a bargain. He is a steal at the price I got him.

These numbers are representative rather than absolute, but they stick in my memory that they were paying Gretzky something like $40 million or $50 million and the increase in ticket sales was going to be something like $120 million to $150 million.

The owner said: If I had to, I would pay him twice as much because I am getting the benefit.

People say: But that is measurable. Michael Jordan did the same thing for the Washington Wizards. We can figure that out with accounting. But what these chief executive officers are being paid is obscene.

If you are a shareholder of General Electric, Mr. President, and you looked at what Jack Welch, the CEO of General Electric, did with that company during the time he had it in his stewardship, would you look back on that total period and say we paid Jack Welch too much money? Or would you look back on the amount of the value of General Electric that was generated under his stewardship and say he was a bargain; he was a steal; we could have paid him twice what we paid him and still come out well ahead?

You say: But look at all of the executives who flew their companies right into the sea. Look at the executives who destroyed their firms. Yet they got this same amount of money.

If I may go back again to the sports world, have we not seen sports teams pay very large salaries, responding to the law of supply and demand, for coaches who had losing seasons? For quarterbacks who ended up being on the waiver list? Those of us in the Washington, DC, area have had a lot of experience with quarterbacks. Does that mean we are going to stop trying to get the right quarterback for the Washington Redskins by saying we will pay them average salaries in the National Football League so that there will not be any more of these obscene salaries and failures?

Several things will happen if the Washington Redskins take that point of view. No. 1, they will start to lose even more than they have lost in the past. And, No. 2, the fans will stop coming and the savings that you will make in buying a quarterback that you can get for $400,000 or $500,000 a year, compared to the one that you are gambling $10 million or $20 million on will all disappear as the ticket sales fall off, the television revenue disappears, and people do not want to come anymore.

Yes, there have been corporate executives who have been vastly overpaid. There have been CEOs who have been hired on the basis of their reputation, just as football coaches who have been hired on the basis of their reputation, who, to lure them into the company, have been given great packages and then failed to deliver. But there are also the Jack Welch of this world who have turned out to be bargains no matter how much they were paid.

Who should make the decision as to how much they should be paid? The answer is, The marketplace should do it. The law of supply and demand should do it. Someone who has demonstrated that he or she has the capacity to build, maintain, and expand a corporation with tremendous value for the shareholders is someone who can demand very high salaries because he or she is in very short supply.

We can complain all we want to about the social inequity of a CEO who is earning $20 million, $30 million, $40 million a year and someone who is working in that company for minimum wage, but it is the same principle as saying: Look at the difference between Wayne Gretzky down on the ice earning $20 million, $30 million, $40 million a year and someone selling hot dogs in the stands. If Wayne Gretzky were not on the ice, there would not be anybody in the stands to buy the hot dogs. Wayne Gretzky and his skills are in much shorter supply than someone who can stand in the stands and sell hot dogs.

We should not in our frenzy in this whole debate get so carried away with our desire to deal with those who have damaged the system by their failure to live up to their responsibilities that we, once again, make any statements that would cause us to try to repeal the law of supply and demand.

I see my colleagues are seeking recognition. I have carried on long enough. I leave with this one last thought: If we are going to deal with these issues, we should deal with them in the way this bill deals with them and not in the proposal that Congress itself should set accounting standards or should set wages or caps or compensation.

Past history tells us Congress can act in a hurry but repent at great leisure.

Mr. GRAMM. We have a unanimous consent request and a request for the yeas and nays that I want to make while we have at least a handful of Members here. I ask for the yeas and nays on the Edwards amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order to request the yeas and nays.

Mr. GRAMM. I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to request the yeas and nays on both pending amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is in order to seek the yeas and nays at this point.

Mr. GRAMM. I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending Edwards amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRAMM. I now ask for the yeas and nays on the Carnahan amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRAMM. The Democrat floor leader had a unanimous consent request he wants to propound.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we are in the process of working that out now. I think we will be able to do that later.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak for up to 10 minutes as in morning business, with the time consumed counting against the postcloture debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it is also my understanding that the Senator from Nevada is going to yield an hour to the manager of the bill; is that right?

Mr. ENSIGN. If you require the 50 minutes that will be left against.

Mr. ENSIGN. Yes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I understand he has a right to do that; is that true?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to yield time. The manager of the bill may receive up to 44 additional minutes. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, at the end of my remarks, I will yield whatever time the Senator from Texas can receive.

Mr. President, I want to talk about something a little different than what we have been talking about today, although I have very strong feelings about the bill and think that both the managers of the bill, along with Senator ENZI from Wyoming, have done a terrific job in addressing some very serious problems out there. I still believe there are a few problems with the bill we need to clean up in conference.

I do think the overall legislation has some positive reforms that must be implemented to try to restore some confidence back in the investing public.

PREScription DRUGS

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, what I want to talk about is something we are going to be dealing with later this week—as early as tomorrow from what I understand—and that is the whole idea of prescription drugs within Medicare. Earlier today, Senators HAGEL, GRAMM, LUGAR, INHOFE, and I all introduced a new prescription drug bill. It is the compilation of work mainly that Senator HAGEL and I have been doing for the last couple of years. We think it is a proposal that deserves the attention of our colleagues, and I encourage them to study this proposal.

I want to start by reading an e-mail I received from a senior citizen back in Nevada. This e-mail came in at 11:21 p.m. Pacific standard time, so obviously this person was up late at night thinking about the whole issue of prescription drugs. Let me read it:

I urge you to ponder very honestly the proposed prescription coverage with Medicare. Many social problems arise due to the fact that many persons who need medication to maintain some sort of life existence are not able to purchase the needed medications. Must we continue to choose housing or our medications? Please step back and consider if an elderly or disabled person in your own family were in this precarious situation. Would you not step up to the moral plate and fight to find funding for Medicare covered prescriptions?

I think this person summed up very well what a lot of seniors are feeling: They are having to choose sometimes between the type of food they eat and prescription drugs; sometimes between whether they can turn their air-conditioner on in the summertime or their heat on in the wintertime and prescription drugs; sometimes between rent and prescription drugs.

There are several proposals, and I commend the people who have been working on their proposals, but, frankly, the reason we decided to introduce this bill is that some of the other bills, especially when one looks into the out-years, are so costly that they literally could bankrupt the Medicare system in and of itself.

Our bill does a few things. First, it is available to every beneficiary, and it is also available faster than any of the other prescription drug proposals. Our bill can be implemented as early as January 1, 2004, whereas the earliest the other proposals can be implemented is 1 full year later.

Our bill is also the most affordable bill, especially to the taxpayer. We are waiting for the final score from CBO, but we think it is going to come in somewhere around $150 billion over the next 10 years. The next cheapest proposal, that we are aware of, is around $370 billion, and when one looks at the full cost of a 10-year program, other programs can be up to a trillion dollars.

A trillion dollars is not something this country can afford, especially under current economic conditions, and especially when we think about young people who would like to see Medicare as a benefit to them someday.

So we must enact a reform that not only America can afford but also senior citizens can afford, and we think we have come up with that balance. Basically, the way the program would work is, every senior on a voluntary basis would be able to get a prescription drug discount card. For a $25 annual fee, they would sign up and get this prescription drug discount card. They would then go buy their prescription drugs, and all seniors would save because of volume discount buying. We would use the private sector to do this. They would save, on average, 25 to 40 percent on their drugs. That is a huge savings right upfront that every senior could achieve.

On top of that savings, seniors up to 200 percent of poverty would next spend, on average, about $100 a month out-of-pocket; then after that, other than a very small copay, the Federal Government would cover the rest of their prescription drug costs.

This is what seniors are looking for. In my campaign in the year 2000, I took this plan all over the State of Nevada and talked to low-income, moderate-income, and higher income seniors groups about it. I told them that people who are in the lower income bracket are going to get most of the benefit, and for people in the higher income bracket, it is going to cost them more money, as it should.

In some of the other programs, no matter whether one is a lower income or higher income senior, they basically are treated the same. I personally do not think Ross Perot or somebody in his income category should be treated the same as somebody who makes $15,000 a year. There should be some difference. Under our bill, there is a great difference in the way those two categories of people would be treated.

The reason our bill is less costly to the taxpayer is one simple fact: All the other bills give a percentage of first dollar coverage. Whether it is 50 percent or whatever the coverage, after a very small deductible, they all start covering right away. Our bill says the senior is going to pay about the first $100 a month out of pocket, and then after that, our coverage kicks in.

About 50 percent of the seniors do not have $1,200 worth of prescription drug costs per year, so about half the seniors, other than the discounts they will get because of the prescription drug discount card, actually will not use it. But, frankly, most seniors can afford about $100 a month for prescription drugs. It is for that diabetic patient or that heart patient or that cancer patient who has maybe about $500, or $300, or $400, or whatever it is, a month that they are paying in current prescription drug costs. These are the people that really cannot afford their prescription drugs, and our bill helps that person much more than most of the other plans.

The reason our bill saves so much money is that we keep the patient accountable for the drugs they are getting. They do not have somebody else paying for it and as they get the benefit. That is one of the biggest problems we have with our current health care system: There is no accountability with patients. They are receiving the benefit regardless of the cost, and so they do not think about shopping because somebody else is paying the bill.

We do not have market forces working in the health care field today, and if we enact a prescription drug benefit without utilizing market forces, someday we are really going to regret it because we will have severely out of control costs.

The bill we have introduced, we believe, is more fiscally responsible and targets most of the benefit for those who truly need it the most. We can enact it a lot more quickly than some of the other programs, and it is permanent. It is because of those factors that we believe this bill is the bill that our colleagues should take a look at supporting.

We would be happy to meet with anybody to talk to them about the bill and possibly about cosponsoring the bill. Do not be turned off because one political party may be offering one bill and the other party offering another bill. We are offering an alternative to either of those bills, and we think this bill, with its fiscal responsibility to the taxpayer, is the bill that people should support.

In closing, I look forward to engaging in a meaningful debate on prescription drugs after we deal with this accounting reform issue—and this issue is so important, and I see my friend from Wyoming who has done so much work on the bill, and I applaud him and the others who have worked on this bill. But later in the week as we are debating this prescription drug benefit proposal, we need to take a serious look and not play politics because seniors cannot afford for us to play politics with the prescription drug issue. We need to work together in a bipartisan, rather, in a nonpartisan fashion, so seniors can get the help they so deserve.

I ask unanimous consent that under the provisions of rule XXII, I may yield whatever time I can yield back to Senator GRAMM. I understand it is 44 minutes, and I yield that amount of time to Senator GRAMM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. CANTWELL). The Senator has that right.

The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLELAND. I am happy to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. We have had two speakers from the other side. I ask unanimous consent to follow the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object, some of us have been on the floor all this time waiting to speak, as well. We hope for a chance to speak before we reach the end of the day.

I will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CLELAND. Madam President, I ask recognition to discuss my amendment No. 4236. This amendment addresses the accountability of corporate officers and directors. I strongly support the legislation before us which addresses the critical need to create an environment of accountability within corporate America. We need to send a strong message to corporate executives that the days of living large while lying, cheating, and stealing from the American people are over. Control of a company certainly has its advantages, but it also carries important obligations and duties. My amendment would address a situation like Enron where officers cashed in on bonuses, severance packages and millions of dollars in stock sales as they saw the light of the train coming through the tunnel. Unfortunately for thousands of Enron employees and investors, they had no similar warning and were not able to bail themselves out before many lost not just their jobs, but their life savings as well. My amendment would make sure that officers and directors who know what is happening, who know that financial reports are being manipulated, can't cash in on this knowledge while leaving employees and investors holding the bag. It is the duty of officers and directors to know what is happening in the corporation and to blow the whistle when they know there is wrongdoing.

In the case of Enron, 10 executives or directors joined CEO Ken Lay and Chief Financial Officer Andrew Fastow in siphoning off company proceeds and reaping millions of dollars when they sold their Enron shares high. Together these 12 individuals made stock profits totaling more than $30 million before the company took a public nose dive at the end of last year. These corporate high rollers were reaping huge profits at the same time thousands of hard working Americans were losing more than a billion dollars in retirement savings, including $127 million in lost retirement savings in my home State alone by teachers and State employees.

Corporate greed, should not be rewarded. The underlying bill requires that when a corporation has to file a restated financial report because of misconduct in the original report, the CEO and CFO have to give back any profits they have made from bonuses and stock sales for a year after the original report. My amendment would expand on the bill by calling into account all officers and directors who know about the misconduct in filing the financial report and through that knowledge abuse the company's trust and the trust of their employees. It would also mandate that officers and directors who have knowledge of wrongdoing in their financial reports would not only have to give up bonuses and profits but also their severance packages. Why should someone like Jeff Skilling get a parachute as he bails out of a disaster he helped to create?

This amendment, my amendment, deserves support. It is endorsed by Arthur Levitt, one of this nation's most distinguished financial authorities. It is high time we call corporate executives on the carpet and hold them accountable. It is time we create an atmosphere that encourages responsible behavior and restores the confidence of the American people in the economy of this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Massachusetts is to be recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. REID. I will take a couple of minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I guess I just yielded the floor.

I yield to the Senator and ask recognition afterwards.

Mr. REID. We have had some very long speeches by those on the other side and I thought it appropriate we respond.

The ranking member of the Finance Committee had all these charts indicating that all the problems were not the problems of this administration. The fact is, we realize there is a lot of blame to go around. With do not try to whitewash this issue.

The fact is, the President of the United States appointed the SEC Commissioner, who stated in the hearings he wanted a friendlier, a more gentle Securities and Exchange Commission.

That statement speaks for itself.

We also have to understand that actions speak louder than words. What I mean is, we have a Federal Government today, this administration, that is basically run like corporate America. That has to change. That is what this legislation is all about.

When there is a situation where the President of the United States is being written up in editorials all over the country and news articles throughout the country over his dealings with stock, borrowing money that basically he did not have, to pay back the principle until you sell your stock—no one else gets deals like that. The commentators are looking at that, as they should. Of course, the dealings that the Vice President had with Halliburton, we would like to know more about that. But the Vice President is treating that like he treated his energy task force: in complete secrecy, contrary to how we should be running this Government.

I believe we have a situation that cries out for passing this legislation as quickly as possible. This administration must step forward and recognize they are part of the problem, until they start talking about supporting this legislation, as I understand the President did today. I think that is wonderful. I understand he is going to help us get this through conference. I think that is important. I would like to see it before the August recess. It is important this legislation move forward.

Actions speak louder than words. This administration has to do more than talk about what needs to be done. They have to work with us in solving the problems of corporate America today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, there are many important provisions in the legislation before the Senate to increase corporate accountability. I had hoped to offer an amendment to make workers' retirement plans whole again when the corporate executives cheat.

After the collapse of Enron—the largest bankruptcy in U.S. history—the President and many Republicans in Congress suggested that it was an isolated example of corporate wrongdoing. Since that time, the nation has witnessed a continuing series of corporate scandals which have demonstrated otherwise.

The lack of corporate responsibility in the United States has undermined the credibility of our markets and devastated the retirement savings of millions of Americans. This widespread abuse of corporate power has also jeopardized our nation's economic recovery and hurt the legitimacy of our fundamental institutions. We must take bold action this week to ensure that corporations are made accountable and that workers and investors are protected against these abuses.

In the past month, we have seen a jury criminally convict the Arthur Andersen accounting firm for engaging in the obstruction of justice to cover up the Enron debacle. We have seen WorldCom admit that it wrongly reported its true financial condition by nearly $4 billion. Just last week, the Wall Street Journal reported that Merck recorded $12.4 billion in revenue from a subsidiary that it never actually collected.

In response to these scandals the President gave a speech last week, which the White House likened to the words of former President Teddy Roosevelt. Unlike our nation's great trust-buster, the President failed to lay out a comprehensive plan to restore America's confidence in our economic system.

Hard-working Americans and their families have suffered immensely as a result of these scandals and the failure of the Administration to take decisive action. Workers have lost their jobs, their health benefits, and their retirement savings. Today, over 47 million workers rely on 401(k) plans and the stock market for retirement security. We can't wait for the next report of corporate fraud, the next round of layoffs, and retirement losses before we take serious action.

This wave of corporate scandals is undermining the confidence of investors in the U.S. economy. Mutual fund investors have lost about $700 billion in just the last 15 months. In May of this year, new investments in stock funds declined by nearly two-thirds from the previous month. As foreign investors lose confidence in the transparency of U.S. corporations, these investors are pulling out of the U.S. market and the value of the dollar is now falling against foreign currency. With an unemployment rate of 5.9 percent, America's workers can ill afford to have their economic prospects dimmed by corporate corruption.

Its time—in fact its long past time—to pass tough new laws to prevent future abuses of corporate power. We must reform our accounting system, enact criminal penalties for corporate wrongdoers, and pass new protections for workers.

Senator SARBANES' accounting bill is critical to reforming our public accounting system and ensuring transparency and accountability for corporations in the United States. The legislation creates an independent oversight board; it restricts the non-audit services than an accounting firm can provide to the public companies that it audits; it holds corporate executives responsible for the accuracy of corporate financial statements; it requires corporate insiders to report stock sales and corporate loans to the SEC; and it provides additional resources to the SEC to improve its investigation and enforcement capabilities. We all owe a debt of gratitude to our colleague, Senator PAUL SARBANES, for shepherding this legislation through the Banking Committee and bringing it before the Senate.

In addition to these accounting reforms, we must hold corporate executives accountable when they mislead workers and undermine their retirement security. At Enron, executives cashed out more than a billion dollars of stock while Enron workers lost nearly a billion dollars from their 401(k) retirement plans. Thousands of Enron workers lost virtually all of their retirement savings. Enron executives got rich off stock options even as they drove the company into the ground and systematically misled workers about the true financial state of the company. Ken Lay now has a pension of nearly half a million dollars a year for life. Many Enron workers have nothing at all.

These are all statements that were made by Mr. Lay. Ken Lay's lies encouraged workers to buy Enron stock at $49. He "never felt better about the prospects of the company." He predicted to employees a "significantly higher stock price," saying it was "an incredible bargain" as it was going down. Mr. Lay has a pension of nearly half a million dollars a year. At WorldCom, the workers lost more than half of their retirement savings as the stock dropped from $60 to just 6 cents. Workers across the country also lost big as a result of corporate wrongdoing at WorldCom. The brave firefighters and police officers of New York City lost $100 million from their pension fund. Over 20,000 workers have been laid off in the last few weeks because of the actions of WorldCom executives. Yet, those same executives made out like bandits. Former WorldCom CEO Bernie Ebbers is guaranteed a million and a half dollars for the rest of his life while WorldCom workers face a bleak financial future.

Sadly, Enron and WorldCom are not just isolated tales of corporate greed that hurt America's workers. At Kmart, 22,000 workers were laid off. At Lucent, 16,000 workers were laid off. At Xerox, over 13,000 workers were laid off. At Tyco, almost 10,000 workers were laid off. At Global Crossing, over 9,000 workers were laid off.

These corporate debacles reveal a much deeper crisis of corporate values. In America, people who work hard all their lives deserve retirement security in their golden years. It is wrong—dead wrong—to expect Americans to face poverty in retirement after decades of working and saving.

For far too long, corporate executives have been obsessed with their own compensation instead of the long-term health of the companies they lead. Executives, like those at Enron and WorldCom, should not put their own short-term gain ahead of the long-term interests of workers and shareholders. They must not be rewarded for doing so. At Enron, workers were systematically misled by Enron executives about the financial situation of the company. For years, Enron, like many other companies, pushed its workers to buy company stock with their own 401(k) contributions.

Until the bitter end, Enron executives continued to promote Enron stock to workers in a series of e-mails. On August 14, Enron CEO Kenneth Lay told workers that he "never felt better about the prospects for the company." On August 27, Lay predicted to workers a "significantly higher stock price." And on September 26, Lay called Enron stock "an incredible bargain." Even as they promised the moon, Lay and other executives were cashing out their stock for a billion dollars.

If Enron and WorldCom scandals teach us anything, it's that we must stop rewarding corporate misbehavior.

Our amendment—it is cosponsored by Senator GREGG of New Hampshire—makes it clear that executives who give workers misleading information about the company stock in their 401(k) plans face serious penalties. The amendment is the civil law parallel to the Leahy criminal provisions, which punish executives for defrauding investors. The amendment is also the ERISA civil law parallel to the Biden amendment, which increases the ERISA criminal penalties. When executives lie and mislead workers about company stock, they must face real penalties.

Under current pension law, Enron executives, like Ken Lay, and Arthur Anderson, cannot be held responsible for workers' losses in their 401(k) plan. The amendment makes a corporate "insider"—an officer or director or the independent public accountant—responsible under pension law if the insider misleads workers about the company's stock.

America's workers need this amendment to hold Ken Lay and other executives engaged in wrongdoing accountable. The amendment empowers workers to seek restitution when executives knowingly abuse workers' pensions. If workers lose their retirement savings due to deliberate corporate mismanagement, then they should have the right under our laws to hold those top executives accountable in a court of law, and recover what they lost. This right could make the difference for a family between an impoverished retirement and a comfortable retirement that they earned.

The economic health of our nation depends on reigning in the abuses of corporate power which we have witnessed in recent months. Restoring the credibility of accounting standards, as the Sarbanes bill would do, is critical to restoring confidence in our markets. At the same time, we must also restore basic fairness to our system.

When corporations like Enron fail because of executive wrongdoing, corporate executives get golden parachutes but workers are left with a tin cup when it comes to their retirement. Corporate criminals must be made to pay for their misdeeds.

We see from this chart what has happened: Ken Lay, $457,000 a year for life, retirement savings were decimated, 4,200 layoffs; former WorldCom CEO, Bernard Ebbers, $1.5 million a year, retirement savings decimated, 20,000 layoffs; Richard McGinn, $12.5 million lump sum pay for Lucent, retirement savings decimated, layoffs for 16,000; Charles Conway, $9 million lump sum pension, retirement savings decimated 22,000 layoffs.

This has to stop. Today we have a critical opportunity to protect workers and investors against future abuses of corporate power. We must not let these hard-working Americans down.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the pending amendment in order that I may offer the Kennedy-Gregg amendment, which I send to the desk at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Massachusetts retains the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I have heard objection. We tried to get this amendment up during the period of the last week and were closed out. It is a simple amendment. It is an amendment that can do more to protect workers' interests than many other proposals. I think we ought to have some accountability for those who willingly mislead, willingly and knowingly mislead workers, and then benefit from insider information.

It would just give them a cause of action, a specific case, no punitive damages. It would be a factual situation which would have to be decided in the courts of law. But it does seem to me to offer a real meaningful opportunity to protect workers and the savings of workers from the kind of gross abuse we have seen currently here in the Senate.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, will the Senator yield for a brief question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, the Senator from Massachusetts has just propounded a unanimous consent request on an amendment that makes good sense to me, and it certainly should be added to this bill. I assume it is a germane amendment. We are postcloture. At the very least, he should have gotten a vote on the amendment. But I wonder if the Senator from Massachusetts knows that this has gone on all afternoon. I offered an amendment a couple of hours ago that was simple and germane. It should have had a vote. It said that if the CEOs and directors of a corporation waltz out the door with millions of dollars of bonuses, stock options, and incentive pay, and then the company goes bankrupt, they have to give it back. I couldn't get that amendment up for a vote because of the same objection.

I wonder if the Senator from Massachusetts might conclude from this that the things here in the final hour which are germane have a right to be considered and heard on behalf of the workers and the shareholders and the folks who didn't get rich but the folks who lost everything. I wonder if there is not a pattern here that the Senator from Massachusetts sees and that others see to shut down those amendments and protect the folks at the top while the folks at the bottom lost everything.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, this amendment is relevant. But under the strict rules of the Senate, it would not be considered germane, although I think a commonsense evaluation or review of the amendment's purpose and what the underlying bill is about would certainly appear to I think most people to be an important strengthening provision if we are interested in corporate responsibility and protection for workers. It is certainly relevant, but under the technical rules it is not germane.

But I think anyone who knows what this bill is really all about understands what is happening in these circumstances. This would certainly be a very strengthening provision in the underlying provisions. We were unable to get the opportunity to have the consideration because we were foreclosed from that opportunity at the end of last week and we are getting objections this week.

I think that is unfortunate. As I understand it, the most current support for this is overwhelmingly among Republicans and Democrats alike across this country. They understand. It doesn't take a lot of debate or discussion to understand what accountability is all about. Under the existing laws, they can only have accountability, not for those who are at the CEO level, who are really the ones making these judgments and decisions upon which workers are relying, but they would only be able to sue lesser figures in the corporate ladder. Therefore, this is not an effective remedy for workers.

We are trying to provide an effective remedy for workers who are being shortchanged. It makes eminently good sense. It is eminently fair. It is eminently responsible. It is eminently relevant. But there has been objection to it.

I want to give assurance to the Senator that we look forward to offering this amendment at another time at the first opportunity.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator BYRD be recognized today at 5 until 15 after the hour to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INSIDER TRADING

Mr. GRAMM. S. 2673 includes provisions prohibiting insider trading of company stock during so-called blackouts—or periods during which pension plan participants are unable to exercise control over the assets in their accounts. In order to implement the insider trading prohibition, it was necessary to provide a definition of a blackout period. The Banking Committee also provided a 30-day notice requirement prior to a blackout, so workers and executives alike would know when the insider trading prohibition would be effective.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, there appears to be broad consensus that pension plan administrators should be required to provide 30 days' notice to affected plan participants before limiting their ability to exercise the rights provided through their pension plans. These advance blackout notices will become integral requirements for how pension plans will operate in the future. Because of this, notice requirements were included both in the pension bill reported by the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions, HELP, Committee on March 21, and in the bill reported by the Finance Committee unanimously on July 11.

Mr. GREGG. I agree with the Senator from Iowa. Although the general concepts are agreed upon, however, there are differences between these provisions in all three bills that affect the operations of pension plans, and will clearly need to be worked out before the bill is sent to the President's desk. Harmonizing these requirements will require a careful balance between the rights of pension participants and the financial burdens on plan administrators.

Mr. KENNEDY. I certainly agree with the remarks of my colleagues. My bill provides pension plan participants with written notice 30 days before a plan blackout begins, and prohibits blackouts from continuing for an unreasonable time. This important disclosure to pension plan participants is within the jurisdiction of the HELP Committee.

Mr. BAUCUS. I also agree with the remarks of my colleagues. As chairman of the Finance Committee, which also has jurisdiction over pension plans, I join the chairman of the HELP Committee and the ranking members of both the Finance and HELP Committees in urging the chairman and ranking member of the Banking Committee to work with us as you go to conference on S. 2673, to ensure that the blackout provisions are drafted in such a way as to ensure the proper operation of the pension system.

Mr. SARBANES. I look forward to consulting with both the Finance Committee and the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee as we go to conference to make sure the provisions are appropriately drafted.

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY FOR FINANCIAL REPORTS

Mr. GRAHAM. Section 302 of S. 2673 involves Corporate Responsibility for Financial Reports. I am concerned that in subsection (b), where the CEO and CFO sign documents to verify the accuracy of financial reports, the bill's language says they shall "certify" the accuracy of the financial documents. In my view, this language should read "certify under oath" in order to be consistent with current Securities and Exchange Commission, SEC, regulations. You can clearly see that the SEC currently requires that these statements to be under oath. Let's not create a lower standard in this bill than currently exists in regulation.

Mr. SARBANES. I appreciate the Senator's interest, and I hope his concerns can be addressed in conference.

Mr. GRAHAM. I thank the Senator for his assistance on this issue and his leadership on this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that Exhibit A of the order be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From SEC website www.sec.gov, June 27, 2002, OMB Number: 3235-0569; Expires: January 31, 2003]

Exhibit A—Statement Under Oath of Principal Executive Officer and Principal Financial Officer Regarding Facts and Circumstances Relating to Exchange Act Filings

I, [Name of principal executive officer or principal financial officer], state and attest that:

(1) To the best of my knowledge, based upon a review of the covered reports of [company name], and, except as corrected or supplemented in a subsequent covered report: no covered report contained an untrue statement of a material fact as of the end of the period covered by such report (or in the case of a report on Form 8-K or definitive proxy materials, as of the date on which it was filed); and no covered report omitted to state a material fact necessary to make the statements in the covered report, in light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading as of the end of the period covered by such report (or in the case of a report on Form 8-K or definitive proxy materials, as of the date on which it was filed).

(2) I [have/have not] reviewed the contents of this statement with [the Company's audit committee] [in the absence of an audit committee, the independent members of the Company's board of directors].

(3) In this statement under oath, each of the following, if filed on or before the date of this statement, is a "covered report":

[Identify most recent Annual Report on Form 10-K filed with the Commission] of [company name];

all reports on Form 10-Q, all reports on Form 8-K and all definitive proxy materials of [company name] filed with the Commission subsequent to the filing of the Form 10-K identified above; and any amendments to any of the foregoing.

GUIDANCE TO STATE REGULATORY AUTHORITIES

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to ensure that State regulators do not automatically apply the provisions of this bill to accounting firms and firms that service small businesses without first looking at the possible harmful unintended consequences to those small businesses. The standards applied by the board under this act could create undue burdens and cost if applied to nonpublic accounting companies and other accounting firms that provide services to small business clients.

Mr. GRAMM. I agree with my friend, the Senator from Nevada, and want to add that what we need to avoid is a possible cascading effect, starting with the Federal Government, that could eventually hurt the small accounting businesses in this country.

Mr. ENSIGN. Many of these small businesses rely on their CPA or auditor to provide objective, trusted advice and counsel on a broad range of tax and business related issues. Without this amendment, we will end up harming thousands of American accounting firms and their small business clients.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nevada is right about the harmful affects this legislation could have on small businesses, not only the small accounting firms in this country, but also the small business clients of those companies. This amendment says to the State regulators to look very carefully at the effects this legislation could have for smaller and medium-sized firms, and also on small businesses that may rely on larger firms for their audit work.

Mr. ENSIGN. I thank the Senator from Texas for his comments.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, as a businessman, I have been deeply concerned about the reports of fraudulent and even criminal behavior at prominent American corporations. When I worked in business on a daily basis, this is not the kind of behavior I saw or expected from my peers. It is imperative that we respond to the corporate malfeasance which has been roiling our markets. The impact of these acts, all for the sake of boosting short-term profits, has been broad, costing many their jobs and others their savings.

The free market is the underpinning of our economic system, the key to the growth and development of our Nation in the last two centuries. The many creative and dynamic businesses which make up our democratic capitalism make important contributions in the form of good paying jobs and the taxes which pay for critical services, such as our national defense. Above all, these businesses are good citizens in their communities. As a result, businessmen are important and highly valued people in our society. The vast majority of businessmen act in good faith and with integrity. It is the bad apples who give the rest a bad name.

Our system has been abused. Unfortunately, those who have raped the system have reaped financial gain, while the rest have lost jobs, savings and pensions. They and their boards violated the public trust.

Those who are lucky enough to be in positions of leadership have an enormous responsibility to enhance and not damage our economy. Unfortunately, the current system of regulation has not been sufficient to prevent bad actors from abusing their positions. That is why we are taking action today. We must build more accountability into our economy because the bad actors—even if they are not in great numbers—have impacted our whole economy. The stock market is no longer the playground of the rich: We are now in an era when as many as 50 percent of the American people have some of their assets in the stock market, meaning enormous repercussions if companies are misrepresenting their financial positions.

I agree with the President that ethical behavior and corporate responsibility are essential if we are to restore the confidence of the American people in our free markets. However, the colossal corporate wrongdoing we have seen uncovered—in 2001 alone, 270 public companies had to restate the numbers in their financial statements—requires that we step up to the plate and address some of the structural problems which have allowed these frauds to occur.

That is why I support S. 2673, the Public Accounting and Corporate Reform Investor Protection Act of 2002.

There are those who have said this legislation is too strong. I disagree. This legislation will not have a negative impact on people doing their jobs as they should. We have an obligation to protect investors, employees, citizens. We are saying to CEOs, their fellow executives, and their boards: We expect you to do your jobs correctly, with integrity, and if you don't, you will be held accountable.

It is not enough to challenge corporate America to do better. We must make clear that there is a cost to engaging in accounting and securities fraud. That is why I supported the Leahy amendment, a version of the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act. This amendment strengthens existing criminal penalties for corporate crime, creates a securities fraud felony punishable by up to 10 years in prison, and creates a new crime for schemes to defraud shareholders. The amendment also would establish a new felony antishredding provision and would protect corporate whistleblowers.

The strength of the Sarbanes bill is not in the penalties alone. The bill addresses conflicts of interest which have permitted these crimes to occur and is a balanced approach which will help prevent corporate fraud from occurring in the first place.

The bill sets up a strong, independent, and full-time oversight board with broad authorities to regulate auditors of public companies, set auditing standards, and investigate violations of accounting practices. The Public Accounting Oversight Board proposed in the bill is a better alternative to the part-time board currently being pushed by the SEC. That board would leave standard setting to the accounting profession and would most likely perpetuate the status quo. It is the lack of clear standards coming from the current system of self-regulation which has been the root of many of the frauds being revealed today.

The Sarbanes bill also restricts the nonaudit services a public accounting firm may provide to its clients that are public companies. These consulting services are clear conflicts of interest for independent auditors. We cannot rely on auditors to serve as the watchdogs of publicly traded companies if they are deeply invested in these same companies. If we cannot rely on the auditors, than how are we to rely on the markets?

Finally, the Sarbanes bill addresses the problem of stock analyst conflicts of interest. The Merrill Lynch case recently settled in New York is an egregious example of stock analysts pushing stocks that they actually thought had little value. Most often the motive for pushing stocks of questionable value is to boost their own investment banking departments which are underwriting these stocks. The bill before us today addresses this problem and requires the SEC to adopt rules designed to protect the independence and integrity of securities analysts.

I have no illusions that one bill will be the panacea for all that currently ails corporate America. For example, I believe there is more we should do, beyond the corporate disclosures in this bill, to address problems with corporate boards. We have a responsibility, however, to restore confidence in our markets and in the solid businesses which make up these markets so that our economy can thrive. Only decisive action can prevent this fraud on the American people from happening again.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, over the past year as Americans have worked hard to restart our economy, we have been hit by report after report of irregularities, misconduct, and blatant conflicts of interest by corporate executives, auditors, and brokerage firms.

The current corporate and auditing scandals are hurting American families. Thousands of jobs and retirement accounts have disappeared. Millions of current investors have watched their gains evaporate. Our economic recovery looks more distant. And most importantly for our long-term prosperity, investors are no longer confident that the financial information provided by public companies and their auditors is accurate.

Congress cannot restore the jobs and retirement savings caused by this wave of corporate and auditing scandals. It can act to strengthen oversight of the accounting industry, to demand greater responsibility from corporate executives, and to address conflicts of interest in brokerage firms.

Today I am voting for reform. We need to send a strong message to working and retired Americans, to investors, and to the executives and auditors of publicly held companies that this Senate will act to restore accountability and faith in our free market system. The Senate's bipartisan accounting reform bill will do just that.

First, the bill limits its scope to publicly held companies. The bill does not attempt to federalize accounting oversight. Instead, it strengthens the Federal Government's historic role of regulating publicly traded companies and their auditors. The State boards of accountancy will continue their important role of regulating accountants who audit private companies.

Second, the legislation establishes a strong, independent Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. The board is empowered to set auditing, quality control, and ethics standards, to inspect registered accounting firms, to conduct investigations, and to take disciplinary actions. As a check on the board's power, its decisions are subject to oversight and review by the Securities and Exchange Commission, SEC.

Third, this bill seeks to ensure that auditors are fulfilling their public duties by ending potential conflicts of interest. Large accounting firms typically provide both audit and nonaudit services to their public company clients. The legislation would prohibit auditors from performing specific non-auditing services, unless those services are approved on a case-by-case basis by the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. All legal nonaudit services would need to be approved by a public company's audit committee.

Fourth, the Senate legislation demands that corporate leaders take greater responsibility. The bill requires that chief executive officers, CEOs, and chief financial officers, CFOs, certify financial reports, outlaws fraud and deception by managers in the auditing process, prevents CEOs and CFOs from benefitting from misstatements made in their financial reports, and prohibits corporate decisionmakers from selling company stock at a time when their employees are prohibited from doing so.

Fifth, the Senate bill would limit the growing pressure and conflicts of interest that affect the independence of stock analysts. Just as investors need to know that a company's financial reports are accurate, so should investors expect objective opinions from stock analysts.

Finally, the bill would authorize additional funding for the SEC and would establish independent sources of funding for the new oversight board and FASB. As a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, I will support full funding for the SEC.

We need to work to prevent future scandals. We also need stronger criminal laws and penalties to address fraud and abuse by corporate executives and auditors. During last week's debate I voted for three amendments, including an amendment by Senator LEAHY, that would close gaps in current law.

I know some of my constituents in the accounting and business communities are concerned by a few of the steps in the Senate bill. As I talk to certified public accountants in my State, they have emphasized that it is critical to encourage greater competition in the public accounting field. I agree investors would be better served by more competition. The bill requires the Comptroller General, in consultation with various agencies and organizations, to identify the factors that have led to the consolidation of public accounting firms since 1989, the impact of consolidation, and ways to address it. While a study does not guarantee action, I look forward to reviewing its findings.

It is time to restore confidence in corporate financial statements. It is time to hold people accountable who violate the public trust. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

Mrs. BOXER. Individual investors, saving for their retirement or their children's education, count on business leaders to play by the rules. They also count on financial industry professionals including accountants and research analysts to produce reliable, professional, and honest work.

But recent business scandals at Enron, Tyco, Merrill Lynch, WorldCom and others are proving that without strong government oversight and regulation, greed will lead executives, accountants, and investment analysts to abuse the trust that American workers and investors have placed in them.

We have to restore that trust. This bill is a good first step. It has the necessary teeth to clamp down on corporate irresponsibility. First, it creates a full-time independent board to set ethical auditing standards. Second, it prevents companies from providing most consulting services for the very same companies that they audit. Third, if enforced, it would send corporate executives who mislead shareholders to jail. Fourth, it forces Wall Street investment research analysts to disclose any conflicts of interest that they or their financial institution might have in the investment recommendations that they make. And finally, it protects whistleblowers who reveal unethical acts by the companies for which they work.

I support this bill and would have supported even stronger legislation. I remain concerned that the public members on the board created in this bill are not chosen according to specific independence standards. I am also concerned that disclosure requirements do not include the holdings of family members of influential research analysts on Wall Street. And most importantly I had hoped we could do more to get funds to workers who lose their jobs as a result of executive misconduct. Those concerns aside, this bill is a good first step in restoring confidence in the system.

Unfortunately, the House recently passed a bill that is weak and will not get the job done. It fails to establish a full-time board to design and enforce auditing standards, does not mandate jail time for securities fraud, and fails to protect whistleblowers. On the conflicts of interests that investment analysts are forced to disclose in the Senate bill, the House bill calls only for a study of the issue.

I urge the President to go beyond rhetoric and endorse the Senate accounting reform bill so that we can get a strong bill out of conference. I also urge the President to join us in fighting for meaningful pension reform to ensure that American's retirement savings are protected.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to take a few moments to praise the Banking Committee for bringing the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002 to the floor and all the hard work they have done in the past week. In the weeks before this bill came to the floor I thought that what we needed was some type of Investors' Bill of Rights.

I had worked with colleagues on both sides of the aisle to come up with bipartisan goals to prevent corporate abuse and protect investors. I feel that much of the bill on the floor fulfills these goals. I feel that there are a few things that investors should see happen when we pass this bill. I believe that much of this bill will help, and in other areas we may have to work further.

I believe that investors must have access to information about a company. We should ensure that every investor has access to clear and understandable information needed to judge a firm's financial performance, condition and risks. The SEC will have the power to make sure companies provide investors a true and fair picture of themselves. A company should disclose information in its control that a reasonable investor would find necessary to assess the company's value, without compromising competitive assets.

I believe that investors should be able to trust the auditors. Investors rely on strong, fair and transparent auditory procedures and the concept of the Oversight Board in the Sarbanes bill is a sound one.

I believe investors should be able to trust corporate CEOs. Unlike shareholders or even directors, corporate officers work full-time to promote and protect the well-being of the firm. A CEO bears responsibility for informing the firm's shareholders of its financial health. I support the concept of withholding CEO bonuses and other incentive-based forms of compensation in cases of illegal and unethical accounting. Further, I do believe that CEOs must vouch for the veracity of public disclosures including financial statements.

I believe that investors should be able to trust stock analysts. Investors should be able to trust that recommendations made by analysts are not biased by promises of profit dependent on ratings. It is only common sense that there should be rules of conduct for stock analysts and that there must be disclosure requirements that might illuminate conflicts of interest.

Finally, I believe that we should be able to rely on the Securities and Exchange Commission to protect investors and maintain the integrity of the securities market. Current funding is inadequate and should be increased to allow for greater oversight, ensuring investors' trust in good government.

During the debate on this bill my attention has been called to the plight of public pension systems, such as Oregon's Public Employment Retirement System, known by the acronym PERS. PERS you see was invested in both Enron and WorldCom stock and has been hit hard by the debacles that occurred in each company. The PERS system lost about $46 million after Enron self-destructed and another $63 million following the WorldCom scandal.

These losses occurred because false profits were inflated and corporate books were doctored. Under the PERS system, an 8 percent rate of return is guaranteed for the 290,000 Oregon active and retired members of PERS. Oregon taxpayers have to make up the difference following an ENRON debacle or WorldCom scandal, and my State's budget is not prepared for this kind of loss.

While this bill goes far in creating accountability, I am interested in finding out if there is more we can do and am asking the General Accounting Office, in consultation with the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Department of Labor, to report to Congress on the extent to which Federal securities laws have led to declines in the value of stock in publicly traded companies and in public and private pension plans.

I believe this study is necessary because many public and private pension plans continue to rely on the continued stock growth in publicly traded companies, much like the PERS system. I hope this study will provide the needed information so public and private pension plans can reevaluate future investments in publicly traded companies.

We cannot stand by and watch our hard working Americans ruin their pension systems while corrupt corporate executives take advantage of investors. I am proud of the work the Senate has done in the last week in creating accountability and responsibility in corporate America and look forward to working on this issue in a way that will help the investors and pensioners in the PERS system in Oregon.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002. I thank Chairman SARBANES for his leadership and the Banking Committee's staff for their efforts which have resulted in a measure which is fair, realistic, and protects investors. The steady disclosure of accounting scandals and corporate misdeeds underscores the need for legislation to protect investors and to restore public trust in the accounting industry and financial markets. Chairman SARBANES has been the leading voice for reform. Our Banking Committee held ten hearings on accounting and investor protection issues in February and March. These hearings produced extremely valuable information from which S. 2673 was developed.

Public confidence has been shaken by the incidences of fraud and misrepresentations revealed in the financial statements of companies. Enron, Xerox, and WorldCom are just a few examples of corporations which have misled investors with their financial statements. Since 1997, there have been almost 1,000 restatements of earnings by companies. Investors have suffered substantial financial losses and are unsure of the validity of the audits of public companies. There is a lingering fear that there will be additional revelations of corporate fraud or misrepresentation. This has already harmed investor confidence and could continue to have an adverse impact on the financial markets.

I support this bill because it takes the appropriate steps to help restore public trust in the accounting industry and financial markets. S. 2673 would create an independent Public Accounting Oversight Board to provide effective oversight over those in the accounting industry responsible for auditing public companies. Previous attempts at regulation have been complex and ineffective. As the numerous auditing failures demonstrate, there is a need for an independent Board with authority to adopt and enforce auditing, quality control, ethics, and independence standards for auditors.

The legislation also requires additional corporate governance procedures to make Chief Executive Officers and Chief Financial Officers more directly responsible for the quality of financial reporting made to investors. After the numerous misstatements and corporate abuses that have occurred, this is a necessary step to ensure that corporate executives are held accountable for the financial statements of their companies. A particularly important provision in the bill would require that CEOs and CFOs forfeit bonuses, incentive-based compensation, and profits from stock sales if accounting restatements result from material noncompliance with SEC financial reporting requirements.

Rules to limit and disclose conflicts of interests for stock analysts are included in the legislation. There is a concern that firms pressure their analysts to provide favorable reports on current or potential investment banking clients. This provision would provide protection to those individual investors who often depend on analysts for making investment decisions without being aware of the potential conflicts of interest that the analysts may have with companies whose stock they evaluate.

The Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act also authorizes additional appropriations for the Securities and Exchange Commission in order to provide the resources necessary to protect investors. According to the General Accounting Office, approximately 250 positions were vacant last year because the Commission was unable to attract qualified candidates. Additional funding is needed to attract and retain qualified employees. S. 2673 would authorize appropriations of $776 million for the Commission, which is much greater than President Bush's original budget request of $467 million. I am pleased that the President is moving closer to supporting the dollar amount included in the bill.

I also want to thank Chairman SARBANES for including an amendment in the bill which I have worked closely with the Committee staff in developing. The amendment would require the General Accounting Office, GAO, to conduct a study of the factors that have led to consolidation in the accounting industry and the impact that this has had on the securities markets. Since 1989, the Big 8 accounting firms have narrowed down to the Big 5 and may soon become the Final 4. This study is necessary to evaluate the impact that consolidation has had on quality of audit services, audit costs, auditor independence, or other problems for businesses. In addition, the study is necessary to determine what can be done to increase competition among accounting firms and whether federal or state regulations impede competition.

I am pleased that the Senate has worked in a strong bipartisan fashion to strengthen this bill. Extremely valuable amendments have been added to the original committee bill. In particular, the LEAHY and BIDEN amendments strengthen penalties for corporate fraud. These two amendments will help provide much needed additional protection for investors and retirement plan participants.

I encourage my colleagues to support the Public Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002 to restore public trust in the accounting industry and the financial markets.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise to offer my support and cosponsor an amendment to S. 2673 offered by the senior Senator from New York, which would prohibit all loans by a corporation to its directors or executive officers.

Among the abuses committed by senior executives and directors at companies such as WorldCom, Enron, and Global Crossing is the practice of issuing large, favorable loans to those executives and directors.

Those loans can create conflicts of interest that limit that the ability of outside directors, in particular, to voice their criticism of the institution.

Many years ago, I served on the board of directors of a bank, and noted that at the time, several of the directors had hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of outstanding loans at that bank.

At the time, this occurred to me to be wrong, and I could not understand why these directors did not take out loans at another bank, thereby avoiding any conflicts of interest.

The only conclusion I could draw was that the loans to these directors were either easier to procure or made on more favorable terms than loans from another bank would be.

I see no justification for providing loans to corporate directors or executive officers. The goal of the reforms that we are currently debating should be to create an environment in which outside directors and major corporate officers act in as pure and honest a manner as possible.

They should not enter into any appearance of conflict, such as the conflict that occurs when the corporation that they serve extends them a personal loan.

When an individual investor chooses to buy a stock, he or she does so with the full knowledge that it might turn out to be a bad investment. The stock may appreciate in value, but it might also go sour.

Anyone who makes that investment knows that the only way to be sure not to lose any money is to keep the money in cash or buy a T-bill.

But that is not the way it worked for the CEOs and directors of some of the largest public companies in this country.

For example, Bernard Ebbers, the former CEO of WorldCom, took out $430 million in loans from his company between September 2000 and the end of 2001.

When the SEC began investigating WorldCom earlier this year, $343 million in loans were still outstanding, most of which may never be recovered by WorldCom's investors.

Those loans to Ebbers are far from unique in corporate America today. One of the most egregious examples of this type of abuse in recent months is the disclosure of $3.1 billion in loans extended to family members and affiliated business interests of the Rigas family by Adelphia Communications, a publicly traded company controlled by the Rigas family.

These loans were never disclosed to shareholders, and were apparently used to shore up a wide variety of business deals involving Rigas family members, including a golf course and an infusion of cash into the Buffalo Sabres hockey team.

On July 9, President Bush went to Wall Street and called for, among other things, "an end to all company loans to corporate officers."

I believe that the President was right, and have cosponsored this amendment with that goal in mind.

Investors have a right to know exactly how much of their dividends are going to pay for excessive pay packages. They also have a right to expect that the board of directors is truly independent and that no directors are tied too closely to the corporation they serve because of loans they have received from it.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in support of the legislation we are considering, S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002.

Last fall, we watched as a company once in the top 10 of the Fortune 500 imploded from the weight of its own complex efforts to mask debt and hide losses. We watched as the company stock-laden retirement plans of Enron's loyal employees dwindled by $1 billion. Meanwhile, company executives cashed out their own shares while these employees were barred from doing so. And finally, in congressional hearings, we watched and listened as former Enron executives either chose to remain silent, or pointed fingers of blame at everyone's actions except their own.

Tragically, the bankruptcy of Enron was no anomaly in the business sector. Rather, it was only the beginning. It ultimately proved to be a watershed event, as several other companies have reevaluated their own business and accounting methods, and found significant indiscretions. Global Crossing, a telecommunications company, is being investigated by the SEC and FBI in regard to questionable accounting practices used to artificially inflate revenue. Adelphia Communications, a cable company, is now in bankruptcy proceedings due to investigations by the SEC and two federal grand juries for off-balance sheet loans to the company's founders.

More recently, Xerox announced that it would restate 5 years of results which could affect the true nature of what had been reported as $6 billion in revenues. And on June 25, WorldCom announced that it had misrepresented $3.8 billion in expenses over five quarters, therefore allowing the company to report financial gain, when in reality, the company was experiencing a net loss.

While the downward spiral of each of these companies was unique, common threads are woven through each of their failures. First, the insistence by executives that, above all else, stock price remain high was an integral part of the creation of the financial woes of each company; in essence, this short-term focus compromised the long-term viability of these entities.

What has also been disturbing as these revelations have come to light is the role played by the so-called independent auditors of the companies under investigation. While the accountants are not the sole perpetrators of the financial deception that has occurred, the apparent lack of scrutiny of the financial statements of the aforementioned companies has created an inherent mistrust in the accuracy and integrity of the true nature of corporate earnings.

Furthermore, the practice of allowing auditing companies to perform non-audit services can have the ultimate effect of allowing such companies to audit the work of their own personnel. This practice defeats the purpose of having an unbiased entity objectively reviewing the merits and accuracy of financial statements.

The legislation we are considering in the Senate includes crucial provisions that will play a pivotal role in restoring confidence in our market system, and enhancing the public and private sector controls that are in place to monitor the relevant entities. The legislation creates a Public Accounting Oversight Board, which will be an entity solely focused on companies that audit and account for publicly traded firms. This oversight authority will include the ability to investigate and punish any wrongdoing by companies under SEC jurisdiction as well as their auditors. The bill also disallows simultaneous auditing and consulting, while providing for the Board to approve certain exceptions to non-specified non-audit services under this rule.

The pending legislation also makes important strides in ensuring that any gain made by company executives be subject to retrieval if the company has to prepare an accounting restatement due to certain noncompliance with SEC regulations. As Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill so aptly states in response to the actions of Enron executives, "I really do believe that the CEO is in effect the steward for all the people who work in their organization. And that with that responsibility goes a commitment that the people come first and that the practices are open and above board and without reproach." These executives should not be able to leave their beleaguered companies, pockets stuffed with profits from cashed out stock options, while investors and employees suffer the consequences of questionable company practices.

With the unanimous passage of the Leahy amendment, the Senate recognized the need to strengthen penalties for the punishment of those involved in corporate crime. For example, the amendment created a new felony for persons involved in the destruction of evidences—to address in the future such indiscretions as the document shredding perpetrated by Arthur Andersen's Enron Audit team. In addition, the Leahy amendment grants important whistleblower protections to company employees—like Enron's Sherron Watkins—who bravely report wrongdoing occurring within their own corporation.

The bottom line is that integrity and trust are at the core of a successfully functioning market system. These recent business scandals have severely damaged this foundation. And as with any foundation in disrepair, leaving unaddressed the damage caused by lost faith in the system will lead to continued instability, or worse.

Therefore, we in Congress have an obligation to do what we can to maintain and build investor confidence and faith in our free market system. I believe that the legislation we are considering today is a crucial first step toward that end, as well as ensuring the full rebound of our floundering economy.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002.

Nearly every day, it seems, the front pages of our newspapers are awash in stories about the latest corporate accounting scandal. Just 3 weeks ago we learned that WorldCom hid $3.8 billion in expenses in the last five quarters alone.

And WorldCom is merely the latest member of an increasingly large group of public corporations that have knowingly deceived shareholders, directors, and, in some cases, their own auditors. WorldCom, Enron, Tyco, Global Crossing, Xerox—the list goes on and on.

Much attention has been focused on the huge sums that CEOs and other senior executives have extracted from these companies in the form of incentive pay, but even those large sums pale in comparison to the total shareholder value that has been destroyed as a result of these disclosures. At its peak, WorldCom's market capitalization exceeded $190 billion, making it, for a time, the most valuable telecommunications services company in the world. Now, WorldCom shares are effectively worthless.

Despite a slowdown in the telecom industry, some of the value of those shares might have been preserved had its executives relied on sound management, instead of deceptive accounting, to make their numbers.

Who will suffer most from the immense value decline associated with WorldCom and other companies that have deceived their investors? Not the senior executives, most of whom have stashed away enough of their pay to let them spend the rest of their days in comfort. The people who will really suffer are the thousands of employees whose retirement savings were proudly invested in company stock; or the millions of public employees whose pension funds held shares in these companies. Those are the people who will bear the brunt of this value decline.

CalPERS, the pension fund set up to invest the retirement savings of 1.3 million public employees in my home State, has estimated that it suffered a $580 million loss on WorldCom stocks and bonds. That means that the average California public employee lost over $440, not including any investments in WorldCom they may have held independently.

To give you some perspective on that amount, the amount of money lost by California public employees due to the WorldCom fraud alone is likely to exceed the entire sum of the tax rebate checks they received as part of the President's tax cut last year.

In fact, every American who invests in our stock markets will suffer as a result of these scandals, because every scandal further tarnishes the reputation of American corporate honesty for investors around the world. In recent months, those investors have pulled billions of dollars in investments out of our country, further reducing the value of stocks and weakening the dollar.

The only way that we can turn this culture around is by fostering a corporate environment that rewards honest management by senior executives and severely punishes fraudulent activities. That is exactly what would be achieved by the bill proposed by Senator SARBANES.

The Sarbanes bill tackles many of the major problem areas associated with recent corporate scandals. Most importantly, the bill would make it much more difficult for public companies to bypass or trample over auditors in attempt to produce inaccurate or deceptive financial statements.

For the first time, the Sarbanes bill creates a truly independent accounting oversight board, staffed with objective, unbiased overseers, who can enforce rules and prosecute violators without having to vet their decisions elsewhere. Unlike the Public Oversight Board, which depended on fees from the very auditors it was meant to regulate, this new board will be funded by mandatory fees paid by all public companies. These are fees that cannot be withheld at the whim of those who have the greatest interest in undermining the work of the board.

The Sarbanes bill does not stop at the creation of this new board, however. Rather, the bill strengthens areas of the law that have proven inadequate to prevent the fraudulent corporate behavior that has become so prevalent today.

The Sarbanes bill prevents auditors from controlling the entire financial reporting system at an individual company by both designing the internal audit system, and then purporting to offer an unbiased external audit. The bill will also stiffen the resolve and oversight of board of director audit committees by requiring, among other provisions, that all committee members be independent and that they be given free reign to question auditors without executive officers present.

But rather than rely solely on increased oversight, the bill moves to reduce conflicts of interest at their source, by requiring the CEO and CFO of a company that has had to restate its financial accounts to disgorge any bonuses or other incentive pay they received in the year prior to the misstatement.

Moreover, under an amendment sponsored by Senator SCHUMER and myself, company loans to executive officers are now prohibited, sharply limiting the types of "hidden" compensation that can be offered to executives without being fully disclosed to shareholders. Our amendment passed by a voice vote and will go a long way toward preventing the types of loan-related abuses prevalent at WorldCom, Global Crossing, and other companies now under investigation by the SEC for loan-related abuses.

When Senator SARBANES drafted this bill, he focused on the single reform that matters most: increased transparency. Unfortunately, we may witness more corporate failures like those of Enron or WorldCom. These are failures that are brought on by over-investment, the accumulation of excessive debt, or an ill-conceived belief in markets or services that never live up to expectations.

What we cannot abide by, and what the Sarbanes bill goes a long way toward preventing, is the ability of senior executives to hide those bad decisions in misleading financial statements. By ensuring true auditor oversight, creating meaningful penalties for senior executives who defraud investors, and putting in place new disclosure requirements, this bill will dramatically increase the quality and timeliness of the information available to individual investors.

The United States is blessed with the best-regulated markets in the world, and for that we have been rewarded with tremendous foreign investment and a leadership position in world financial markets.

A vote in favor of this legislation is a vote to strengthen our position and avoid a wholesale loss of investor confidence that would be perilously difficult to restore.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish today to express my support for S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002. I am pleased that the Senate is acting decisively to impose harsh, swift punishment on those corporate executives who exploit the trust of their shareholders and employees while enriching themselves. The recent corporate scandals demonstrate just how important it is to hold corporate executives accountable. I believe it is equally important for prosecutors to be provided with the tools necessary to aid in the investigation of these forms of fraud.

During this debate, our colleagues on both sides have consistently called for increased penalties for corporate fraud offenses. This week, as the Dow Jones index plummeted nearly 300 points—representing the biggest single day point drop since the week following the attacks of September 11 we voted unanimously to adopt a series of amendments that will strengthen criminal fraud penalties and create new criminal fraud offenses. I cosponsored an amendment with Senator BIDEN to enhance white collar penalties. And I supported an amendment offered by Senator LOTT, which incorporated the President's proposal by enhancing white collar penalties, supplementing existing criminal laws, and increasing the Security and Exchange Commission's administrative powers to enforce this nation's securities laws. I also supported Senator LEAHY's amendment, a measure I worked to improve in committee. This amendment includes new criminal and civil provisions that I believe will also assist in deterring and punishing future corporate wrongdoing.

Further, I am glad to see the Senate finally considering legislation that will overhaul government regulation of the accounting industry. I agree with my distinguished colleague from Maryland that there is an inherent conflict of interest between internal and external auditing. The same people should not be installing the internal control system, performing the internal audits, and then reporting on the financial statements. The external auditor sometimes has to be tough as nails, and willing to disagree with its client's top executives. It is hard to be the bad cop when you are also the personal trainer.

However, Congress cannot always second-guess the desires of investors. In some cases, stockholders, bondholders, and other stakeholders will be worse off if Congress imposes too strict a barrier between consulting and auditing. This is especially true for small businesses that may not be able to afford to hire both a consulting firm and a separate accounting firm. And, as the President has noted, in our fast-changing economy, Congressionally-imposed barriers between different business practices can end up becoming Congressionally-imposed barriers to productivity growth.

I think the bill before us represents an effort to strike a good balance between these two competing goals of auditor independence and business innovation. It prevents internal and external audit work from being done by the same firm, and it establishes clear lines of responsibility and accountability. At the same time, the corporation's independent audit committee will be permitted to authorize certain consulting services if they are convinced it is in the shareholders' best interest. This audit committee, consisting of members of the client's board of directors, will be required by law to be completely independent of the corporation itself. This will mean that if the CEO and other top corporate officials believe it is in their company's best interests to have their accounting firm help with, for example, tax consulting and preparation, the corporate officials will have to argue the merits of their case before the independent audit committee. That kind of independence makes good sense, and it makes good law.

The Federal Government needs to help investors whether banks, pension funds, or individual investors in their quest for accurate information about the financial condition of America's businesses. Doing so is crucial for our economic long-term health. While Enron's and WorldCom's financial shenanigans contain many differences, the similarities are far more important. These were both firms that borrowed too much money during the expansion years of the late 1990s. And when it started getting tough to make the debt payments, both firms tried to hide their financial difficulties through creative bookkeeping, cooked up at company headquarters. They succeeded for a time, but the combination of investor vigilance, media investigations, and government scrutiny are eventually bringing the facts to light.

If there had been real financial transparency, both current stockholders and potential investors could pierce the veil of bookkeeping to immediately see these companies' true financial situation. This may not have prevented the painful layoffs and tragic loss of retirement assets by thousands of employees. However, with more accurate and timely information, investors, directors, analysts, financial institutions, and others could have intervened earlier and helped to restructure these firms before all-out catastrophe threatened. When it comes to business information, knowing sooner is always better than knowing later.

And even more importantly, if corporate officials had faced the threat of serious jail time and the certain knowledge that their financial and accounting capers would be exposed to the world, they would have been much less likely to have overborrowed and underdisclosed in the first place. Mr. President, the bill on which we will vote today, on which Senator SARBANES and many of our colleagues have worked so hard, contains solid provisions that I believe will put real fear of serious consequences into the minds of corporate wrongdoers.

Does this bill represent a perfect solution to the corporate accountability issues presently facing our country? Of course not. I would have written a different bill in several respects. However, I believe that the bill is a good attempt to balance competing interests and different political philosophies. As the bill goes to conference with a House-passed bill that has some significant differences, I expect the balance to improve even further.

Strengthening corporate accountability is crucial to our nation's long-term welfare. If Congress and the President can act together to help increase corporate transparency and restore investor confidence, then businesses will be better able to raise investment capital. Greater access to capital will enable U.S. businesses to fund the groundbreaking research and to purchase the high-tech equipment that is the foundation of America's long-term prosperity. And Americans from all walks of life will reap the rewards.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I rise today as a proud cosponsor of amendment No. 4283 that is being offered by Senator LEVIN. The amendment says that the standard-setting body for accounting principles that is set up in this bill shall review the accounting treatment of employee stock options and shall within a year of enactment of this act adopt an appropriately generally accepted accounting principle for the treatment of employee stock options.

Unfortunately, this body is not going to get the opportunity to vote on this reform or the reform I proposed last week requiring the expensing of stock options. We want to help restore investors' confidence for the long run, but we are being denied an opportunity to do this. A simple vote on this amendment is all we ask. And yet, we are being denied, and that is truly regrettable. I see no reason that a vote should not be permitted on this amendment, but let's face it—the fix is in.

I want to talk more about the expensing of stock options.

Americans have heard from the President and practically every Member of the Senate about the vital need to restore trust and transparency in business practices so we can begin to repair investors' faith in the honesty of our companies and in our markets. We need more transparency on a company's books so that any person wanting to invest their hard-earned money has a true financial picture of the company they are planning to invest in.

This issue of expensing stock options is not going to go away. Look at what has just happened. Coca-Cola, a Fortune 100 company, just announced that it will begin in the fourth quarter to treat all employee stock options as an expense. And I believe more companies will follow Coca-Cola's lead. It is only a matter of time.

Before I yield the floor, I would like to read a quote from a July 22, 2002 Weekly Standard article, "Big Businesses Bad Behavior," in which economist Irwin Stelzer, Director of Regulatory Studies at the Hudson Institute, eloquently explains why governmental action is needed to restore faith in our financial institutions. The "opposition of important segments of the business and accounting communities to reform," he writes, "means that government must take on the burden of revising the institutional framework within which business operates—setting the rules of the game that will allow markets to do their job of allocating human and financial capital to its highest and best uses. As Milton Friedman, no fan of big government, has written, society needs rules and an umpire 'to enforce compliance with rules on the part of those few who would otherwise not play the game.'" I couldn't agree more.

I ask unanimous consent that the following articles be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BIG BUSINESS'S BAD BEHAVIOR

(By Irwin M. Stelzer)

No sensible person can quarrel with what the president told the Wall Street biggies when he addressed them last week. Crooks should be forced to disgorge their ill-gotten gains, and should go to a jail for extended periods. Enforcement agencies should be given adequate resources. Corporate executives should be held responsible for the accuracy of what they tell shareholders, disclose their compensation in annual reports "prominently and in plain English," and explain what their "compensation package is in the best interest of the company." Board members should be independent and "ask tough questions." Shareholders should speak up. Most important, chief executive officers should crate a "moral tone" that ensure the company's top managers behave in accordance with the highest ethical standards.

The quarrel comes not with what the president said, but with what he didn't say. In the game of matching his laundry list of reforms against the inevitably longer list generated by the Daschle-Leahy-Sarbanes-Gephardt crowd the president inevitably loses, as last week's unanimous vote of Senate Republicans for the Democrat's bill proves. Longer sounds better if you're just compiling a laundry list of items aimed at punishing politically unpopular corporate bad guys. Only if there is a conceptual framework within which specific reforms can be created and defended is there any hope that a sensible corporate governance system will emerge from the congressional legislation factory.

Start with the fact that it is important to distinguish the role of government from that of the private-sector institutions that monitor corporate America. The latter can be relied upon to act when the integrity of the system is threatened, not because these private sector players are a bunch of goodie-two-shoes, but for the more reliable reason that honest markets and accurate profit reporting are in their interest. Just as gamblers won't put their bets down when they know a wheel to be rigged, so investors won't put their money into shares if prices can be manipulated by inflated profit reporting or special treatment of insiders.

Hence we have a stream of quite sensible reforms proposed by the Business Roundtable and the New York Stock Exchange, some going beyond those being pushed by the president. And we have companies scrambling to adopt governance rules and accounting practices that will reassure investors that the game is not rigged against them. No CEO wants to see his company's stock battered by investors who fear that share values will evaporate as profits are restated to eliminate the imaginative counting of revenues (claim them now, before the customer pays or even considers paying) and of costs (capitalize rather than expense every outlay, regardless of the life of the item purchased). Plummeting share prices are dangerous to the careers of chief executives.

But, as the president recognized when he called for higher ethical standards, self-interest cannot be relied upon to produce honest business dealings unless that self-interest includes what Adam Smith called a "desire to be both respected and respectable," and such esteem is seen to flow not from "wealth and greatness" but from "wisdom and virtue." Which may be what Bush had in mind when he said that we need "men and women of character, who know the difference between ambition and destructive greed" to lead our major corporations. And it may be what he had in mind when, immediately after delivering talk, he returned to Washington to award the Presidential Medal of freedom—America's highest civilian honor—not to the nation's richest (Intel founder Gordon Moore may have been the one exception), but instead to folks who have enriched our national life with their sharp iconoclasm (Irving Kristol), gentle humor (Bill Cosby), and quiet devotion of family and good causes (Nancy Reagan).

Still, neither self-interest reform nor a new emphasis on business ethics can be relied upon to save capitalism from the capitalists. Immediately after the president's speech the White House was bombarded with calls from CEOs protesting his demand that they disclose their compensation packages in easily accessible terms. I well recall the reaction when, several years ago, I made a similar suggestion at a think-tank-sponsored meeting of top business and government officials. One captain of industry replied that he would not tell his shareholders how much he earns lest he encourage kidnappers (as if they would only become aware of his affluence if he revealed it in his company's annual report).

Nor did anything the president said persuade the accountants to call off their lobbyists, who continue to oppose reforms that would make their devotion to the accuracy of their audit statements unambivalent. Or convince CEOs of Silicon Valley and other high-tech companies to bow to Alan Greenspan's call for them to report their share options as the expenses they most certainly are. Again, I recall a discussion that followed a similar proposal I made several years ago. One CEO said that he couldn't place a value on these options for purposes of reporting to shareholders, even though he could value those same options for the purpose of deducting their cost from his profits for tax purposes. Another claimed that if he treated options as an expense, he would wipe out his entire reported earnings, an argument, I suppose, for refusing to account for almost any expense that constitutes a threat to reported profits—what might be called the WorldCom excuse. (For the economy as a whole, experts estimate that expensing of options would reduce aggregate corporate profits by about 8 percent.) Note that the issue is not whether companies, especially start-ups, should be allowed to use options to attract talented staff, but whether they should have to treat this compensation as an expense when reporting profits. As Greenspan points out, refusing to deduct the cost of options diverts capital and other resources from truly profitable to only apparently profitable firms.

This opposition of important segments of the business and accounting communities to reform means that government must take on the burden of revising the institutional framework within which business operates—setting the rules of the game that will allow markets to do their job of allocating human and financial capital to its highest and best uses. As Milton Friedman, no fan of big government, has written, society needs rules and an umpire "to enforce compliance with rules on the part of those few who would otherwise not play the game."

To keep rules to a Friedmannesque minimum, we need a conceptual framework for reform rather than competing laundry lists. The first step is to understand the limits of criminal sanctions. Yes, it makes sense for the Senate to insist, as it did unanimously last week, that the crimes perpetrated by some corporate managers and accountants be defined as precisely as possible. Yes, criminal sanctions can be used to make life miserable for those caught with their fingers in the till and to deter from evil-doing those for whom Adam Smith's "desire to be respectable and to be respected" is insufficient inducement to decent behavior. But, as law professors David Skeel and William Stuntz recently pointed out in the New York Times, "Criminal laws lead people to focus on what is legal instead of what is right. . . . In today's world, executives are more likely to ask what they can get away with legally than what's fair and honest." The Senate was pleased with itself for toughening the laws under which executives will operate, but criminalizing bad behavior is no guarantee of future good behavior—behavior that is not merely indictment-avoiding, but is efficiency- and wealth-enhancing.

Instead, policymakers should turn to that trusty guideline, "Get the incentives right." The problems we are facing stem from the fact that we have provided the four guardians of shareholder interests—auditors, analysts, directors, and corporate managers—with the wrong incentives.

Auditors know that success or failure in their profession depends not so much on the accuracy and realism of their audits, as on their ability to conduct themselves so as not to imperil the flow of consulting fees to their firms. Enron paid Arthur Andersen as much or more in consulting than in auditing fees; Andersen's $12 million in consulting fees from WorldCom dwarfed its $4 million audit fee. It would have taken a brave auditor indeed to fly in the face of these clear incentives and tell Enron's management that placing some item off-balance-sheet might be technically legal, but would obscure the company's true financial condition, or to insist on access to documents that might have revealed WorldCom's recording of current expenses as capital investments. Rather than rely on such strength of character, some 70 percent of the directors surveyed by McKinsey & Co. now say they will in the future oppose the granting of such contracts, a policy that Arthur Levitt, Bill Clinton's SEC chairman, was unable to push through over the massed opposition of the accountants' lobbyists. All of which makes Bush's silence on this subject rather odd, and the Senate Democrats' insistence on a broader prohibition on consulting than is contained in the House Republicans' bill more likely to get the auditors' incentives lined up with shareholder interests.

Once those incentives are in place, other provisions of the House and Senate bills become unnecessary. Both bills call for still more regulation of auditors, and create still another regulatory body to set and oversee accounting standards. One need not be an apologist for the accounting profession to suggest that such a move would merely continue the failed practice of attempting to control auditors by closely supervising them. There is no reason to believe that such supervision will be any more successful in the future than it has been in the past, especially since in the end auditors are required only to say that they followed often complex and arcane rules that necessarily involve the exercise of judgment.

Instead of such ongoing regulation, including half measures that merely restrict auditors from engaging in some specified form of consulting activity, let's get the incentives right by complete, mandated separation of the audit and consulting businesses, as John McCain proposes. Lead the CPAs not into temptation, and reliance on porous Chinese walls becomes unnecessary. Auditors will compete for business on the basis of their ability to provide a product that gives investors confidence in the transparency and accuracy of the company accounts, with the uplifting effect that will have on the prices of their clients' shares. (Audit firms are unlikely to compete on price, since the risks associated with the audit business have risen. There are only four major firms, and rotation of auditors on something like the five-year basis favored by Senate Democrats, although necessary to prevent over-identification between client and auditor, is a classic cartel market-sharing arrangement—all legal, in this case.)

Analysts are another group who now face perverse incentives. Investors may have been naive to believe that these students of income statements, balance sheets, and other economic data would provide honest advice about a company's financial condition and prospects. But they had a right to such a belief, since the commissions they pay their brokers are supposed to be in return for such advice. Along comes New York State Attorney General Eliot Spitzer and revelations that some of these supposed agents of the shareholders' interests are recommending stocks they know to be "shitty" in order to win investment banking business for their partners and increased compensation for themselves. All of this in the presence of Chinese walls erected to separate bankers from analysts. It took no Joshua-plus-trumpet to bring these walls down; the prospect of hefty banking fees was quite enough. Jack Grubman, the Salomon Smith Barney (a division of Citigroup) analyst famous for his enthusiastic recommendations of WorldCom stock, last week told the House Financial Services Committee, "No one can sit here on Wall Street and deny to anybody on this committee that banking is not a consideration in the compensation of analysts of a full-service firm." Forget the double negative: Grubman was conceding that part of his salary, which reached $20 million per year, came from the $140 million in underwriting fees that his firm received from WorldCom over the past five years.

Again, get the incentives right. One way, now preferred on Wall Street, is to write contracts that make analysts' compensation independent of the fees flowing into the investment banking divisions of the large firms. But just how analysts can prosper if the banking division isn't earning enough to pay the rent is unclear. Besides, unless analysts suddenly become willing to issue "sell" recommendations just when their investment banking partners are pitching a company for business, this proposed reform is unlikely to be effective, especially after the current heat is off and congressional attention turns to other matters. True or not, bankers believe that CEOs, being human (yes, most are), are likely to take into account what a firm's analysts are saying about their stock when selecting an investment banker. It would be an unusual CEO, indeed, who would cheerfully receive an investment banker after reading in the morning papers that the banker's analyst-partner had just downgraded his company's stock from a "buy" to a "sell." Many investment bankers—not all, but many—will find ways to persuade their partner-analysts to be team players. Banking fees are large enough to give them an enormous incentive to do just that.

So, let's get the incentives right and mandate a separation of the investment banking and stock-picking businesses, another McCain proposal. Analysts would then have an unambiguous incentive to make the best "buy" and "sell" recommendations they possibly can, so as to build reputations that will attract investors to them. And investors will get something in return for their commission dollars—honest advice from men and women expert in the analysis of corporate financial data, competing with one another to attract clients by creating a track record of picking winners.

Which brings us to Directors. Again, we have a case of skewed incentives. Directors are hired by managers to protect shareholders from, er, those same managers. To make sure the directors remain friendly, executives often shower them with perks and consulting fees, the continuation of which depend on the goodwill of the CEOs they are supposed to be supervising. It is the rare director who chooses to feast on the hand that feeds him, not merely because he is venal, but because the courtesies lavished upon him genuinely persuade him that the CEO is a decent chap, deserving of every million he is paid.

To get the incentives right, directors must be selected by vigorously participating shareholders, most especially institutional shareholders, from a slate of demonstrably independent people who, although well compensated, have reputations worth protecting. Nominations for that slate should come from sources other than the company management, to avoid a you-sit-on-my-compensation-committee-and-I'll-sit-on-yours, selection process. The directors should not accept anything within the gift of the CEO; their directors' fees should be compensation enough, and high enough to provide an incentive to accumulate a record that will persuade shareholders to reelect them at reasonably regular periodic intervals—perhaps throwing in term limits to make sure that directors and management don't develop too cozy a relationship.

Finally, we come to the CEO's and top managers. How to create incentives to induce managers to act in the interests of the shareholders who own the business has bedeviled students of corporate governance ever since 1932, when Adolph A. Berle Jr. and Gardiner C. Means published their classic "The Modern Corporation and Private Property," detailing the potential for managerial abuse created by the separation of ownership from control of large corporations. Managers placing self-interest above the interests of owners were immune to retaliation by far-flung and essentially powerless shareholders. That situation was partially corrected when Mike Milken and his debt-financed corporate raiders snatched control of many companies from the worst abusers of shareholders' interests, grounded fleets of corporate jets, sold off hunting lodges, and generally sweated the fat out of expenses—a wonderful example of markets working to correct abuses that seemed beyond the reach of regulators.

But nowadays there aren't many people who want to be like Mike, so it is incumbent on policymakers to get managers' incentives right. President Bush's proposal for publication of compensation arrangements in an accessible format would be a step in the right direction, its effectiveness attested to by the howls of outrage it produced from some CEOs. Truly independent boards, created along the lines described above, would be another advance, since compensation committees not beholden to corporate managements are more likely to relate pay to performance than the supine committees that now exist on some boards. Add in the requirement that options be treated as profit-reducing expenses—another McCain proposal that so horrified senators that it has for now been derailed—and you will have a new parsimony that will keep salaries to levels commensurate with effort and performance. Under such a regime, executives would have a clear incentive to spend their time creating efficiencies and new markets, rather than figuring out how to cash in options, and how to persuade their boards to revalue options if poor company performance has driven the stock price below the price at which the options may be exercised, rewarding executives whether or not they have delivered long-term value for shareholders.

This may sound like an awful lot of regulation. But it is of a special, self-liquidating sort. If we adopt policies that get the incentives of all the players right, government can then get out of the way so that the various actors can do their thing—audit, advise on investments, monitor management performance in the interests of owners, and manage the company in a world in which managers' interests coincide with those of shareholders. The right kind of regulation can be a model of minimal—and effective—government.

LEADING THE NEWS: COKE TO EXPENSE EMPLOYEE OPTIONS

MOVE MAY SPUR OTHERS TO FOLLOW AND COULD SHAPE CURRENT TALKS IN SENATE

(By Betsy McKay)

Atlanta—Coca-Cola Co. said it will begin in the fourth quarter to treat all employee stock options as an expense, a move that could accelerate debate in corporate boardrooms over whether to adopt that accounting practice.

The beverage company's decision also could shape the outcome of discussions today in the Senate over whether to instruct a new accounting-oversight board to study the fate of stock options—in particular, whether they should be expensed as other forms of compensation.

Republicans tried Friday to block the measure, offered as an amendment to an accounting-overhaul bill. But Democrats say they will try again before final passage of the underlying accounting bill, expected late today.

"We are in a new environment," Gary Fayard, Coke's chief financial officer, said in an interview. "There had been a loophole in the accounting, and we thought it was the right time to step up to the plate."

"There's no doubt that stock options are compensation," he added. "If they weren't, none of us would want them."

Coke said its decision, announced yesterday morning, will reduce earnings only slightly—by about a penny a share—for 2002. That reflects the fact that Coke doesn't grant options as extensively as do some other companies. And while Coke isn't the first public concern to make the accounting change—Boeing Co. and Winn-Dixie Stores Inc. in recent years began calculating stock options as an expense—its high profile could prompt other businesses to consider calls from investors, regulators and politicians for greater financial candor.

Last week, AMB Property Corp., a San Francisco-based owner of industrial real estate, also said it would record stock options as an expense.

Proponents of expensing say options are compensation and should be treated as such, especially since generous option awards dilute the value of shares outstanding. Opponents say options are difficult to value and argue that expensing would confuse investors, not enlighten them. Changing accounting rules would reduce earnings at some companies.

In 1993, the Financial Accounting Standards Board tried to mandate the expensing of options but retreated in the face of stiff opposition from business leaders and Congress. The issue flared up again after Enron Corp's demise late last year and has taken on new life with recent disclosures of earnings misstatements at WorldCom Inc.

Coke's Chairman and Chief Executive Douglas Daft raised the idea of recording stock options as an expense about two months ago, Mr. Fayard said, as news of financial scandals continued to unfold. About 10 days ago, with lawmakers calling for tougher accounting standards, Mr. Daft fielded the idea in phone calls to Warren Buffett and some other Coke directors. Mr. Buffett, Coke's largest shareholder, for years has been an outspoken proponent of expensing options.

Mr. Daft pressed ahead with his proposal to make the accounting change last week after President Bush called in a speech for better corporate governance. Mr. Bush didn't embrace the idea of forcing companies to expense options, but numerous economists and financial experts, including Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan, have endorsed the move, and growing investor unease sent stocks plummeting last week.

Mr. Daft convened a meeting at 7 a.m. Thursday in Sun Valley, Idaho, where he and several other directors were attending a conference. The discussion, over breakfast in the condominium of director Herbert Allen, was short. It wasn't hard to win the directors' support; Mr. Buffett, in particular, applauded the move.

"Our management's determination to change to the preferred method of accounting for employee stock options ensures that our earnings will more clearly reflect economic reality when all compensation costs are recorded in the financial statements," Mr. Daft said in a statement. A spokeswoman said he wasn't available for further comment.

"I'm delighted," Mr. Buffett said in a telephone interview. "This tells shareholders what really happens in terms of costs." The new plan, he said, also eliminates bias in structuring compensation packages, encouraging Coke to design packages that fit its and employees' needs without regard for accounting.

While Mr. Buffett said he never pushed Coke to treat stock options as an expense, he said he did encourage the company last week to take a further step and use independent investment banks to determine the fair value of stock options that Coke grants. The move is intended to ease concerns over whether options that are expensed are being properly valued. Coke will ask two investment banks, Goldman Sachs & Co. and Citibank, to price options, and will expense the option value based on the average of those firms' quotes.

Coke said stock options will be expensed over the period in which they vest, based on the value the day they are granted. Coke's 2002 options plan authorizes as many as 120 million shares, or 4.8% of the company's share outstanding. The company usually issues 25 million to 30 million shares a year, however.

For 2001, Coke's top five officers received options on 3.7 million shares, including options on one million shares for Mr. Daft. About 8,200 of Coke's 38,000 employees received options during 2001.

Mr. Buffett predicted Mr. Daft's move could make him "unpopular" among other CEOs, but he also said that while business leaders had managed to quash efforts in 1993 to force expensing of stock options, the current environment could force them now to accept it.

"I'm sure a few others will do it," he said. "It may be that good practices drive out the bad."

Sen. John McCain (R., Ariz.) issued a statement applauding Coke's decision and expressing hope that "other companies will follow suit."

Judy Fischer, managing director of Executive Compensation Advisory Services, in Alexandria, Va., said she believes other corporations will follow Coke. "If a corporation can do it without a lot of problems to their bottom line, I think a lot will follow suit," she said.

However, it wasn't clear how other companies will react, particularly high-tech businesses that rely heavily on stock options. A spokesman for Santa Clara, Calif., semiconductor maker Intel Corp., where all employees are eligible for stock options, said he couldn't comment on Coke's move. One lobbyist was skeptical. "I doubt just because one company made this decision that other companies will follow suit," said Ralph Hellmann, top lobbyist for the Information Technology Industry Council, a high-tech trade association in Washington. "Each individual company is going to make its own determination." Looking beyond 2002, Coke's Mr. Fayard said earnings per share will be reduced by about three cents in 2003, with the reduction gradually increasing to about nine cents a share by 2006, he said. But the change won't affect the company's cash flow, he said.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise first in support of our free market economy. The revelations over the last few months of corporate officials having betrayed the trust of their employees and their investors is simply unacceptable. These corporate officials must be prosecuted to the full extent of the law and if additional penalties are required, then we should enact them.

But let us not forget, that despite these terrible, unconscionable acts perpetrated by some CEOs on their workers and investors, the principles of our free market economy remain the envy of the world. These principles have allowed our economy to be the most productive, most innovative, most creative system, that has created income and employment only dreamed of in other parts of the world.

One of these principles is property rights. But it seems that some corporate managers have forgotten that the companies they run are not their personal property to operate however they see fit or for their own benefit. The exuberance of the 1990s that Chairman Greenspan warned us about and the extraordinary income and wealth generated during that period, allowed for unethical persons in our business sector to exploit this time of growth for their own selfish purposes and to bend the rules for their own benefit.

So as we pursue new rules to punish those who have betrayed a trust—and we must—let us not allow the pendulum to swing so far that it jeopardizes the innovation and vitality of our economic system for the future. Rather than working against the principles that make our economic system so great, our actions should affirm these principles.

I am angry, shocked and extremely concerned about the revelations that have emerged in the past 6 months concerning the accounting practices of a number of public companies. To operate efficiently our free market system requires a high level of honesty and trustworthiness among its participants, especially among its key decisionmakers.

In the long run our economy—our stand of living—reflects not only our inventiveness and hard work but our moral character. Corporate executives have to be worthy of the key role they play. With all their wealth and high position comes responsibility. Sadly, some executives were not worthy of this responsibility.

Restoring the public's trust is of paramount importance. America's system of corporate governance and its trust in our financial reporting mechanisms have been shaken and restoring this trust is of critical importance. It will take more than words to restore that confidence and trust. It will take something that I, Senator DODD and others have been lecturing on for many years, and this is something not easily legislated. It will take a renewed awareness of the ethics of responsibility. It will take a reaffirmation that "Character Counts."

Reaffirming that "Character Counts" means not only encouraging our young people to live by the six pillars—trustworthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, caring, and citizenship—but expecting that our corporate leaders adhere to these traits and conduct themselves accordingly.

Cooking the books has hurt thousands and thousands of hard-working Americans. American companies must adhere to the highest standards of public accounting ethics. Despite these abuses, as I have said our economy remains strong and the vast majority of CEOs are honest and abide by the rules. Unfortunately, a few bad characters have tainted the reputation of our enterprise system.

The President and the Congress are addressing reform. I will support these reform efforts that are aimed at regaining trust and confidence in our Nation's financial markets and ensure that American workers are protected from unscrupulous corporations. No violation of the public's trust can be tolerated.

But I also believe more can be done, and this bill before us moves us in that direction. I support:

Full and accurate disclosure: I endorse the SEC's proposals to require CEOs to certify that their financial statements completely and accurately reflect the true condition of the company.

Trust and accountability: Corporate leaders must be held accountable for any abuse of public trust. I believe that executives should be required to return moneys they received as a result of fraudulent accounting practices, as embodied in the Senate bill.

Independence: Boards of directors must exercise independent judgment and a substantial majority of board members must be independent of management.

Auditing reform: Strong oversight of the accounting profession is essential if we are to ensure independence of auditors and credibility of the auditing process.

Pension protection: I fully support steps that will protect the retirement savings of American workers. Workers should have freedom to diversify and monitor their own retirement funds, giving confidence that their investments will not fall prey to unethical executives.

I urge the SEC to move forward with the implementation of its proposed reforms. And, I strongly believe that the NYSE and the NASDAQ must proceed to improve their listing standards. I support the reform that works to strengthen our free enterprise system. It is our obligation as a Congress and as a country to ensure that the unethical few that are causing hardship for so many hard-working Americans, be swiftly brought to justice and face jail time. We will restore faith in our economic system for it is the greatest in the world. I support passage of the Senate bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, while I support the passage of this bill, I think we ought to recognize the role the Administration is already playing to deal with these serious problems of corporate responsibility.

I was pleased that President Bush announced last week his suggestions for corporate accounting reform. The President forcefully argued that higher ethical standards are an imperative to restore confidence in corporate America. Those standards should, in his words, "be enforced by strict laws and upheld by responsible business leaders" and that "corporations should not be disconnected from the values of our country."

I also support the President's executive order to create the Corporate Fraud Task Force. Combined with new criminal penalties for corporate fraud, this taskforce can help bring stability to our Nation's economy. The President has also asked the Securities and Exchange Commission to adopt new rules to make sure that auditors are truly independent from the businesses which they audit.

We also need to be sure the SEC has the resources it needs to carry out its other important responsibilities.

I am hopeful that the Appropriations Committee will be able to provide the necessary amount of funding for the SEC to hire the enforcement officers it needs and to acquire state-of-the-art technology that is necessary for the performance of its duties.

With the passage of this bill by the Senate, we will be able, in conference, to work with the other body to produce a good bill that deals effectively with the problems in this area of very legitimate concern to our country.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I want to compliment the majority leader for turning to the Sarbanes bill and the issue of corporate responsibility. I also want to thank Chairman SARBANES for his leadership on the impressive bill that he has produced in the Banking Committee.

So many times all that the public hears about Congress is about turf and partisanship. This comprehensive reform effort disproves those claims. Thanks to the leadership of the Majority Leader and Senator SARBANES, the bill that we are about to vote on is a tough, comprehensive reform package that enjoys broad bipartisan support in the Senate. It brought together the best ideas from many Senators, from many Committees, and from both parties.

From my standpoint, as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, this has been an opportunity to benefit once again from the wonderful partnership that we have forged between the Banking Committee and the Judiciary Committee. After September 11, our two Committees worked together to write the anti-terrorism provisions of the USA Patriot Act that dealt with money laundering. Here, with the 97-0 vote to adopt of the provisions of the Corporate and Criminal Fraud and Accountability Act, as a Leahy-McCain amendment to this bill, Senator SARBANES and I have again united the forces and expertise of our Committees. This time we have done so to craft comprehensive laws to deal with financial wrongdoing, and again done so with bipartisan support in both Committees. I think that the final product is better and more complete because of our joint work. Thank you Chairman SARBANES.

But the joint effort did not stop with Senator SARBANES and myself. Senators BIDEN, HATCH and the Minority Leader offered provisions that were also adopted by the Senate, adding aspects of the President's recent proposal. That is an impressive show of bipartisanship because those proposals were only made after the Senate had already begun debate on this bill. Despite the White House's refusal to help us shape our more comprehensive proposal, we did not hesitate to include the President's suggestions in our final product.

The bill was further perfected by Senator EDWARDS' thoughtful amendment dealing with the conduct of corporate attorneys. Once again, we were able to draw on the expertise of a particular Senator to enlist the help of lawyers in stopping corporate fraud, not designing it. In short, we started with a fine bill from Senator SARBANES, and have strengthened even further, never losing our strong bipartisan support.

We need to remind ourselves of the underlying reasons for the bipartisan support behind these measures. Enron brought it to light, but it goes deeper. It's about a basic fairness and equity that transcends party lines. It's about rewarding people who play by the rules and punishing people who don't. It's about the basic American ideal of treating all people equally under the law.

We cannot have a system where a pickpocket who steals $50 faces more jail time than a CEO who steals $50 million. The integrity of our financial system depends on accountability. The mounting scandals and declining stock market have damaged the integrity of our public markets and we must restore it.

I was proud that the Judiciary Committee, joined by the Majority Leader and a bipartisan group of Senators including Senator MCCAIN and others was able to make such an important contribution to this effort by contributing the provisions of S. 2010, the "Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act," as it was unanimously reported out of the Judiciary Committee in April, as an amendment to the Sarbanes bill. Both in Committee in April and again last week on the floor, not a single Senator from either party has voted against the provisions of the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act.

We worked hard to reach across party lines on this measure, and I hope that the House of Representatives acknowledges that fact. I was glad to see in last Friday's newspapers that Speaker HASTERT also endorsed the joint Sarbanes-Leahy measure after its adoption. I hope that the President can follow the leadership of Speaker HASTERT and support the Senate measure as this bill moves forward.

Recent events have served as a stark reminder that we need to reexamine our laws to make sure that they reflect our important and shared values of honesty and accountability. Enron has become a symbol for the torrent of corporate fraud scandals that have hit the front pages and battered our financial markets. Tyco, Xerox, WorldCom, Adelphia, Global Crossings, the list goes on.

The things that happened at Enron did not happen by mistake. They were not the result of one or two "bad apples." Senior management at Enron, assisted by an army of accountants and lawyers spun an intricate web of deceit. They engaged in a systematic fraud that allowed them to secretly take hundreds of millions of dollars out of the company. This kind of fraud is not the work of a lone fraud artist. Rather, it is symptomatic of a corporate culture where greed has been inflated and honesty devalued.

Unfortunately, as I have said and as the experts warned at our February 6 hearing, Enron does not appear to have been alone. Each week we read of corporation after corporation that has engaged in misconduct, and these are not small or marginal corporations. These are major mainstays of corporate America. The web of deceit woven by such publicly traded companies ensnares and victimizes the entire investing public who depend on the transparency and integrity of our markets for everything from their retirement nest eggs to their children's college funds. That is why this comprehensive reform is urgently needed to restore accountability in our markets.

The Leahy-McCain amendment to the Sarbanes bill, approved 97-0 by the Senate, provided important provisions to ensure just such accountability.

The Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act which I authored provides tough new criminal penalties to restore accountability and transparency in our markets. It accomplishes this in three ways:

punishing criminals who commit fraud, preserving evidence to prove fraud, and protecting victims of fraud.

Here are some of its major provisions as adopted by the unanimous Judiciary Committee in April and the unanimous Senate last week: It establishes a new crime of securities fraud, with a tough ten year jail sentence. It breaks the "corporate code of silence" by providing, for the first time, federal protection for corporate whistleblowers who report fraud to the authorities or testify at trial. It closes loopholes and toughens penalties for shredding documents as we learned had occurred at Arthur Andersen. It requires audit documents to be preserved for 5 years and provides tough criminal penalties for their destruction. It protects victims the right to recoup their losses by preventing fraud artists from hiding in bankruptcy or concealing their crime and using an unfair statute of limitations to hide.

With these bipartisan provisions and others incorporated, this bill we have produced is truly a comprehensive measure. It tightens regulation of corporate misconduct, but it now also provides an important deterrent to fraud artists. This bill is going to send wrongdoers to jail and save documents from the shredder, which sends a powerful and clear message to potential corporate wrongdoers "don't do it." As a former prosecutor, I have discovered that nothing focuses attention to morality like the prospect of a long prison sentence.

In the Senate, as we have been debating and shaping specific and comprehensive reform proposals, we had been trying for months unsuccessfully to get the President's support. The Administration had stayed on the sidelines during this important debate.

For whatever reason, perhaps the mounting scandals or the declining market, the President decided last week to speak out against corporate fraud. He spoke again today on our economy. I welcome his participation and hope that he will follow up his speeches by supporting real reform. It is amazing to me that with such broad bipartisan support and now on the verge of Senate passage, that the Administration has still not given a clear statement supporting the bill on which we are now about to vote.

Although I now understand that a White House official reportedly said that they agreed with the "goals" of this reform bill, I was disappointed that the President has not yet voiced his support for this bipartisan measure about to pass the Senate. Supporting the "goals" is a good first step but it is nonetheless a baby step. I read in the paper last week that the President does not want to "tip his hand." This is not a game of poker, however. This is the time for Presidential leadership with the integrity of our markets at stake. When there are specific proposals passing the U.S. Senate by an overwhelming majority of Senators from both parties and the Speaker of the House is supporting the measures as well one wonders what it will take for the President to express his opinion.

For those of us in the Senate, like myself, Senator SARBANES, Senator MCCAIN, Majority Leader DASCHLE, and others who have worked hard to come up with specific and bipartisan reform proposals, the "goals" have been clear for a long time. It is now time for comprehensive action.

While the President's proposal was short on details, some of it did sound familiar to those of us on the Judiciary Committee. Three of the President's proposals are found in S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act, which we adopted 97-0 in the Senate: One, The President advocates for strengthening the laws punishing document shredding and obstruction of justice. That is in our bill. Two, The President wants the Sentencing Commission to raise penalties for corporate misconduct. That is in our bill. Three, The President wants the Sentencing Commission to raise the penalties for the existing fraud laws. That is in our bill as well.

I am glad the President adopted three proposals from my bill, even if he will only say that he supports the "goals." As I said, we were also quick to write up his ideas into concrete proposals and include them in our bill. Unfortunately, the President's proposal failed to include many of the important provisions in the bipartisan Leahy amendment. It fails to create a new crime to punish securities fraud to directly punish corporate wrongdoers. It fails to provide whistleblowers with protection that will break the corporate code of silence. Remember, you can put whatever criminal laws you want on the books but unless there are witnesses who are not scared to help prosecutors prove what happened no one will be held accountable. It fails to protect victims of fraud by allowing them to recover their losses from a fraud artist who declares bankruptcy. It fails to establish a realistic statute of limitations to allow victims to recoup their losses when a fraud artist can manage to conceal his crimes for long enough, a change that has received strong bipartisan support dating back to the SEC under former President Bush.

As I said, I was glad to hear the President finally join this reform debate. Now is not the time, though, for half measures. We need comprehensive action. We were glad to include the President's proposals in the Senate bill, but we unanimously agreed to more comprehensive reform, including the Leahy bill.

Now I hope that the President will support such comprehensive reform as is found in this bill. I hope that his rhetoric is backed by action and that his generalities are backed with specifics.

Speaker HASTERT has now publicly supported the Sarbanes bill and the Leahy amendment. I hope that the President will support the bill's provisions as it moves forward to conference and will appeal to other Republican House members not to water it down. That will be the true test of his resolve to restore accountability to our markets.

It is time for action, comprehensive action that will restore confidence and accountability in our public markets. The Sarbanes bill, including the unanimously approved Leahy-McCain amendment incorporating the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act, provides just such action.

Let's pass this comprehensive bill and send the President a strong measure to sign into law. Congress must act to restore integrity in our capital markets to strengthen our economy.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that at 5:45 p.m. today all time postcloture expire, and that all the time available, not counting the time available for Senator BYRD, be equally divided and controlled between the two managers or their designees; that without further intervening action, the Senate proceed to vote on or in relation to the Carnahan amendment No. 4286, to be immediately followed by a vote in relation to the Edwards amendment No. 4187, as amended, if amended; that upon disposition of these amendments, the bill be read a third time, and the Senate vote on passage of the bill; that upon passage, the Banking Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 3763, the House companion, and that the Senate then proceed to its consideration; that all after the enacting clause be stricken and the text of S. 2673, as passed, be inserted in lieu thereof; that the bill be read a third time, passed, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; that upon passage of H.R. 3763, the Senate insist on its amendment, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate; that all succeeding votes in this vote sequence, after the first vote, be limited to 10 minutes; that there be up to 2 minutes of explanation prior to each vote, with no further intervening action or debate, with the 2 minutes equally divided in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, reserving the right to object, I would like to propound a parliamentary inquiry. Under this agreement, when 5:45 comes, we would begin to vote on the two amendments, and then vote on final passage, and no other amendment would be in order under the agreement; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I do not object. I think under this agreement we will have time to go back and forth. I would say that if it saves anyone time, we do not need a vote on the two pending amendments. We could do them by voice vote and proceed to final passage.

Mr. REID. We will be happy to discuss that after the UC is entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that upon disposition of H.R. 3763, passage of S. 2673 be vitiated and the bill be returned to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I want to begin by very briefly responding to Senator KENNEDY. I was somewhat taken aback at his suggestion that we set aside the two amendments and allow a nongermane amendment to be offered when, in fact, on a bipartisan basis, earlier this week, we decided not to deal with pension reform.

So I want to make it clear to my colleagues that I am perfectly happy to deal with pension reform. I think a bipartisan consensus is evolving on pension reform. But we made a decision, on a bipartisan basis, earlier this week, not to put pension reform on this bill. Its day will come. I want to make that clear.

Madam President, let me try to respond to several points that were made earlier today. I will try to be brief so that my other colleagues will have an opportunity to speak on my side of the aisle.

I want, first, to talk about stock options. Then I want to talk about the bill before us and where we go from here. And I will try to be brief on all of them.

First, let me make it clear that stock options are pretty important to the American economy. More than 6 million nonexecutive workers in America receive stock options every year. So when we finally get around to having a policy set on stock options—which I hope will be done by FASB, the accounting board, based on logic and reason—we need to take into account that 6 million people who are not executives of companies get stock options every year.

We want to be sure that we are not endangering their ability to own a piece of America with the reforms designed to deal with a few people who violated the law in some cases, who did not act honorably in some cases.

We want to be sure we do not deprive or preclude 6 million workers who are not executives—or people who did not violate the law, did not act dishonorably—from the ability to get stock options.

Let me also say, in areas such as biotechnology and the computer programming industries, that 55 percent of rank and file employees get stock options.

So I just want to urge, as we are going about our business here, with all this talk about people who have made millions, that we do not forget that millions of Americans benefit from this, and we need to be careful about what we are doing.

Let me say, secondly—and Senator BENNETT made the point today; I made it last week—if you listen to what is being said in this debate, a big point is made of the fact that in 1994 we saw an explosion in the use of stock options and low-interest loans and other non-conventional forms of executive compensation.

What happened to trigger that is in 1993, as a gratuitous provision in the 1993 tax bill, we changed the law so that if you are compensating an executive in corporate America and you pay that executive more than $1 million a year, you cannot count that compensation as a business expense. Of the top 30 companies in America, the level of compensation at that point was already substantially above the million-dollar mark. So because of what Congress did in 1994, having passed a law that said you could not pay people with a paycheck above a certain level and have it count as a business expense, we should not have been surprised that accountants and financial planners and people who were smart enough to make over $1 million a year found other ways to receive compensation.

So I want to make it clear that the point I am making is, if you are looking for somebody to point the finger of blame at here—and many people are trying to do that—I think Congress is a good institution to point at because Congress eliminated the ability of companies to pay their executives the old-fashioned way.

A lot has been made about who is at fault in all this. I would just simply make the following points. If somebody said to me: I know you don't know what caused all these current problems, but tell me; I am going to force you to tell me what you think the cause was. I would say: The inadequacy of GAAP accounting, which, in its current incarnation, works very well for old-style companies with assets that are written off.

GAAP accounting fits the steel industry perfectly. It fits the automobile industry pretty well. But the problem in the 1990s—when productive power became knowledge, when companies with relatively little in the way of assets gained huge market caps because of people's assessment of their know-how and the technology embodied by the company—was that GAAP accounting did not keep pace with the reality of the world that we live in today and that we lived in the 1990s.

It is very complicated to try to figure out what the values of these companies actually are by any conventional method where you are adding up their acquisition cost of assets and depreciating those assets.

This created a giant void in GAAP accounting in the 1990s, and people pushed the envelope within that void. In some cases, it appears they violated the law; in other cases, they have certainly violated standards of ethics.

Nothing we are doing in this bill is going to solve the problem in GAAP accounting. I am confident that over time we will find new ways of developing generally accepted accounting principles that don't rely on concepts such as goodwill, which don't make a lot of sense economically. But I do believe the bill before us is a step in the right direction.

There are differences of opinion. Before we go to final passage, I want to make clear what those differences are. Senator SARBANES and I both believe that we should have an independent accounting board. We both believe that that board should set and enforce ethics standards. We both believe that part of setting ethics standards is looking at auditor independence.

Senator SARBANES believes that we should write in law in some great detail what is entailed in auditor independence. I believe the problem with that is that while the law might fit General Motors, there are 16,254 publicly traded companies in America, and I am concerned that there is no law that Congress can write that will fit all 16,254 companies.

My second problem is, if you make a mistake in writing the law, then you have to go back and pass another law to correct it. If we had set out Glass-Steagall, separating banking and securities, by regulation, my guess is that by the mid 1950s, we would have concluded that that was a mistake, and we would have fixed it. But since it was written into law, it couldn't be fixed by regulation. Regulators tried to make marginal changes. We ended up with a very unstable system, and we were only able to fix it by law in 1999.

A second problem with writing the details of these different standards such as auditor independence into law is if you make a mistake, it is hard to fix it; whereas if you set up a board and, based on their expertise, they set out a regulation, if they make a mistake, they can fix it.

My final point on setting these standards by law is, one size fits all never works. What we need is the flexibility for this board to set a standard and then determine, based on the circumstance of the individual company, what makes sense.

I intend to vote for the bill on final passage. There are probably 10 things in the bill I am opposed to. But we are going to conference with a House bill that is very different. I am confident that in conference we can write a bill that will be supported by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President. I think we can strengthen the bill where it needs to be strengthened. I think we can provide flexibility where it is needed to bring in reason and responsibility.

Our objective has to be to fix what is broken in American capital markets and do it while minimizing the cost we impose on businesses, investors, and workers that did not violate the law and did not act in a nonethical manner.

The sooner we can get to conference, the sooner we can write this bill and see the bill signed into law. We have reached the point where we have a bill before us that addresses the major issues that we decided to address.

I know people have been unhappy about the inability to offer amendments today. The plain truth is, we have 97 first-degree amendments that have been filed and 24 second-degree amendments, and there was never any possibility that those amendments could be offered. We tried to come up with amendments that were agreed to and in the process, ended up excluding some people.

Let me conclude my remarks, at least for the time being, by congratulating Senator SARBANES on his leadership on this bill. Overall, he has done a good job. I do not agree with him on each and every part of it, but he has always been open. We have had many good discussions. I am confident that in the end we will write a bill that will be broadly supported and that will be in the interest of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the hour of 4:55 having arrived, the Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, there is a game being played with the critical issue of homeland security. It is a political game which could have disastrous consequences.

The White House is talking big about homeland security, exhibiting strong presidential interest in homeland security, trotting out proposals for a whole new Department of Homeland Security, and publicizing alerts.

It is strange, then, strange indeed that despite its public pronouncements on homeland security, the White House refuses to back the rhetoric up with resources.

Twice—once last year, and currently—large bipartisan majorities in both Houses of Congress have withstood veto threats from this administration and insisted on significant funding increases for homeland security.

President Bush's own appointees have all but begged the President's OMB Director for additional funds to fight the war on terrorism here at home. Many of these requests are urgent and quite compelling, yet the OMB has continually rejected a surprising number of these pleas. It is as if this administration has delivered an internal unfunded mandate to its own cabinet secretaries and Federal workers. Fight the war on terrorism on every front here in the homeland. Fight vigorously. Spare nothing, but make sure you do it on a shoestring. Protect our people here at home, but protect them on the cheap.

The Department of Energy proposed a total of $380 million to fund projects to enhance the security of radioactive materials here at home and overseas, including: better security measures to safeguard the transport of nuclear weapons within the United States; improvements in the ways in which we secure and store plutonium; cleaning up, transporting, and protecting low-level radioactive materials that could be used in a "dirty bomb."

For these and similar activities $380 million was asked for by the Secretary of Energy. But do you know what? That request fell on deaf ears at the Office of Management and Budget. Despite all of the worrying and nail biting about what would happen if some lunatic obtained radioactive material and detonated a "dirty bomb" on the mall in Washington or in some other large city, the OMB provided less than $27 million or about 7 percent of the Energy Department's request. Let me say that again: The OMB provided less than $27 million or about 7 percent of the Energy Department's request. This urgent supplemental bill contains $361 million for the Department to dedicate to securing these dangerous and vulnerable materials. That is $334 million above the amount requested by the President.

Another striking omission from the Bush supplemental request for homeland security involved efforts to deport those individuals who entered the country on visas that have now expired. Currently there are an estimated 8 million undocumented immigrants in the United States and only 2,000 interior immigration enforcement officers nationwide. This is a very dangerous situation. We know that terrorists live and plot their crimes among us. The Immigration and Naturalization Service requested $52 million for analysts to help find, arrest and deport high-risk individuals who have disregarded the departure dates on their visas.

OMB said no, nada, nix. It denied the entire request. The supplemental bill, now stuck in conference because of the administration's latest demands, contains $25 million that the Appropriations Committee believes the INS can usefully spend this year to address the need to locate some of these individuals. We also include $88 million for construction and equipping of border facilities, and for improved border inspections.

Last fall, OMB denied $1.5 billion in funding which the FBI requested in the wake of the attack on the twin towers in New York. Part of the FBI's funding request was for acceleration of a new computer system that will be at the heart of all communications within the bureau. Also included in the request were funds to enhance the internal security of the FBI's systems and procedures; for "cyber cops" and for hazardous materials personnel. The Congress provided $212 million above the President's request to permit completion of the new computer system much earlier than would be allowed under the Bush plan. In addition, we have included—the Appropriations Committee—$175 million for cyber security and counter terrorism in the supplemental that the White House is now delaying—delayed at the last minute last Thursday evening.

I could go on, but suffice it to say that this administration talks a good game about homeland security but it is unwilling to put its money where its mouth is.

Over this past weekend, during his radio address, the President said that, "Strengthening our economy and protecting the homeland and fighting the war on terror are critical issues that demand prompt attention." I agree. I only wish that the same message would be made clear to the Office of Management and Budget.

We have worked diligently in the Congress to get these critical homeland security monies out to federal and local personnel charged with protecting our people. Yet, we have been met by objection after objection by this administration.

In March, the President insisted he needed more money for national defense in an urgent supplemental. We gave him every dollar he requested. In addition, the House and Senate provided more money for critical homeland defense needs.

Instead of letting the House and Senate work out our differences and get the funding out, the White House started issuing veto threats before the Senate bill was even off of the floor. And last Thursday evening, just as all differences appeared to be worked out, the White House bomb throwers blew up the agreement with new demands.

It makes one wonder how much the White House really needs that defense money and it certainly causes one to wonder how serious this administration really is about homeland security.

Senator STEVENS and I have beseeched the White House over and over again to have the Homeland Security Director come before our Committee to tell us about the needs for Homeland Security. Our requests were denied. We held days of hearings with administration officials, local firefighters, policemen, mayors and governors. We did our best and funded the needs as testimony we heard indicated.

We wrote a good bill, and we were ready to convene the conference Friday. But our efforts were blown up by the OMB Director, suddenly and completely and with no warning until the very last minute, Thursday evening.

So needs go wanting in our military and in our homeland defense effort. There is no excuse for such irresponsibility. Such tactics are not in the best interests of our people. Hollow rhetoric on homeland security will never replace solid funding for these needs.

Political gamesmanship over issues so critical to our Nation and our people is irresponsible, arrogant and totally out of line.

I deplore the arrogance with which the good faith efforts of both Houses of Congress have been treated by this White House. Apparently the security and safety of this nation and its people have taken a back seat to gamesmanship by a White House that has no respect for the people's representatives or for the people's urgent needs.

Under OMB Director Mitch Daniels' stewardship, the Federal budget has gone from a surplus of $127 billion in FY 2001 to an estimated deficit for the current fiscal year of $165 billion. This is a swing of $292 billion in just one year.

The President is now threatening to veto the urgent national defense and homeland defense supplemental appropriations bill based on Mr. Daniels recommendation. Why? Because Mr. Daniels asserts that the bill spends too much money. Yet the conference report's spending levels that have been agreed to on a bipartisan and bicameral basis would increase the deficit by only about $600 million compared to the President's request.

Mr. Daniels believes that the critical port security, border security, firefighting, law enforcement, nuclear security and other homeland defense programs funded in the supplemental can wait because the bill would increase the deficit by about $600 million, when his failed fiscal policy has resulted in a $292 billion swing in the deficit.

The OMB Director seems to have forgotten, or perhaps never learned, that the appropriations process is about more than just numbers. Maybe at OMB, they can be bean counters, but here in Congress we are responsible for understanding what the numbers mean for the American people.

Mr. Daniels is cynically focused only on the bottom line. In an effort to make the supplemental bill look smaller, he has proposed rescinding the balance of funds under the airline loan guarantee program. He asserts that this would produce $1.1 billion of savings. Yet these funds under the law can not be spent. There are no real savings here. The Congressional Budget Office would not score savings for this proposal. This is the kind of phony accounting that is getting our nation's corporations in trouble.

This phony accounting is proof that Mr. Daniels does not care about homeland defense or about our national defense, or about fiscal discipline. This phony accounting proves that the President's veto threat is only about proving that he can force the Congress to hit some arbitrary bottom line. And the unmitigated gall of a high White House official coming to the Congress with an accounting gimmick at a time when that same White House is decrying phony accounting practices and scandals in the business community is beyond belief.

We should not delay this conference one more day. There are some in Congress who suggest that we should throw our hands up on this bill and wait until the next fiscal year to address these priorities. Such statements ignore the critical needs facing the nation for defense and homeland security. Our fighting men and women need this money to prosecute the war on terrorism. Dr. Dov Zakheim—the Defense Department comptroller—said in a briefing on Friday that the Defense Department is hitting a wall and that our people in uniform cannot be paid if the Supplemental Bill is not enacted by the August break. He said in that briefing that there is good will on Capitol Hill, and he is right. We are trying to do the right thing for our people here at home and our fighting men and women in the field. It is deplorable that good will, hard work, and good intentions can be trashed by OMB Director with reckless abandon. I do not think this President or this nation are well-served by tactics and gamesmanship when the stakes are so high.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a memorandum be printed in the RECORD which sets forth the highlights of the $7.2 billion for homeland defense in conference funding levels.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HIGHLIGHTS OF $7.2 BILLION FOR HOMELAND DEFENSE IN CONFERENCE FUNDING LEVELS

The tentative conference funding levels are $1.9 billion above the President's request. A summary of the $1.9 billion increase with examples of changes to the President's homeland defense proposal follows:

$701 million for first responder programs, $343 million above the President's request, including:

$150 million for firefighters, with the funds going directly to the local firefighters. The President did not request supplemental funds despite the fact that over $3.0 billion in applications from 18,000 fire departments were received for the $360 million currently available.

$100 million for State and local governments for improving interoperability of communications equipment for fire, police and emergency medical technicians, none of which was requested. The funding flows through existing FEMA and Justice program, rather than the new, centralized program at FEMA, proposed by the President for FY 2003. In addition, we are directing the National Institute of Standards and Technology to take the lead in developing uniform standards for interoperable State and local law enforcement, firefighting and emergency medical communications equipment.

$151 million for the Justice Department, $151 million above the President's request to give to State and local governments for improved training and equipment for law enforcement personnel (rather than through FEMA). Funds would also be used to improve the processing of security clearances for state and local first responders so that State and local governments can have information on potential security risks and to promote mutual aid agreements to coordinate the response of State and local governments to a terrorist attack.

$193 million, $134 million below the request for FEMA grants to State and local governments to update their emergency operations plans and to improve State emergency operations centers. $25 million is approved for a new, unauthorized program requested by the President, $25 million below the request. The proposal establishes a Citizen Corps within FEMA to promote volunteer service for emergency preparedness.

$54 million, $22 million above the President's request for FEMA's search and rescue teams. Currently, there are 28 FEMA search and rescue teams around the country that can be deployed to major disasters to assist local first responders in search and rescue operations. Funding will be used to upgrade equipment and training for responding to events involving a biological, chemical or radiation attack.

$37.1 million of unrequested funding for the National Institute of Standards and Technology for developing uniform guidelines for chemical, biological and radiation detection equipment ($17.1 million) and for developing best practice guidance for homeland security technologies ($20 million).

$15.9 million for the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center to expand training capacity for law enforcement personnel of the new Transportation Security Administration.

$739 million for port security programs, $465 million above the President's request, including:

$125 million for port security grants through the Transportation Security Administration. Last Fall, Congress approved $93 million of unrequested funds for port security grants. DOT received $692 million of applications for the $93 million we provided. Despite this, the President did not request additional funds.

$528 million for the Coast Guard for port and maritime security, $273 million above the President's request. Increased funds would be used to: expedite vulnerability assessments at our nation's ports, rather than follow the Administration's current plan to do the assessments over the next five years; add two new maritime safety and security teams; purchase a total of six homeland security response boats; and expand aviation assets as well as the shore facilities to support them.

$39 million for Customs to target and inspect suspect shipping containers at overseas ports before they reach U.S. ports. The Administration requested no funds for this activity.

$19.3 million, as requested for 34 additional personnel for improved background checks for truck drivers, for improved fraud detection for truck licensing and for improved fraud detection for driver's licenses.

$28 million of unrequested funding for the Safe Commerce program to develop better procedures for securing the contents of the 6 million containers that enter U.S. ports each year.

$251 million for bioterrorism funding, $251 million above the President's request, including:

$251 million for the Centers for Disease Control for improved and secure facilities, including toxicology and infectious disease labs, an emergency operations center and for information technology security.

$235 million, $209 million above the President's request to improve security at our nuclear weapons facilities (Energy requested the funds, but the White House did not request them). Funding would be used to improve security of the nuclear weapons stockpile, the national nuclear labs and our nuclear weapons plants. Funds are included to establish a 911 system for local first responders to call when confronted with nuclear hazards, enhanced funding for the National Center for Combating Terrorism, expansion of radiological search teams, and establishment of a National Capital Area Response Team at Andrews Air Force Base. Funds would also be used to consolidate nuclear materials sites so fewer locations need to be protected. Several requested items that are approved include funds to improve security on the electrical grid and funds to improve our capability to detect radiation.

$147 million, $128 million above the President's request for cyber security to help deal with the threat to Federal and private information systems. $82.6 million is provided to Justice to improve the investigation and prosecution of cyber crime, research to improve the detection of cyber crime, "data warehousing" and "data mining" to help expose cyber crime and for information sharing. $20 million is provided to Commerce to develop unified Federal guidelines and procedures for system security certification and to develop guidelines and benchmarks for secure information systems. Funding is also provided to improve wireless intrusion detection systems. $25 million is provided to the Energy Department to improve cyber security at our nuclear weapons plants and labs. $19.3 million, as requested, is included for NSF for scholarships to develop cyber security skills.

$120 million for border security, $78 million more than requested by the President, including $32 million for Immigration and Naturalization Service Construction to improve facilities on our nation's borders, $25 million for better equipment for the additional personnel that are being hired with the funds Congress provided at Fall and $5.7 million for the Justice Department to deploy to 30 more ports the IDENT/IAFIS system for rapid response criminal background checks by the INS of suspect aliens prior to their admission into the country. $57 million for INS for identifying and removing immigration felons from the country and for information technology enhancements.

$140 million of unrequested funding for the Department of Agriculture to enhance our nation's food safety capabilities and to protect against devastating plant and animal disease; to increase support for the Food Safety and Inspection Service, especially to ensure the safety of imported products; for improved security at USDA labs in order to secure bio-hazardous materials; funding for the Extension Service to provide emergency training for first response in rural areas; for FDA to improve the ability to inspect imported products such as medical devices that contain or are susceptible to being contaminated with radiation; and for vulnerability assessments and security improvements to protect rural water systems.

471 million of unrequested funding for airport security, including $150 million to insure that all small and medium hub airports have all of the funds necessary to implement the FAA's new airport security guidelines and that large airports have some additional funding to meet those requirements; $225 million is provided above the President's request for explosives detection equipment; $42 million is provided to improve the security of the FAA air traffic control system; $17 million is provided to improve airport terminal security for our nation's airports; and $7.5 million is provided to FAA to repair long range radar systems that the Department of Defense believe must be continued for several years because these assets are the only FAA radar capable of continually tracking aircraft with disabled transponders. In addition, $15 million is provided for improved air to ground communications for the air marshals, $4 million for radiation detection equipment for air cargo and $10 million is included for improved technology for air cargo safety and other cargo modes.

$100 million for unrequested nuclear non-proliferation programs. The best opportunity to stop a potential "dirty" bomb is to minimize the opportunity for terrorists to get their hands on nuclear material. Funds are included to protect fissile material abroad, purchase radiation detectors and to establish international standards for securing fissile material.

$108 million of unrequested funding for the Corps of Engineers to improve security at Corps water projects.

$92 million, $82 million above the President's request for the FBI for counter terrorism and information technology enhancements. In total, FBI receives $175 million when cyber security funding is included.

$50 million of unrequested funds for EPA to provide funds to local governments to conduct vulnerability assessments on our drinking water systems.

Examples of the remaining $273 million, most of which was unrequested include: $12 million for security at the Smithsonian; $17.7 million for the National Park Service for installation of bollards at the Jefferson Memorial and an in-ground retaining wall at the Washington Monument (requested by the President in FY 2003); $26 million for the US Geological Survey for high resolution mapping and imagery of the nation's major cities for use in developing vulnerability assessments of infrastructure and for expanded data storage capacity; $28.5 million to expand Secret Service capacity to combat electronic crimes; $23.6 million for the Legislative branch for Capitol Police and for the Library of Congress to cover part of the lost copyright fees from the slowed mail and for costs associated with cleaning up the Hart building after the anthrax attack; $19 million to improve response capacity to chemical attacks and for research on the impact of the release of toxic substances at the World Trade Center; $15 million for improved bus safety; $7.2 million for NOAA to develop back-up capacity for the supercomputers that support our weather forecasting system; $17 million for security and renovations of the Federal courts, $3 million above the request; and $44 million for the District of Columbia and the Washington Metro to improve security; consistent with the congressionally-mandated District emergency operations plan and FEMA's emergency plan for the National Capital Region, and to construct decontamination and quarantine facilities at Children's Hospital and the Washington Hospital Center.

The conference funding levels include $4.1 billion for the new Transportation Security Administration, $331 million below the request ($439 million of which is for unrequested items highlighted under port security and airport security).

The conference funding levels also include the $87 million President's Budget request for the Postal Service to improve protection of postal customers and postal employees from a bioterrorist attack, the $52 million President's Budget request for improved security of Federal buildings and $3.8 million for the Office of Homeland Security, $1.2 million below the President's request.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the committee. Let me begin by stating that which I have said on several occasions: We are all deeply indebted to the Senator from Maryland for the tremendous work he has done as the chairman of the Banking Committee in fashioning this legislation. He has worked with many of us to put this bill together. My guess is that, within an hour or so, we will overwhelmingly pass this bill before us. The chairman will be largely responsible for the result.

I also commend my colleague from Wyoming, Senator ENZI, and others who have worked very hard and have made it a bipartisan bill. Without his leadership, I don't think that would have happened. We may have had a partisan vote coming out of committee. That would not have boded well for the handling of this matter on the floor. So I commend him and others for reaching an accommodation that made this a strong, good bill.

Mr. President, I want to take a few minutes toward the close of this debate to urge our colleagues to be supportive of this bill, and I hope Members of the other body will support what we have done in the Senate.

The House passed legislation a number of weeks ago, prior to a lot of the events that have unfolded over the last 2 or 3 weeks. The argument today for a stronger Senate bill hardly needs to be made in light of events that occurred over the past number of days. Just today, the Dow is down some 40 points; Nasdaq is even. But over the last week, we have seen a continued decline in investor confidence and, of course, how that is reflected in the stock markets.

Investors, both domestic and foreign, are losing confidence in our financial markets. Investor trust is contagious. I also point out the corollary to that: Investor mistrust is also contagious. What we are watching is an erosion of trust that has begun and is almost impossible to stop once it gets rolling. Obviously, a lot of factors will contribute to stemming this tide of continued erosion of investor trust and confidence.

One of the things we can do is what we are doing today. Other people will have to add their voices to the debate. In my view, the President still has to be stronger than he has been. The House will have to rise to the occasion as we have endorsed in large measure what we have accomplished here, but our step, the first step, is the one we are taking this afternoon. Therefore, I think this is critically important.

This is not just another bill we are passing. This is far more important. In fact, the impact of how people react may be more important than the actual wording and language of the bill. It is critically important we have as strong a vote as possible.

If we fail to enact serious reforms—and this bill is serious reform—then I believe we endorse dangerous and discredited accounting practices that we have seen in the last 7 months alone cost shareholders and workers billions of dollars in their savings and pensions.

The Nasdaq has fallen over 37 percent, and the Dow has fallen 17 percent since the beginning of the year. Both Nasdaq and the Dow have dropped over 10 percent each in the past week alone. So Congress must act today, Mr. President, and act with a very strong voice to stem the rising tide of investor apprehension.

Passage of this bill will not and cannot of itself restore investor confidence. More must be done to win back consumer faith, but this bill is a critical piece of the overall effort and, therefore, it is essentially important we adopt it.

The part of the rationale of the original securities law in the 1930s was to increase public trust in America's financial markets and reliability of disclosed corporate financial information. Those laws over the past 70-plus years were a part of the modern economic foundation of our Nation, and they were designed to promote market efficiency and inspire investor confidence.

The resulting market confidence in the statements of financial health of publicly traded companies has paved the way for America's rise as an economic superpower.

I could make a strong case that the vote we are going to take today is for one of the most important bills impacting the Nation's financial markets since the 1930s. I say that because this legislation will fundamentally change the way publicly traded companies will do business and how the accounting profession performs its statutorily required audit function.

Much has been said about what this legislation does not accomplish. Briefly, I wish to focus my remarks on what it does do and repeat, we are not solving every problem with this bill. There are a lot of other issues that need to be addressed, but we have to begin the process, it seems to me, by getting the accounting part of this equation right, and we will not know ultimately whether we have done all we could, but I think this is a major step in that direction.

The bill, we now know, creates a new independent regulator for the accounting profession. The new body will act as a strong, independent, full-time board with significant authority to regulate auditors of public companies. The independent board will have clear authority for setting auditor standards and important investigative standards. It strengthens audit reporting standards for the accounting profession and contains significant prohibitions for accountants performing nonaudit services for audit clients, and it addresses the growing conflicts of interest that have been too pervasive throughout the accounting profession.

It provides for the first time an independent funding source for the Financial Standards Accounting Board, which I think is also extremely important and one of the major reforms in this bill.

There are additional dollars to provide the SEC with more firepower, if you will, to have more cops on the street so we might avoid some of the problems that have occurred in the past.

It also improves corporate governance requirements and improves corporate disclosures. The bill grants additional authority and responsibility to the audit committees of publicly traded companies.

Those are very important steps. The provisions contained in the legislation were carefully considered. We had 10 hearings, and by a vote of 17 to 4, the committee—the Presiding Officer being one—passed out this very fine legislation.

Additionally, during floor consideration of this bill, Senator LEAHY of Vermont added new criminal penalties for securities fraud. I commend him and strongly endorse the provision that won the overwhelming support of the Members. I hope it will add to our efforts of restoring investor confidence.

One of the last issues I would like to address, because it has been talked about so much, is the stock options issue, which involved a lot of debate and discussion of the last number of days. I commend our colleague from Michigan, Senator LEVIN, who has made an extraordinary effort to find a resolution to this issue we all can support. Obviously, this question inspires more questions than answers in many ways, but I commend him for his thoughtfulness and energy that he has brought to this debate.

The issue of whether or not stock options should be expensed is not an issue that is going to go away. It has to be addressed. I must admit, I am swayed by those who have a great deal of expertise in this area: Alan Greenspan, Warren Buffett, Paul Volcker, all of whom support the expensing of stock options.

I also recognize the danger when Congress begins the process of legislating accounting standards.

My friend from Texas and I have been involved in the past when there have been efforts by people who wanted to have us vote on some of these matters. I recall 3 or 4 years ago the debate was over pooling and purchasing accounting standards. I was very sympathetic to the arguments made by those advocating pooling. Certainly, if I were a member of FASB, I think I would have voted to allow that accounting standard to go forward, but the idea that the Senate might vote by 51 to 49 to pick one accounting standard over another is just ludicrous on its face. We do not want to set a precedent, in my view, of the Congress of the United States deciding what accounting practices ought to be. That is why we set up these boards to do the job.

The approach taken by having the Accounting Standards Board, the SEC, and others look at these matters and get back to us with their recommendations is the appropriate and proper way to go. Despite the temptation of others to want to legislate these matters explicitly on the floor, I remind my colleagues who have done that in the past, we inevitably regret doing it when we set precedents such as those and are only duplicated by other ideas that temporarily may be very popular, may be politically attractive, but may be terrible economics as well.

I applaud the effort to approach the stock option issue in the manner in which it has been addressed. I mentioned Senator ENZI. I mentioned my colleague from Texas as well. He and I worked many years on a lot of matters affecting the financial services sector of our economy. He does not have that many days left with us, and I am going to miss him. I told him that privately, and I tell him publicly that he is a valued Member of this institution. Whether we agree or disagree on matters he always brings a great deal of thought to the debate. He has been a fine member of the Banking Committee, and I have enjoyed my service with him for many years. I do not want to be too complimentary. I will reserve any final glowing accolades for when we have completed the process. We have a conference to go through yet.

Again, my compliments to Senator SARBANES.

What we are doing is important. This is extremely important legislation. I said earlier it may be more important what message it is we are sending; that we are not sitting in the bleachers, we are not just standing by as these events unfold. All Members of this Chamber can take great pride that the Senate of the United States has responded with a responsible bill we think is going to make a difference. I yield the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. What is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland controls almost 14 minutes, and the Senator from Texas controls just under 12 minutes.

Mr. SARBANES. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, my amendment requires that when corporate insiders, such as CEOs, trade the stock of the companies they manage, they must take reasonable steps to disclose those transactions to their shareholders. Current law requires that insiders file disclosure forms with the Securities and Exchange Commission. However, almost all of these forms are filed on paper and average investors have no practical way of seeing these disclosures. My amendment requires that these disclosure forms be filed electronically and that the SEC make these disclosures available to the public over the Internet.

This amendment also requires that corporations disclose insider transactions on their own Web sites. Investors have a right to know if corporate officers are dumping their stock. However, it is meaningless to require these disclosures if investors have no practical way of ever seeing these disclosures. Without this amendment, the disclosure forms simply sit in a file cabinet at the SEC in Washington. My amendment ensures that investors have access to this important information.

In the 3 years leading up to its bankruptcy, as Enron's top officers touted the company's stock, they sold more than $1.1 billion worth of their own holdings. Ken Lay alone sold more than $100 million worth of Enron stock while telling others to buy it. Enron's vice president of human resources, Cindy Olsen, was asked by employees if they should invest 100 percent of their retirement funds in Enron. She replied: "Absolutely." But within 3 months she personally unloaded $1 million worth of Enron stock. Had Enron employees only known, they might have been skeptical about this advice.

Investors are entitled to know how executives are acting with their own shares of their company's stock, and my amendment will ensure they will.

I yield my remaining time back to the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I yield 8 minutes to Senator ENZI, and might I say on my time, not his 8 minutes, that I want to thank Senator ENZI for his contribution to this bill, for his work from beginning to end. He has been a major contributor to the bill. He has proven that knowledge sometimes is a nice thing to have.

Our standard in Washington for objectivity is that you came in off the turnip truck and you know absolutely nothing and therefore you are objective, but I would say that Senator ENZI proves that it is nice every once in awhile to have somebody who knows what he is talking about. I think in many ways, large and small, the good things in this bill he has had a very positive impact on and the bad things in the bill he could not do anything about anyway—that was a joke, I would say to the Senator from Maryland.

In any case, I do want to congratulate Senator ENZI for all the contributions he has made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. ENZI. I thank the Senator from Texas for his gracious comments.

It has been mentioned several times today that there is nervousness in the stock market. There has been since we started debating this issue. I am very convinced that some of that is because people may read some of the amendments that have been suggested and recognize the legislative principle that, if it is worth reacting to, it is worth overreacting to. That ought to be enough to scare anybody.

We have had extensive debate. In fact, one reporter I talked to asked me if we were going to pass the McCain bill. The reporter talked about the accounting reform, and I had to say, no, that is the Sarbanes bill we have been working on. It is not stock options, in spite of the threat we had the other day.

We usually do bills the way we have done this one—with a lot of cooperative talk. We then make arrangements to develop the best possible outcome. The accounting reform bill before us is designed in such a way that we set up processes that people with accountability and responsibility and knowledge have to oversee. This bill does not tell them exactly how to do the details of accounting. It gives a fair process for accountants to be able to do the details of accounting.

In past years, we have decided we knew more than the people who had the expertise in the area of accounting and we have given them direction on how to do it. We almost made that mistake again. For instance, the McCain amendment was very simplistic. In one paragraph it told people how to do accounting that may actually take about 500 pages to explain. It would have caused the most massive restatements in the history of the United States, and restatements right now make everybody nervous. People ought to realize that some restatements are caused by changes in rules, not by people doing things wrong. So investors should always review restatements and determine the actual cause. I certainly hope it is never Congress, but I suspect it very well could be.

Another proposal that was going to be put before us was one telling FASB, this Financial Accounting Standards Board, exactly what they were supposed to examine next and what they were supposed to resolve in the next year. I have to say, FASB is working on some important things because they have been examining what Congress has been debating and they know in greater detail than we do what caused the massive restatements. I have to say, I do not believe it was stock options. It was likely a number of other things that need to be investigated.

This Financial Accounting Standards Board is diligently looking at these issues. They are looking at some high-profile rules in the areas of accounting for intangibles and accounting for special purpose entities. We have talked a lot about special purpose entities, and our hearings showed that they may have been a cause for the Enron collapse. Also, they are looking at accounting for guarantees and examining a final rule on liabilities and equity. They are also studying whether to create a rule on revenue recognition.

Those five things probably put one to sleep, but they are important to have resolved to make sure we do not have problems with companies in the future. We have to be careful now and in the days to follow that we ensure we use all of FASB's expertise, knowledge, and staff to resolve high publicity problems of accounting.

In this bill, we have made the Financial Accounting Standards Board more independent. We have provided them with independent funding so they no longer must beg for donations and perhaps encounter a conflict of interest. Through this process, we should not insert ourselves and say we are going to tell them exactly what is important.

I would like to thank Senator SARBANES and Senator GRAMM for the extraordinary work they have put into the process. Last week was an extremely difficult week. I thank them for the careful work and review they have done on every single one of the amendments that has been submitted, and the process they established to make sure this bill would not get out of hand, that it would not be an overreaction, and that when we finish it tonight and we can reassure America it is still okay to invest in the stock market.

We are fortunate on the Banking Committee to have these two people I consider to be the finest public servants in Congress. They have worked long and hard to assure that the product that came out was bipartisan and reflected the views of as many Members as possible. I also thank the members of the staff who worked diligently on the bill.

From my own staff, Katherine McGuire, Kristi Sansonetti, and Michael Thompson. From Senator GRAMM's staff, Wayne Abernathy, Linda Lord, Stacie Thomas, and Michele Jackson. And from Chairman SARBANES' staff, Steve Harris, Steve Kroll, Dean Shahinian, Marty Gruenberg, and Lindsey Graham and Vince Meehan. All of these staffers have spent many late nights and weekends working to build this legislation.

This legislation is badly needed. The markets have been in a steady decline for several months now. While I do not believe it is Washington's job to step in every time the market is in a decline, I do believe that when markets move as a reaction to illegal or unethical acts, then we have obviously not made penalties severe enough to dissuade this type of behavior. Congress had to act in this climate.

However, I would also like to comment on a few things happening outside of the real debate—namely the attacks on SEC Chairman Harvey Pitt. I have to say that Chairman Pitt and I may not always agree, but I believe the recent attacks on him to be unwarranted. Mr. Pitt has come under fire for having represented some of the accounting firms who have been criticized in recent restatements. I believe Chairman Pitt's work in the private sector is a great asset to investors. We need individuals who are willing to work in government who know and understand the industries they regulate. I do not want lifelong government bureaucrats monitoring these companies.

These restatements did not all of a sudden appear when Chairman Pitt was confirmed. In most cases, they begun during the late 1990s when companies became intent on not seeing the Internet bubble burst. I have to ask what was going on at the SEC while these companies were filling all of these false financial statements? What I imagine happened was that the companies, who are very familiar with who is at the Commission and where the resources are being devoted, thought they could take advantage of the situation because no one was paying attention.

Look at what has happened since Chairman Pitt has taken office. He has opened a record number of investigations of restatements filed by public companies. He has taken steps to break the relationship between research analysts and investment bankers. He has supported legislation that will increase penalties on corporate executives engaged in fraudulent behavior. And, he has indicated his support of this legislation, which by the way, I anticipate to be supported by the majority of the Senate later today.

The numbers are clear. In Chairman Levitt's last year as Chairman, 503 total enforcement actions were filed. Already this year, Chairman Pitt has filed 415. Officer and Director Bars for 2000 were 38—this year so far 71. Subpoenaed enforcement proceedings in 2000 were 9—this year 18. The numbers go on and on. My point is that Chairman Pitt seems to be left cleaning up the mess his predecessor left in corporate America.

I offer my support for these actions taken by Chairman Pitt. Instead of attacking him, I am more concerned about what was happening at the SEC that bred this climate where executives felt compelled to engage in this unethical behavior. Why weren't some of these actions taken three or four years ago? Did the SEC Chairman not see the potential conflicts that could arise out of research analysts getting compensation based on investment banking business?

Therefore, I would say that I commend Chairman Pitt for the work he is doing. From what I understand, the actions he is taking at the SEC have struck fear throughout the corporate community that they had better get their act together.

This legislation before us now will also go far in restoring faith in the markets. It will provide assurances to investors that we will not sit by and watch executives shatter the retirement dreams of workers while leaving themselves with millions of dollars. It will show the American people that we will work to make financial statements transparent and accurate to make sure they know as much about the company's financial state as possible.

The legislation builds an accounting oversight board to oversee the accountants who prepare financial statements of public companies. This board will have broad authority to enforce and discipline rules by which accountants must live. The board will have full access to accounting firms' records and policies to require uniformity throughout the industry when it comes to ethics and independence. Accountants must know that someone is watching over them to require that their work is in the best interest of investors. This legislation will also provide for the SEC to have the resources they need to enforce the law.

However, I also do not want this legislation to provide a payday for the trial lawyers. The competitiveness of the accounting industry is at stake and we can ill afford to lose another firm solely because we didn't offer proper protections in this legislation. I am in no way indicating that accounting firms should have new, special protections. The only thing I am asking is that accounting firms aren't exposed to more liability after this bill is enacted than they were before.

I am not sure some Members truly understand the situation facing accounting firms. We are down to the final four firms. These are the only firms that have the expertise and resources to audit companies such as Microsoft, Coca Cola, and the thousands other large companies. If we subject them to the will of the trial bar, it will only be a matter of time before we lose the rest of the firms one by one.

I know that, given what has happened recently with the restatements, it is easy to be critical of accountants and easy to legislate them. I agree we do need legislation, but what also needs to be understood is that over-legislating could be drastic to the economy. In the long run, if we over-legislate, it could be detrimental for the future of capital formation in this country.

Once again, I thank the Chairman for all of the work he and his staff have done with this legislation. I think it is a good bill, and I do intend to support it. I also think it will continue to improve through the Conference process and when all is said and done, investors will respond positively to passage of this legislation.

I wish to speak about the Financial Accounting Standards Boards, known as FASB, which has been referenced many times throughout the course of discussion on the underlying accounting bill, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002.

Some of the pending amendments have referenced FASB and directed or mandated it to change how companies must expense stock options or to perform a study on how to expense stock options. In addition, the McCain amendment sets the accounting standard for expensing stock options, without allowing FASB to set rules on this form of expensing. The Levin amendment mandates FASB conduct a one-year study on expensing stock options, and then adopt a rule based on a narrow set of external parameters. The Levin amendment implicates a desire to have such expensing done.

In order to understand some of the problems with these types of amendments, it is important to understand exactly what FASB does. Since 1973, FASB has been the designated organization in the private sector for establishing standard of financial accounting and reporting. In short, those standards govern the preparation of all financial reports.

The mission of FASB is "to establish and improve standards of financial accounting and reporting for the guidance and education of the public, including issuers, auditors and users of financial information."

To accomplish this mission, FASB acts to improve the usefulness of financial reporting; keep standards current to reflect changes in the methods of doing business and the economic environment; consider any significant areas of deficiency in financial reporting; promote the international convergence of accounting standards together with improving the quality of financial reporting; and improve the common understanding of the nature and purposes of information contained in financial reports.

FASB follows certain precepts in its activities. One is to be objective in its decision making. Another is to carefully weigh the views of its constituents in developing concepts and standards. But its ultimate determination must be the Board's, based on research, public input and careful deliberation. It also aspires to promulgate standards only when the expected benefits exceed the perceived costs.

Overall, FASB was created to serve as an independent agency with an independent agenda. However, FASB is currently funded by companies and accounting firms. The long standing concern was that FASB did not act wholly independently, and succumbed to industry pressures in order to get the funding it needed to operate. Back in 1993 and 1994, when expensing of stock options was an issue, some critics say FASB succumbed to pressure by industry and Congress when it created a dual method of either expensing stock options at the time of grant, or placing the information in a footnote as a form of public disclosure of possible stock dilution.

The underlying accounting reform bill fixes this perceived problem of independence and autonomy by providing FASB with funding from both issuers and the accounting firms. Because of this change, FASB will be completely independent from the very companies it will set standards for in the future. This is a good start.

It is also important to understand that, historically, FASB has never been directed by Congress through legislation to adopt one particular standard for accounting, including expense accounting. It has also never been directed by Congress to perform a study. FASB's role is not to perform studies for Congress and they should not be bogged down performing them for political purposes.

Following that precedent, the Senate Banking Committee made certain nothing in the bill directs FASB to take any particular action. In other words, there is no federal mandate to FASB, nor should there be, if it is to remain an independent authority. In addition, why should Congress, a body without expertise in accounting standards for publically traded companies, set these standards?

I, and many other members, as well as Federal Reserve Chairman, Alan Greenspan, believe that Congress has no business setting accounting standards. Instead, the Securities and Exchange Commission and FASB are the entities with the expertise needed to make these types of determinations.

Ordinarily, FASB establishes plans with milestones it works towards. Congress should not dictate what plans and milestones it should work towards or address. FASB also never sets artificial deadlines on when to reach a conclusion. As an independent agency, it carefully and deliberately makes its determinations and sets rules, without adhering to outside pressures or timetables. Just as Congress should not set accounting standards for FASB to follow, it also should not set artificial deadlines for FASB to adhere to either.

Nevertheless, some members have filed amendments asking FASB to not only take a specific action, but instructing it as to a specific timetable. One amendment actually sets an accounting standard, thereby instructing FASB to immediately change expensing standards. Another mandates FASB complete an expensing study within a year. These amendment set unrealistic timetables and mandates.

It is important to remember that FASB already has its hands full with important projects to help improve financial standards and reporting. It is currently working towards promulgating high profile rules in the areas of accounting for intangibles; accounting for special purpose entities; accounting for guarantees; and a final rule on liabilities and equity. FASB has also added to its agenda a project to research and create a rule on revenue recognition.

Let us not forget that the improper use of special purpose entities played a role in the downfall of Enron. Stock options had nothing to do with Enron's bankruptcy.

The projects FASB is concentrating on are important projects which will help clarify financial statements for investors. FASB itself needs to cue up and prioritize its projects based on what is more important to financial accounting and reporting. Congress should not dictate what those priorities should be or the timetable it must adhere to.

If some of the amendments we are looking at are accepted, Congress will establish a bad precedent of setting up a timetable and prioritizing projects for FASB. Congress will be putting stock option expensing—an accounting standard which did not cause the collapse of Enron or the demise of other big companies—at the front of the cue.

And another question we need to ask ourselves is whether FASB has the manpower to perform the mandates and timetables Congress would be providing through the McCain and Levin amendments. Already, FASB is shifting its personnel to different projects to try to timely promulgate needed rules. While the underlying accounting bill will help these staffing problems by providing independent funding, in the short term, FASB cannot possibly perform the mandates of some of the amendments within the time frames given.

I hope I have given members some solid reasoning on why Congress should not begin setting accounting standards. Should we really be doing something we do not fully understand? There are already agencies to perform this type of rulemaking, and they are the SEC and FASB. They are fully aware of the debate surrounding stock options. We don't need to mandate FASB to make a new rule. I am certain if FASB deems it appropriate, it will be looking at this issue in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the junior Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, in the final moments, I hope again to persuade my colleagues to accept by unanimous consent my amendment dealing with corporate bankruptcy. Let me again say what this amendment is.

It says that during the 12 months preceding a bankruptcy, CEOs who have received stock options, bonuses and other performance-based payments shall not be able to keep that kind of compensation. If they ride a company down to bankruptcy, they know the inside details of that company and got incentive-based compensation, including stock options, they ought not ride off in the sunset with a pocketful of gold while the employees and investors lose everything they have. That is not the right thing. A bankruptcy disgorgement proposal ought to be part of this bill. Everyone in this Chamber knows it should be part of this bill. Former SEC Chairman Breeden, a Republican, says it ought to be in this bill. I quoted other CEOs who say it should. Pass this bill without it and this bill is incomplete.

My colleague said he thought maybe the market, which has been so volatile recently, has been frightened by amendments that have been considered by Congress. I don't think so. I think the market has been volatile, up and down like a yo-yo, because we have story after story on the news in this country about financial crooks. These are crooks who have cooked the books of their corporations, cheated investors, pulled the rug out from under their employees, and ruined some good companies. They did it in broad daylight, under the nose of their accounting firms and law firms.

It seems to me those CEOs who made millions, in some cases over $100 million prior to bankruptcy, ought to give that money back. That money ought to go to help those who lost their live savings and those who lost their jobs.

We have in this bill a provision that says if there is a restatement of earnings, you have to give back some of these incentive-based compensation packages. However, the bill is silent on the issue of bankruptcy. What about top executives who ride their company right into the ground and run off with $50 million in their pockets and leave everyone else flat on their back? How about asking those executives to disgorge themselves of their ill-gotten gains? How about telling them in this legislation that they must give that money back? That is what my amendment would do.

I want to talk about the SEC, but I don't have time at the moment. I will save that for another day.

This process has been a travesty of the Senate, in my judgment, having someone as a gatekeeper and preventing us from bringing up germane amendments. It does not make sense. That is not the way the Senate is supposed to work.

I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the Edwards and Carnahan amendments so I may offer amendment 4214 on bankruptcy disgorgement.

Mr. GRAMM. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty seconds.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, this is, of course, the last chapter on amendments, and a pretty sad book. I know people will go up to the gallery—and I understand someone is at a press conference from the other side—claiming credit for this bill. I want to know who wants to run up to the press conference and claim credit for preventing an amendment that says you must disgorge ill-gotten gains, incentive-based compensation, if you ran a company into bankruptcy. I want somebody to go to the press gallery and take credit for blocking that kind of legislation. Tomorrow I want to read about it. Who takes credit? Someone ought to take credit for blocking an amendment that ought to be passed in the Senate by a 100 to zero vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I will not get into a debate with the Senator. There is nothing ill-gotten in this amendment. This amendment does not belong in this bill.

We have a provision in this bill. If you violate the law, then you have to give back what you have earned from the company in terms of any kind of incentive in bonus.

But to say that people who work for a company that goes bankrupt has to give back compensation is to guarantee that a company that is in trouble would never get anybody to go to work for them. They would never have an opportunity to be saved. That amendment does not belong in this bill. It makes no sense in the logic.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRAMM. I will not yield.

If you did something wrong, making you give back what you earned belongs in this bill. And it is in this bill. Not only belongs, it is here.

But to simply say because somebody worked for a company that goes broke, that they have to give back compensation, that sounds great in the environment we are in, but, look, I have a company, we are in deep trouble, and we try to go out and hire a top-notch person to come in and save us, and we pay him a compensation to try to do it. To say we will take it back if he fails, as if that is an ill-gotten gain, I am sorry, I don't think that is good economic policy. I don't think it is smart. It has nothing to do with the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SARBANES. I yield 1 minute.

Mr. DORGAN. I deeply appreciate the Senator from Maryland yielding.

What the Senator from Texas misses is we are talking about incentive-based compensation. Should someone who gets incentives for running the corporation into bankruptcy be able to keep that? I don't think so for somebody that gets a big bonus while he runs the company into bankruptcy, or for someone that gets big stock options while she runs the company into bankruptcy.

The Senator tried to win a debate we were not having. He says we will take compensation away from someone who is engaged in working for a corporation that went into bankruptcy. No, this is about incentive-based compensation and profits. It is not about taking away their salary. It is about saying if you are paid on an incentive basis and you are running that corporation into bankruptcy, you ought not to be getting the bonus. If you did, you ought to give it back. You ought not get stock options; if you did, you ought to give it back.

This is simply about something my friend has missed. It is about incentive-compensation and the fact that you ought not walk out of a corporation you ran into bankruptcy with a pocketful of gold while you left the employees and the investors flat on their back. This is not an amendment that is hard to understand.

I regret very much it has been blocked. I regret especially we were not allowed to vote on this amendment. That is the travesty, in my judgment.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I think you could debate whether the amendment is understood or not. I think I understand it perfectly. In fact, there are people in this country who are turnaround specialists, who are hired to try to save companies. If somebody did something wrong, if they violated the law, then make them give back compensation. You put them to death, if you want to put them to death. But to simply say, if you hire somebody with an incentive package to save the company, and the company goes broke, that you are going to take it back, that is up to the bankruptcy court to decide.

So this ill-gotten gain business is good rhetoric, but it has absolutely nothing to do with this amendment. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? Just 29 seconds remain to the Senator from Texas, and 5½ minutes remain to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, what is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland has 5 minutes remaining, the Senator from Texas has 30 seconds.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland should have the right to end the debate.

I think we have two bills: One in the Senate, one in the House. We can come up with a better bill than either. I think America will survive under either bill. Given the environment we are in, that represents some achievement, and I am proud of it.

I think we will come out of conference with a better bill than the House bill and a better bill than the Senate bill. I think people will be proud of what we did.

If I were an investor today, and I had a lot of money, I would invest in the stock market today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The Senator from Maryland has 4 minutes 45 seconds remaining.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, we have been trying to clear amendments. We have yesterday—not yesterday, but on Friday we adopted three amendments on the basis of a unanimous consent request. We have worked through two additional amendments. I am going to offer them now.

One is an amendment by Senator SHELBY for a study with respect to aider and abettor violations of the Federal securities law. I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside; that the Shelby amendment, No. 4261, be called up and modified with a modification that I send to the desk; that the amendment as modified be agreed to; and then we then return to the regular order which, as I understand it, would be the Edwards as modified by the Carnahan amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4261, AS MODIFIED

Mr. SARBANES. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES) for Mr. SHELBY, proposes an amendment numbered 4261, as modified.

The amendment is as follow:

(Purpose: To require the SEC to conduct a study and submit a report to the Congress on aider and abettor violations of the Federal securities laws)

On page 108 after line 15, insert the following:

“(c)(1) The Commission shall conduct a study to determine based upon information for the period from January 1, 1998 to December 31, 2001—

“(A) the number of “securities professionals,” which term shall mean public accountants, public accounting firms, investment bankers, investment advisers, brokers, dealers, attorneys, and other securities professionals practicing before the Commission—

“(i) who have been found to have aided and abetted a violation of the Federal securities laws, including rules or regulations promulgated thereunder (hereinafter collectively referred to as “Federal securities laws”), but who have not been sanctioned, disciplined, or otherwise penalized as a primary violator in any administrative action or civil proceeding, including in any settlement of such actions or proceedings (referred to herein after as “aiders and abettors”) and “(ii) who have been found to have been primary violators of the Federal securities laws;

“(B) a description of the Federal securities laws violations committed by aiders and abettors and by primary violators, including—

“(i) the specific provisions of the Federal securities laws violated;

“(ii) the specific sanctions and penalties imposed upon, such aiders and abettors and primary violators, including the amount of any monetary penalties assessed upon and collected from such persons;

“(iii) the occurrence of multiple violations by the same person or persons either as an aider or abettor or as a primary violator; and

“(iv) whether as to each such violator disciplinary sanctions have been imposed, including any censure, suspension, temporary bar, or permanent bar to practice before the Commission; and

“(C) the amount of disgorgement, restitution or any other fines or payments the Commission has (i) assessed upon and (ii) collected from aiders and abettors and from primary violators.

“(2) A report based upon the study conducted pursuant to subsection (c)(1) shall be submitted to the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs no later than six months after the date of enactment of the “Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002.”.

In supervising non-registered public accounting firms and their associated persons, appropriate State regulatory authorities should make an independent determination of the proper standards applicable, particularly taking into consideration the size and nature of the business of the accounting firms they supervise and the size and nature of the business of the clients of those firms. The standards applied by the Board under this Act should not be presumed to be applicable for purposes of this section for small and medium sized nonregistered public accounting firms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment as modified is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4261), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. Was the Ensign amendment also on that amendment?

I urge the adoption of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. GRAMM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, in the regular order we are back with the Edwards and Carnahan amendments pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. I have a couple of minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There remains 1 minute.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I think the Senate is about to take a major step to contributing to the restoration of investor confidence.

This legislation establishes a strong independent board to oversee auditors of the public companies. The board can set standards, investigate, and discipline accountants. It will be overseen by the SEC, but it will have independent funding and membership. I think this marks the end of weak self-regulation with respect to public company auditors.

It addresses pervasive conflicts of interest by ensuring auditor independence by restricting them from providing a defined list of consulting services. Other consulting services on the part of the auditor can be permitted if preapproved by the company's audit company.

This legislation strengthens corporate responsibility. It establishes safeguards to protect investment/analyst conflicts, and it gives the SEC expanded staff resources so it has the resources to carry out its mandate of protecting investors in this critical time.

It is no exaggeration to say the crisis in our markets has put the plans and hopes and dreams of millions of Americans at risk. To restore market integrity on which investor confidence depends, we should move expeditiously to move this legislation into law.

I want to express my deep appreciation to my colleagues with whom we have worked for many weeks: To Senator GRAMM, the ranking member of the committee with whom we interact in an interesting and, on occasions, exciting fashion; to Senator ENZI, who made a major contribution; to Senators DODD and CORZINE on our side of the aisle who played an essential role and introduced vital legislation on this issue very early on; to Senator DURBIN who also introduced significant legislation on this subject, and to many other colleagues; and to Senator REID, who has been extraordinarily helpful here on the floor of the U.S. Senate.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the 1 minute Senator CARNAHAN has—she is not going to be using it—that it be given to the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland has an additional minute.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, we don't do this work by ourselves. We all know that very well. We rely very heavily on dedicated, absolutely dedicated staff members. I am going to take the closing time I have to simply read their names into the RECORD: Dean Shahinian, Steve Kroll, Lynsey Graham, Vincent Meehan, Sarah Kline, Judy Keenan, Jesse Jacobs, Aaron Kline, Marty Gruenberg and Steve Harris of the Banking Committee staff; Wayne Abernathy and Linda Lord of Senator GRAMM's staff on the committee. There has also been the staff of the individual Members.

I particularly want to acknowledge Mike Thompson and Katherine McGuire of Senator ENZI's staff, and Alex Sternhell and Naomi Camper, Jon Berger, Jimmy Williams, Catherine Cruz Wojtasik, Leslie Wooley, Margaret Simmons, Mat Young, Roger Hollingsworth and Matt Pippin.

I express my very deep appreciation. The dedication these staff members demonstrated over the last few months was just extraordinary: Long nights, weekends, day in and day out. I hope very much they will take a measure of satisfaction in the sense that they have made a very important and significant contribution to better public policy in this country.

I yield the floor.

VOTE ON AMENDMENT NO. 4286

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 4286. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

NOT VOTING—3

Craig	Crapo	Helms
-------	-------	-------

The bill (S. 2673), as amended, was passed.

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. GRAMM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Banking Committee is discharged from further consideration of H.R. 3763, which the clerk will report by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3763) to protect investors by improving the accuracy and reliability of corporate disclosures made pursuant to the securities laws, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, all after the enacting clause will be stricken and the text of S. 2673, as passed, is inserted in lieu thereof.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (H.R. 3763), as amended, was passed, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In this Act, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) APPROPRIATE STATE REGULATORY AUTHORITY.—The term “appropriate State regulatory authority” means the State agency or other authority responsible for the licensure or other regulation of the practice of accounting in the State or States having jurisdiction over a registered public accounting firm or associated person thereof, with respect to the matter in question.

(2) AUDIT.—The term “audit” means an examination of the financial statements of any issuer by an independent public accounting firm in accordance with the rules of the Board or the Commission (or, for the period preceding the adoption of applicable rules of the Board under section 103, in accordance with then-applicable generally accepted auditing and related standards for such purposes), for the purpose of expressing an opinion on such statements.

(3) AUDIT COMMITTEE.—The term “audit committee” means—

(A) a committee (or equivalent body) established by and amongst the board of directors of an issuer for the purpose of overseeing the accounting and financial reporting processes of the issuer and audits of the financial statements of the issuer; and

(B) if no such committee exists with respect to an issuer, the entire board of directors of the issuer.

(4) AUDIT REPORT.—The term “audit report” means a document or other record—

(A) prepared following an audit performed for purposes of compliance by an issuer with the requirements of the securities laws; and

(B) in which a public accounting firm either—

(i) sets forth the opinion of that firm regarding a financial statement, report, or other document; or

(ii) asserts that no such opinion can be expressed.

(5) BOARD.—The term “Board” means the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board established under section 101.

(6) COMMISSION.—The term “Commission” means the Securities and Exchange Commission.

(7) ISSUER.—The term “issuer” means an issuer (as defined in section 3 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c)), the securities of which are registered under section 12 of that Act (15 U.S.C. 78l), or that is required to file reports pursuant to section 15(d) of that Act (15 U.S.C. 78o(d)), or that will be required to file such reports at the end of a fiscal year of the issuer in which a registration statement filed by such issuer has become effective pursuant to the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77a et. seq.), unless its securities are registered under section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c) on or before the end of such fiscal year.

(8) NON-AUDIT SERVICES.—The term “non-audit services” means any professional services provided to an issuer by a registered public accounting firm, other than those provided to an issuer in connection with an audit or a review of the financial statements of an issuer.

(9) PERSON ASSOCIATED WITH A PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRM.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The terms “person associated with a public accounting firm” (or with a “registered public accounting firm”) and “associated person of a public accounting firm” (or of a “registered public accounting firm”) mean any individual proprietor, partner, shareholder, principal, accountant, or other professional employee of a public accounting firm, or any other independent contractor or entity that, in connection with the preparation or issuance of any audit report—

(i) shares in the profits of, or receives compensation in any other form from, that firm; or

(ii) participates as agent or otherwise on behalf of such accounting firm in any activity of that firm.

(B) EXEMPTION AUTHORITY.—The Board may, by rule, exempt persons engaged only in ministerial tasks from the definition in subparagraph (A), to the extent that the Board determines that any such exemption is consistent with the purposes of this Act, the public interest, or the protection of investors.

(10) PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS.—The term “professional standards” means—

(A) accounting principles that are—

(i) established by the standard setting body described in section 19(b) of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended by this Act, or prescribed by the Commission under section 19(a) of that Act (15 U.S.C. 17a(s)) or section 13(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78a(m)); and

(ii) relevant to audit reports for particular issuers, or dealt with in the quality control system of a particular registered public accounting firm; and

(B) auditing standards, standards for attestation engagements, quality control policies and procedures, ethical and competency standards, and independence standards (including rules implementing title II) that the Board or the Commission determines—

(i) relate to the preparation or issuance of audit reports for issuers; and

(ii) are established or adopted by the Board under section 103(a), or are promulgated as rules of the Commission.

(11) PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRM.—The term “public accounting firm” means—

(A) a proprietorship, partnership, incorporated association, corporation, limited liability company, limited liability partnership, or other legal entity that is engaged in the practice of public accounting or preparing or issuing audit reports; and

(B) to the extent so designated by the rules of the Board, any associated person of any entity described in subparagraph (A).

(12) REGISTERED PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRM.—The term “registered public accounting firm” means a public accounting firm registered with the Board in accordance with this Act.

(13) RULES OF THE BOARD.—The term “rules of the Board” means the bylaws and rules of the Board (as submitted to, and approved, modified, or amended by the Commission, in accordance with section 107), and those stated policies, practices, and interpretations of the Board that the Commission, by rule, may deem to be rules of the Board, as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

(14) SECURITY.—The term “security” has the same meaning as in section 3(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)).

(15) SECURITIES LAWS.—The term “securities laws” means the provisions of law referred to in section 3(a)(47) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(47)), as amended by this Act, and includes the rules, regulations, and orders issued by the Commission thereunder.

(16) STATE.—The term “State” means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or any other territory or possession of the United States.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 3(a)(47) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(47)) is amended by inserting “the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002,” before “the Public”.

SEC. 3. COMMISSION RULES AND ENFORCEMENT.

(a) REGULATORY ACTION.—The Commission shall promulgate such rules and regulations, as may be necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, and in furtherance of this Act.

(b) ENFORCEMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A violation by any person of this Act, any rule or regulation of the Commission issued under this Act, or any rule of the Board shall be treated for all purposes in the same manner as a violation of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78a et seq.) or the rules and regulations issued thereunder, consistent with the provisions of this Act, and any such person shall be subject to the same penalties, and to the same extent, as for a violation of that Act or such rules or regulations.

(2) INVESTIGATIONS, INJUNCTIONS, AND PROSECUTION OF OFFENSES.—Section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78u) is amended

(A) in subsection (a)(1), by inserting “the rules of the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, of which such person is a registered public accounting firm or a person associated with such a firm,” after “is a participant,”;

(B) in subsection (d)(1), by inserting “the rules of the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, of which such person is a registered public accounting firm or a person associated with such a firm,” after “is a participant,”;

(C) in subsection (e), by inserting “the rules of the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, of which such person is a registered public accounting firm or a person associated with such a firm,” after “is a participant,”; and

(D) in subsection (f), by inserting “or the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board” after “self-regulatory organization” each place that term appears.

(3) CEASE-AND-DESIST PROCEEDINGS.—Section 21C(c)(2) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78u-3(c)(2)) is amended by inserting “registered public accounting firm (as defined in section 2 of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002),” after “government securities dealer.”.

(c) EFFECT ON COMMISSION AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this Act or the rules of the Board shall be construed to impair or limit—

(1) the authority of the Commission to regulate the accounting profession, accounting firms, or persons associated with such firms for purposes of enforcement of the securities laws;

(2) the authority of the Commission to set standards for accounting or auditing practices or auditor independence, derived from other provisions of the securities laws or the rules or regulations thereunder, for purposes of the preparation and issuance of any audit report, or otherwise under applicable law; or

(3) the ability of the Commission to take, on the initiative of the Commission, legal, administrative, or disciplinary action against any registered public accounting firm or any associated person thereof.

TITLE I—PUBLIC COMPANY ACCOUNTING OVERSIGHT BOARD

SEC. 101. ESTABLISHMENT; ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF BOARD.—There is established the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to oversee the audit of public companies that are subject to the securities laws, and related matters, in order to protect the interests of investors and further the public interest in the preparation of informative, accurate, and independent audit reports for companies the securities of which are sold to, and held by and for, public investors. The Board shall be a body corporate, operate as a nonprofit corporation, and have succession until dissolved by an Act of Congress.

(b) STATUS.—The Board shall not be an agency or establishment of the United States Government, and, except as otherwise provided in this Act, shall be subject to, and have all the powers conferred upon a nonprofit corporation by, the District of Columbia Nonprofit Corporation Act. No member or person employed by, or agent for, the Board shall be deemed to be an officer or employee of or agent for the Federal Government by reason of such service.

(c) DUTIES OF THE BOARD.—The Board shall, subject to action by the Commission under section 107, and once a determination is made by the Commission under subsection (d) of this section—

(1) register public accounting firms that prepare audit reports for issuers, in accordance with section 102;

(2) establish or adopt, or both, by rule, auditing, quality control, ethics, independence, and other standards relating to the preparation of audit reports for issuers, in accordance with section 103;

(3) conduct inspections of registered public accounting firms, in accordance with section 104 and the rules of the Board;

(4) conduct investigations and disciplinary proceedings concerning, and impose appropriate sanctions where justified upon, registered public accounting firms and associated persons of such firms, in accordance with section 105;

(5) perform such other duties or functions as the Board determines are necessary or appropriate to promote high professional standards among, and improve the quality of audit services offered by, registered public accounting firms and associated persons thereof, or otherwise to carry out this Act, in order to protect investors, or to further the public interest;

(6) enforce compliance with this Act, the rules of the Board, professional standards, and the securities laws relating to the preparation and issuance of audit reports and the obligations and liabilities of accountants with respect thereto, by registered public accounting firms and associated persons thereof; and

(7) set the budget and manage the operations of the Board and the staff of the Board.

(d) COMMISSION DETERMINATION.—The members of the Board shall take such action (including hiring of staff, proposal of rules, and adoption of initial and transitional auditing and other professional standards) as may be necessary or appropriate to enable the Commission to determine, not later than 270 days after the date of enactment of this Act, that the Board is so organized and has the capacity to carry out the requirements of this title, and to enforce compliance with this title by registered public accounting firms and associated persons thereof.

(e) BOARD MEMBERSHIP.—

(1) COMPOSITION.—The Board shall have 5 members, appointed from among prominent individuals of integrity and reputation who have a demonstrated commitment to the interests of investors and the public, and an understanding of the responsibilities for and nature of the financial disclosures required of issuers under the securities laws and the obligations of accountants with respect to the preparation and issuance of audit reports with respect to such disclosures.

(2) LIMITATION.—Two members, and only 2 members, of the Board shall be or have been certified public accountants pursuant to the laws of 1 or more States, provided that, if 1 of those 2 members is the chairperson, he or she may not have been a practicing certified public accountant for at least 5 years prior to his or her appointment to the Board.

(3) FULL-TIME INDEPENDENT SERVICE.—Each member of the Board shall serve on a full-time basis, and may not, concurrent with service on the Board, be employed by any other person or engage in any other professional or business activity. No member of the Board may share in any of the profits of, or receive payments from, a public accounting firm (or any other person, as determined by rule of the Commission), other than fixed continuing payments, subject to such conditions as the Commission may impose, under standard arrangements for the retirement of members of public accounting firms.

(4) APPOINTMENT OF BOARD MEMBERS.—

(A) INITIAL BOARD.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission, after consultation with the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the Secretary of the Treasury, shall appoint the chairperson and other initial members of the Board, and shall designate a term of service for each.

(B) VACANCIES.—A vacancy on the Board shall not affect the powers of the Board, but shall be filled in the same manner as provided for appointments under this section.

(5) TERM OF SERVICE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term of service of each Board member shall be 5 years, and until a successor is appointed, except that—

(i) the terms of office of the initial Board members (other than the chairperson) shall expire in annual increments, 1 on each of the first 4 anniversaries of the initial date of appointment; and

(ii) any Board member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which the predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of that term.

(B) TERM LIMITATION.—No person may serve as a member of the Board, or as chairperson of the Board, for more than 2 terms, whether or not such terms of service are consecutive.

(6) REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.—A member of the Board may be removed by the Commission from office, in accordance with section 107(d)(3), for good cause shown before the expiration of the term of that member.

(f) POWERS OF THE BOARD.—In addition to any authority granted to the Board otherwise in this Act, the Board shall have the power, subject to section 107—

(1) to sue and be sued, complain and defend, in its corporate name and through its own counsel, with the approval of the Commission, in any Federal, State, or other court;

(2) to conduct its operations and maintain offices, and to exercise all other rights and powers authorized by this Act, in any State, without regard to any qualification, licensing, or other provision of law in effect in such State (or a political subdivision thereof);

(3) to lease, purchase, accept gifts or donations of or otherwise acquire, improve, use, sell, exchange, or convey, all of or an interest in any property, wherever situated;

(4) to appoint such employees, accountants, attorneys, and other agents as may be necessary or appropriate, and to determine their qualifications, define their duties, and fix their salaries or other compensation (at a level that is comparable to private sector self-regulatory, accounting, technical, supervisory, or other staff or management positions);

(5) to allocate, assess, and collect accounting support fees established pursuant to section 109, for the Board, and other fees and charges imposed under this title; and

(6) to enter into contracts, execute instruments, incur liabilities, and do any and all other acts and things necessary, appropriate, or incidental to the conduct of its operations and the exercise of its obligations, rights, and powers imposed or granted by this title.

(g) RULES OF THE BOARD.—The rules of the Board shall, subject to the approval of the Commission—

(1) provide for the operation and administration of the Board, the exercise of its authority, and the performance of its responsibilities under this Act;

(2) permit, as the Board determines necessary or appropriate, delegation by the Board of any of its functions to an individual member or employee of the Board, or to a division of the Board, including functions with respect to hearing, determining, ordering, certifying, reporting, or otherwise acting as to any matter, except that—

(A) the Board shall retain a discretionary right to review any action pursuant to any such delegated function, upon its own motion;

(B) a person shall be entitled to a review by the Board with respect to any matter so delegated, and the decision of the Board upon such review shall be deemed to be the action of the Board for all purposes (including appeal or review thereof); and

(C) if the right to exercise a review described in subparagraph (A) is declined, or if no such review is sought within the time stated in the rules of the Board, then the action taken by the holder of such delegation shall for all purposes, including appeal or review thereof, be deemed to be the action of the Board;

(3) establish ethics rules and standards of conduct for Board members and staff, including a bar on practice before the Board (and the Commission, with respect to Board-related matters) of 1 year for former members of the Board, and appropriate periods (not to exceed 1 year) for former staff of the Board; and

(4) provide as otherwise required by this Act.

(h) ANNUAL REPORT TO THE COMMISSION.—The Board shall submit an annual report (including its audited financial statements) to the Commission, and the Commission shall transmit a copy of that report to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate, and the Committee on Financial Services of the House of Representatives, not later than 30 days after the date of receipt of that report by the Commission.

SEC. 102. REGISTRATION WITH THE BOARD.

(a) MANDATORY REGISTRATION.—Beginning 180 days after the date of the determination of the Commission under section 101(d), it shall be unlawful for any person that is not a registered public accounting firm to prepare or issue, or to participate in the preparation or issuance of, any audit report with respect to any issuer.

(b) APPLICATIONS FOR REGISTRATION.—

(1) FORM OF APPLICATION.—A public accounting firm shall use such form as the Board may prescribe, by rule, to apply for registration under this section.

(2) CONTENTS OF APPLICATIONS.—Each public accounting firm shall submit, as part of its application for registration, in such detail as the Board shall specify—

(A) the names of all issuers for which the firm prepared or issued audit reports during the immediately preceding calendar year, and for which the firm expects to prepare or issue audit reports during the current calendar year;

(B) the annual fees received by the firm from each such issuer for audit services, other accounting services, and non-audit services, respectively;

(C) such other current financial information for the most recently completed fiscal year of the firm as the Board may reasonably request;

(D) a statement of the quality control policies of the firm for its accounting and auditing practices;

(E) a list of all accountants associated with the firm who participate in or contribute to the preparation of audit reports, stating the license or certification number of each such person, as well as the State license numbers of the firm itself;

(F) information relating to criminal, civil, or administrative actions or disciplinary proceedings pending against the firm or any associated person of the firm in connection with any audit report;

(G) copies of any periodic or annual disclosure filed by an issuer with the Commission during the immediately preceding calendar year which discloses accounting disagreements between such issuer and the firm in connection with an audit report furnished or prepared by the firm for such issuer; and

(H) such other information as the rules of the Board or the Commission shall specify as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

(3) CONSENTS.—Each application for registration under this subsection shall include—

(A) a consent executed by the public accounting firm to cooperation in and compliance with any request for testimony or the production of documents made by the Board in the furtherance of its authority and responsibilities under this title (and an agreement to secure and enforce similar consents from each of the associated persons of the public accounting firm as a condition of their continued employment by or other association with such firm); and

(B) a statement that such firm understands and agrees that cooperation and compliance, as described in the consent required by subparagraph (A), and the securing and enforcement of such consents from its associated persons, in accordance with the rules of the Board, shall be a condition to the continuing effectiveness of the registration of the firm with the Board.

(c) ACTION ON APPLICATIONS.—

(1) TIMING.—The Board shall approve a completed application for registration not later than 45 days after the date of receipt of the application, in accordance with the rules of the Board, unless the Board, prior to such date, issues a written notice of disapproval to, or requests more information from, the prospective registrant.

(2) TREATMENT.—A written notice of disapproval of a completed application under paragraph (1) for registration shall be treated as a disciplinary sanction for purposes of sections 105(d) and 107(c).

(d) PERIODIC REPORTS.—Each registered public accounting firm shall submit an annual report to the Board, and may be required to report more frequently, as necessary to update the information contained in its application for registration under this section, and to provide to the Board such additional information as the Board or the Commission may specify, in accordance with subsection (b)(2).

(e) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY.—Registration applications and annual reports required by this subsection, or such portions of such applications or reports as may be designated under rules of the Board, shall be made available for public inspection, subject to rules of the Board or the Commission, and to applicable laws relating to the confidentiality of proprietary, personal, or other information contained in such applications or reports, provided that, in all events, the Board shall protect from public disclosure information reasonably identified by the subject accounting firm as proprietary information.

(f) REGISTRATION AND ANNUAL FEES.—The Board shall assess and collect a registration fee and an annual fee from each registered public accounting firm, in amounts that are sufficient to recover the costs of processing and reviewing applications and annual reports.

SEC. 103. AUDITING, QUALITY CONTROL, AND INDEPENDENCE STANDARDS AND RULES.

(a) AUDITING, QUALITY CONTROL, AND ETHICS STANDARDS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall, by rule, establish, including, to the extent it determines appropriate, through adoption of standards proposed by 1 or more professional groups of accountants designated pursuant to paragraph (3)(A) or advisory groups convened pursuant to paragraph (4), and amend or otherwise modify or alter, such auditing and related attestation standards, such quality control standards, and such ethics standards to be used by registered public accounting firms in the preparation and issuance of audit reports, as required by this Act or the rules of the Commission, or as may be necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

(2) RULE REQUIREMENTS.—In carrying out paragraph (1), the Board—

(A) shall include in the auditing standards that it adopts, requirements that each registered public accounting firm shall—

(i) prepare, and maintain for a period of not less than 7 years, audit work papers, and other information related to any audit report, in sufficient detail to support the conclusions reached in such report;

(ii) provide a concurring or second partner review and approval of such audit report (and other related information), and concurring approval in its issuance, by a qualified person (as prescribed by the Board) associated with the public accounting firm, other than the person in charge of the audit, or by an independent reviewer (as prescribed by the Board); and

(iii) describe the scope of the auditor's testing of the system of internal accounting controls of the issuer required by section 13(b)(2) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(b)(2)), and present (in such report or in a separate report)—

(I) the findings of the auditor from such testing;

(II) an evaluation of whether such system of internal accounting controls—

(aa) complies with the requirements of that section 13(b)(2); and

(bb) provides reasonable assurance that receipts and expenditures of the issuer comply with applicable law, and are being made in accordance with proper authorizations of the management and directors of the issuer; and

(III) a description of significant defects in such internal controls, and of any material non-compliance, of which the auditor should know on the basis of such testing; and

(B) shall include, in the quality control standards that it adopts with respect to the issuance of audit reports, requirements for every registered public accounting firm relating to—

(i) monitoring of professional ethics and independence from issuers on behalf of which the firm issues audit reports;

(ii) consultation within such firm on accounting and auditing questions;

(iii) supervision of audit work;

(iv) hiring, professional development, and advancement of personnel;

(v) the acceptance and continuation of engagements;

(vi) internal inspection; and

(vii) such other requirements as the Board may prescribe, subject to subsection (a)(1).

(3) AUTHORITY TO ADOPT OTHER STANDARDS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out this subsection, the Board—

(i) may adopt as its rules, subject to the terms of section 107, any portion of any statement of auditing standards or other professional standards that the Board determines satisfy the requirements of paragraph (1), and that were proposed by 1 or more professional groups of accountants that shall be designated or recognized by the Board, by rule, for such purpose, pursuant to this paragraph or 1 or more advisory groups convened pursuant to paragraph (4); and

(ii) notwithstanding clause (i), shall retain full authority to modify, supplement, revise, or subsequently amend, modify, or repeal, in whole or in part, any portion of any statement described in clause (i).

(B) INITIAL AND TRANSITIONAL STANDARDS.—The Board shall adopt standards described in subparagraph (A)(i) as initial or transitional standards, to the extent the Board determines necessary, prior to a determination of the Commission under section 101(d), and such standards shall be separately approved by the Commission at the time of that determination, without regard to the procedures required by section 107 that otherwise would apply to the approval of rules of the Board.

(4) ADVISORY GROUPS.—The Board shall convene, or authorize its staff to convene, such expert advisory groups as may be appropriate, which may include practicing accountants and other experts, as well as representatives of other interested groups, subject to such rules as the Board may prescribe to prevent conflicts of interest, to make recommendations concerning the content (including proposed drafts) of auditing, quality control, ethics, independence, or other standards required to be established under this section.

(b) INDEPENDENCE STANDARDS AND RULES.—The Board shall establish such rules as may be necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, to implement, or as authorized under, title II of this Act.

(c) COOPERATION WITH DESIGNATED PROFESSIONAL GROUPS OF ACCOUNTANTS AND ADVISORY GROUPS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall cooperate on an ongoing basis with professional groups of accountants designated under subsection (a)(3)(A) and advisory groups convened under subsection (a)(4) in the examination of the need for changes in any standards subject to its authority under subsection (a), recommend issues for inclusion on the agendas of such designated professional groups of accountants or advisory groups, and take such other steps as it deems appropriate to increase the effectiveness of the standard setting process.

(2) BOARD RESPONSES.—The Board shall respond in a timely fashion to requests from designated professional groups of accountants and advisory groups referred to in paragraph (1) for any changes in standards over which the Board has authority.

(d) EVALUATION OF STANDARD SETTING PROCESS.—The Board shall include in the annual report required by section 101(h) the results of its standard setting responsibilities during the period to which the report relates, including a discussion of the work of the Board with any designated professional groups of accountants and advisory groups described in paragraphs (3)(A) and (4) of subsection (a), and its pending issues agenda for future standard setting projects.

SEC. 104. INSPECTIONS OF REGISTERED PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall conduct a continuing program of inspections to assess the degree of compliance of each registered public accounting firm and associated persons of that firm with this Act, the rules of the Board, the rules of the Commission, or professional standards, in connection with its performance of audits, issuance of audit reports, and related matters involving issuers.

(b) INSPECTION FREQUENCY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), inspections required by this section shall be conducted—

(A) annually with respect to each registered public accounting firm that regularly provides audit reports for more than 100 issuers; and

(B) not less frequently than once every 3 years with respect to each registered public accounting firm that regularly provides audit reports for 100 or fewer issuers.

(2) ADJUSTMENTS TO SCHEDULES.—The Board may, by rule, adjust the inspection schedules set under paragraph (1) if the Board finds that different inspection schedules are consistent with the purposes of this Act, the public interest, and the protection of investors.

(c) PROCEDURES.—The Board shall, in each inspection under this section, and in accordance with its rules for such inspections—

(1) identify any act or practice or omission to act by the registered public accounting firm, or by any associated person thereof, revealed by such inspection that may be in violation of this Act, the rules of the Board, the rules of the Commission, the firm's own quality control policies, or professional standards;

(2) report any such act, practice, or omission, if appropriate, to the Commission and each appropriate State regulatory authority; and

(3) begin a formal investigation or take appropriate disciplinary action, if any, with respect to any such violation, in accordance with this Act and the rules of the Board.

(d) CONDUCT OF INSPECTIONS.—In conducting an inspection of a registered public accounting firm under this section, the Board shall—

(1) inspect and review selected audit and review engagements of the firm (which may include audit engagements that are the subject of ongoing litigation or other controversy between the firm and 1 or more third parties), performed at various offices and by various associated persons of the firm, as selected by the Board;

(2) evaluate the sufficiency of the quality control system of the firm, and the manner of the documentation and communication of that system by the firm; and

(3) perform such other testing of the audit, supervisory, and quality control procedures of the firm as are necessary or appropriate in light of the purpose of the inspection and the responsibilities of the Board.

(e) RECORD RETENTION.—The rules of the Board may require the retention by registered public accounting firms for inspection purposes of records whose retention is not otherwise required by section 103 or the rules issued thereunder.

(f) PROCEDURES FOR REVIEW.—The rules of the Board shall provide a procedure for the review of and response to a draft inspection report by the registered public accounting firm under inspection. The Board shall take such action with respect to such response as it considers appropriate (including revising the draft report or continuing or supplementing its inspection activities before issuing a final report), but the text of any such response, appropriately redacted to protect information reasonably identified by the accounting firm as confidential, shall be attached to and made part of the inspection report.

(g) REPORT.—A written report of the findings of the Board for each inspection under this section, subject to subsection (h), shall be—

(1) transmitted, in appropriate detail, to the Commission and each appropriate State regulatory authority, accompanied by any letter or comments by the Board or the inspector, and any letter of response from the registered public accounting firm; and

(2) made available in appropriate detail to the public (subject to section 105(b)(5)(A), and to the protection of such confidential and proprietary information as the Board may determine to be appropriate, or as may be required by law), except that no portions of the inspection report that deal with criticisms of or potential defects in the quality control systems of the firm under inspection shall be made public if those criticisms or defects are addressed by the firm, to the satisfaction of the Board, not later than 12 months after the date of the inspection report.

(h) INTERIM COMMISSION REVIEW.—

(1) REVIEWABLE MATTERS.—A registered public accounting firm may seek review by the Commission, pursuant to such rules as the Commission shall promulgate, if the firm—

(A) has provided the Board with a response, pursuant to rules issued by the Board under subsection (f), to the substance of particular items in a draft inspection report, and disagrees with the assessments contained in any final report prepared by the Board following such response; or

(B) disagrees with the determination of the Board that criticisms or defects identified in an inspection report have not been addressed to the satisfaction of the Board within 12 months of the date of the inspection report, for purposes of subsection (g)(2).

(2) TREATMENT OF REVIEW.—Any decision of the Commission with respect to a review under paragraph (1) shall not be reviewable under section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78y), or deemed to be "final agency action" for purposes of section 704 of title 5, United States Code.

(3) TIMING.—Review under paragraph (1) may be sought during the 30-day period following the date of the event giving rise to the review under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1).

SEC. 105. INVESTIGATIONS AND DISCIPLINARY PROCEEDINGS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall establish, by rule, subject to the requirements of this section, fair procedures for the investigation and disciplining of registered public accounting firms and associated persons of such firms.

(b) INVESTIGATIONS.—

(1) AUTHORITY.—In accordance with the rules of the Board, the Board may conduct an investigation of any act or practice, or omission to act, by a registered public accounting firm, any associated person of such firm, or both, that may violate any provision of this Act, the rules of the Board, the provisions of the securities laws relating to the preparation and issuance of audit reports and the obligations and liabilities of accountants with respect thereto, including the rules of the Commission issued under this Act, or professional standards, regardless of how the act, practice, or omission is brought to the attention of the Board.

(2) TESTIMONY AND DOCUMENT PRODUCTION.—In addition to such other actions as the Board determines to be necessary or appropriate, the rules of the Board may—

(A) require the testimony of the firm or of any person associated with a registered public accounting firm, with respect to any matter that the Board considers relevant or material to an investigation;

(B) require the production of audit work papers and any other document or information in the possession of a registered public accounting firm or any associated person thereof, wherever domiciled, that the Board considers relevant or material to the investigation, and may inspect the books and records of such firm or associated person to verify the accuracy of any documents or information supplied;

(C) request the testimony of, and production of any document in the possession of, any other person, including any client of a registered public accounting firm that the Board considers relevant or material to an investigation under this section, with appropriate notice, subject to the needs of the investigation, as permitted under the rules of the Board; and

(D) provide for procedures to seek issuance by the Commission, in a manner established by the Commission, of a subpoena to require the testimony of, and production of any document in the possession of, any person, including any client of a registered public accounting firm, that the Board considers relevant or material to an investigation under this section.

(3) NONCOOPERATION WITH INVESTIGATIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—If a registered public accounting firm or any associated person thereof refuses to testify, produce documents, or otherwise cooperate with the Board in connection with an investigation under this section, the Board may—

(i) suspend or bar such person from being associated with a registered public accounting firm, or require the registered public accounting firm to end such association;

(ii) suspend or revoke the registration of the public accounting firm; and

(iii) invoke such other lesser sanctions as the Board considers appropriate, and as specified by rule of the Board.

(B) PROCEDURE.—Any action taken by the Board under this paragraph shall be subject to the terms of section 107(c).

(4) REFERRAL.—The Board may refer an investigation under this section—

(A) to the Commission;

(B) to any other Federal functional regulator (as defined in section 509 of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (15 U.S.C. 6809)), in the case of an investigation that concerns an audit report for an institution that is subject to the jurisdiction of such regulator; and

(C) at the direction of the Commission, to—

(i) the Attorney General of the United States; and

(ii) the attorney general of 1 or more States; and

(iii) the appropriate State regulatory authority.

(5) USE OF DOCUMENTS.—

(A) CONFIDENTIALITY.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), all documents and information prepared or received by or specifically for the Board, and deliberations of the Board and its employees and agents, in connection with an inspection under section 104 or with an investigation under this section, shall be confidential and privileged as an evidentiary matter (and shall not be subject to civil discovery or other legal process) in any proceeding in any Federal or State court or administrative agency, and shall be exempt from disclosure, in the hands of an agency or establishment of the Federal Government, under the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. 552a), or otherwise, unless and until presented in connection with a public proceeding or released in accordance with subsection (c).

(B) AVAILABILITY TO GOVERNMENT AGENCIES.—All information referred to in subparagraph (A) may, in the discretion of the Board, when determined by the Board to be necessary to accomplish the purposes of this Act or to protect investors, and without the loss of its status as confidential and privileged in the hands of the Board, be made available to the Commission, the Attorney General of the United States, to the appropriate Federal functional regulator (as defined in section 509 of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (15 U.S.C. 6809)), other than the Commission, with respect to an audit report for an institution subject to the jurisdiction of such regulator, to State attorneys general in connection with any criminal investigation, and to any appropriate State regulatory authority, which shall maintain such information as confidential and privileged.

(6) IMMUNITY.—Any employee of the Board engaged in carrying out an investigation under this Act shall be immune from any civil liability arising out of such investigation in the same manner and to the same extent as an employee of the Federal Government in similar circumstances.

(c) DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES.—

(1) NOTIFICATION; RECORDKEEPING.—The rules of the Board shall provide that in any proceeding by the Board to determine whether a registered public accounting firm, or an associated person thereof, should be disciplined, the Board shall—

(A) bring specific charges with respect to the firm or associated person;

(B) notify such firm or associated person of, and provide to the firm or associated person an opportunity to defend against, such charges; and

(C) keep a record of the proceedings.

(2) PUBLIC HEARINGS.—Hearings under this section shall not be public, unless otherwise ordered by the Board for good cause shown, with the consent of the parties to such hearing.

(3) SUPPORTING STATEMENT.—A determination by the Board to impose a sanction under this subsection shall be supported by a statement setting forth—

(A) each act or practice in which the registered public accounting firm, or associated person, has engaged (or omitted to engage), or that forms a basis for all or a part of such sanction;

(B) the specific provision of this Act, the securities laws, the rules of the Board, or professional standards which the Board determines has been violated; and

(C) the sanction imposed, including a justification for that sanction.

(4) SANCTIONS.—If the Board finds, based on all of the facts and circumstances, that a registered public accounting firm or associated person thereof has engaged in any act or practice, or omitted to act, in violation of this Act, the rules of the Board, the provisions of the securities laws relating to the preparation and issuance of audit reports and the obligations and liabilities of accountants with respect thereto, including the rules of the Commission issued under this Act, or professional standards, the Board may impose such disciplinary or remedial sanctions as it determines appropriate, subject to applicable limitations under paragraph (5), including—

(A) temporary suspension or permanent revocation of registration under this title;

(B) temporary or permanent suspension or bar of a person from further association with any registered public accounting firm;

(C) temporary or permanent limitation on the activities, functions, or operations of such firm or person (other than in connection with required additional professional education or training);

(D) a civil money penalty for each such violation, in an amount equal to—

(i) not more than $100,000 for a natural person or $2,000,000 for any other person; and

(ii) in any case to which paragraph (5) applies, not more than $750,000 for a natural person or $15,000,000 for any other person;

(E) censure;

(F) required additional professional education or training; or

(G) any other appropriate sanction provided for in the rules of the Board.

(5) INTENTIONAL OR OTHER KNOWING CONDUCT.—The sanctions and penalties described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) and (D)(ii) of paragraph (4) shall only apply to—

(A) intentional or knowing conduct, including reckless conduct, that results in violation of the applicable statutory, regulatory, or professional standard; or

(B) repeated instances of negligent conduct, each resulting in a violation of the applicable statutory, regulatory, or professional standard.

(6) FAILURE TO SUPERVISE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Board may impose sanctions under this section on a registered accounting firm or upon the supervisory personnel of such firm, if the Board finds that—

(i) the firm has failed reasonably to supervise an associated person, either as required by the rules of the Board relating to auditing or quality control standards, or otherwise, with a view to preventing violations of this Act, the rules of the Board, the provisions of the securities laws relating to the preparation and issuance of audit reports and the obligations and liabilities of accountants with respect thereto, including the rules of the Commission under this Act, or professional standards; and

(ii) such associated person commits a violation of this Act, or any of such rules, laws, or standards.

(B) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—No associated person of a registered public accounting firm shall be deemed to have failed reasonably to supervise any other person for purposes of subparagraph (A), if—

(i) there have been established in and for that firm procedures, and a system for applying such procedures, that comply with applicable rules of the Board and that would reasonably be expected to prevent and detect any such violation by such associated person; and

(ii) such person has reasonably discharged the duties and obligations incumbent upon that person by reason of such procedures and system, and had no reasonable cause to believe that such procedures and system were not being complied with.

(7) EFFECT OF SUSPENSION.—

(A) ASSOCIATION WITH A PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRM.—It shall be unlawful for any person that is suspended or barred from being associated with a registered public accounting firm under this subsection willfully to become or remain associated with any registered public accounting firm, or for any registered public accounting firm that knew, or, in the exercise of reasonable care should have known, of the suspension or bar, to permit such an association, without the consent of the Board or the Commission.

(B) ASSOCIATION WITH AN ISSUER.—It shall be unlawful for any person that is suspended or barred from being associated with an issuer under this subsection willfully to become or remain associated with any issuer in an accountancy or a financial management capacity, and for any issuer that knew, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known, of such suspension or bar, to permit such an association, without the consent of the Board or the Commission.

(d) REPORTING OF SANCTIONS.—

(1) RECIPIENTS.—If the Board imposes a disciplinary sanction, in accordance with this section, the Board shall report the sanction to—

(A) the Commission;

(B) any appropriate State regulatory authority or any foreign accountancy licensing board with which such firm or person is licensed or certified; and

(C) the public (once any stay on the imposition of such sanction has been lifted).

(2) CONTENTS.—The information reported under paragraph (1) shall include—

(A) the name of the sanctioned person;

(B) a description of the sanction and the basis for its imposition; and

(C) such other information as the Board deems appropriate.

(e) STAY OF SANCTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Application to the Commission for review, or the institution by the Commission of review, of any disciplinary action of the Board shall operate as a stay of any such disciplinary action, unless and until the Commission orders (summarily or after notice and opportunity for hearing on the question of a stay, which hearing may consist solely of the submission of affidavits or presentation of oral arguments) that no such stay shall continue to operate.

(2) EXPEDITED PROCEDURES.—The Commission shall establish for appropriate cases an expedited procedure for consideration and determination of the question of the duration of a stay pending review of any disciplinary action of the Board under this subsection.

SEC. 106. FOREIGN PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRMS.

(a) APPLICABILITY TO CERTAIN FOREIGN FIRMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any foreign public accounting firm that prepares or furnishes an audit report with respect to any issuer, shall be subject to this Act and the rules of the Board and the Commission issued under this Act, in the same manner and to the same extent as a public accounting firm that is organized and operates under the laws of the United States or any State, except that registration pursuant to section 102 shall not by itself provide a basis for subjecting such a foreign public accounting firm to the jurisdiction of the Federal or State courts, other than with respect to controversies between such firms and the Board.

(2) BOARD AUTHORITY.—The Board may, by rule, determine that a foreign public accounting firm (or a class of such firms) that does not issue audit reports nonetheless plays such a substantial role in the preparation and furnishing of such reports for particular issuers, that it is necessary or appropriate, in light of the purposes of this Act and in the public interest or for the protection of investors, that such firm (or class of firms) should be treated as a public accounting firm (or firms) for purposes of registration under, and oversight by the Board in accordance with, this title.

(b) PRODUCTION OF AUDIT WORKPAPERS.—

(1) CONSENT BY FOREIGN FIRMS.—If a foreign public accounting firm issues an opinion or otherwise performs material services upon which a registered public accounting firm relies in issuing all or part of any audit report or any opinion contained in an audit report, that foreign public accounting firm shall be deemed to have consented—

(A) to produce its audit workpapers for the Board or the Commission in connection with any investigation by either body with respect to that audit report; and

(B) to be subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States for purposes of enforcement of any request for production of such workpapers.

(2) CONSENT BY DOMESTIC FIRMS.—A registered public accounting firm that relies upon the opinion of a foreign public accounting firm, as described in paragraph (1), shall be deemed—

(A) to have consented to supplying the audit workpapers of that foreign public accounting firm in response to a request for production by the Board or the Commission; and

(B) to have secured the agreement of that foreign public accounting firm to such production, as a condition of its reliance on the opinion of that foreign public accounting firm.

(c) EXEMPTION AUTHORITY.—The Commission, and the Board, subject to the approval of the Commission, may, by rule, regulation, or order, and as the Commission (or Board) determines necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, either unconditionally or upon specified terms and conditions exempt any foreign public accounting firm, or any class of such firms, from any provision of this Act or the rules of the Board or the Commission issued under this Act.

(d) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term “foreign public accounting firm” means a public accounting firm that is organized and operates under the laws of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof.

SEC. 107. COMMISSION OVERSIGHT OF THE BOARD.

(a) GENERAL OVERSIGHT RESPONSIBILITY.—The Commission shall have oversight and enforcement authority over the Board, as provided in this Act.

(b) RULES OF THE BOARD.—

(1) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term “proposed rule” means any proposed rule of the Board, and any modification of any such rule.

(2) PRIOR APPROVAL REQUIRED.—No rule of the Board shall become effective without prior approval of the Commission in accordance with this section, other than as provided in section 103(a)(3)(B) with respect to initial or transitional standards.

(3) APPROVAL CRITERIA.—The Commission shall approve a proposed rule, if it finds that the rule is consistent with the requirements of this Act and the securities laws, or is necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

(4) PROPOSED RULE PROCEDURES.—The provisions of paragraphs (1) through (3) of section 19(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78s(b)) shall govern the proposed rules of the Board, as fully as if the Board were a “registered securities association” for purposes of that section 19(b), except that, for purposes of this paragraph—

(A) the phrase “consistent with the requirements of this title and the rules and regulations thereunder applicable to such organization” in section 19(b)(2) of that Act shall be deemed to read “consistent with the requirements of title I of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002, and the rules and regulations issued thereunder applicable to such organization, or as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors”; and

(B) the phrase “otherwise in furtherance of the purposes of this title” in section 19(b)(3)(C) of that Act shall be deemed to read “otherwise in furtherance of the purposes of title I of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002”.

(5) COMMISSION AUTHORITY TO AMEND RULES OF THE BOARD.—The provisions of section 19(c) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78s(c)) shall govern the abrogation, deletion, or addition to portions of the rules of the Board by the Commission as fully as if the Board were a “registered securities association” for purposes of that section 19(c), except that the phrase “to conform its rules to the requirements of this title and the rules and regulations thereunder applicable to such organization, or otherwise in furtherance of the purposes of this title” in section 19(c) of that Act shall, for purposes of this paragraph, be deemed to read “to assure the fair administration of the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, conform the rules promulgated by that Board to the requirements of title I of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002, or otherwise further the purposes of that Act, the securities laws, and the rules and regulations thereunder applicable to that Board”.

(c) COMMISSION REVIEW OF DISCIPLINARY ACTION TAKEN BY THE BOARD.—

(1) NOTICE OF SANCTION.—The Board shall promptly file notice with the Commission of any final sanction on any registered public accounting firm or on any associated person thereof, in such form and containing such information as the Commission, by rule, may prescribe.

(2) REVIEW OF SANCTIONS.—The provisions of sections 19(d)(2) and 19(e)(1) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78s (d)(2) and (e)(1)) shall govern the review by the Commission of final disciplinary sanctions imposed by the Board (including sanctions imposed under section 105(b)(3) of this Act for noncooperation in an investigation of the Board), as fully as if the Board were a self-regulatory organization and the Commission were the appropriate regulatory agency for such organization for purposes of those sections 19(d)(2) and 19(e)(1), except that, for purposes of this paragraph—

(A) section 105(e) of this Act (rather than that section 19(d)(2)) shall govern the extent to which application for, or institution by the Commission on its own motion of, review of any disciplinary action of the Board operates as a stay of such action;

(B) references in that section 19(e)(1) to “members” of such an organization shall be deemed to be references to registered public accounting firms;

(C) the phrase “consistent with the purposes of this title” in that section 19(e)(1) shall be deemed to read “consistent with the purposes of this title and title I of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002”;

(D) references to rules of the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board in that section 19(e)(1) shall not apply; and

(E) the reference to section 19(e)(2) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 shall refer instead to section 107(c)(3) of this Act.

(3) COMMISSION MODIFICATION AUTHORITY.—The Commission may enhance, modify, cancel, reduce, or require the remission of a sanction imposed by the Board upon a registered public accounting firm or associated person thereof, if the Commission, having due regard for the public interest and the protection of investors, finds, after a proceeding in accordance with this subsection, that the sanction—

(A) is not necessary or appropriate in furtherance of this Act or the securities laws; or

(B) is excessive, oppressive, inadequate, or otherwise not appropriate to the finding or the basis on which the sanction was imposed.

(d) CENSURE OF THE BOARD; OTHER SANCTIONS.—

(1) RESCISSION OF BOARD AUTHORITY.—The Commission, by rule, consistent with the public interest, the protection of investors, and the other purposes of this Act and the securities laws, may relieve the Board of any responsibility to enforce compliance with any provision of this Act, the securities laws, the rules of the Board, or professional standards.

(2) CENSURE OF THE BOARD; LIMITATIONS.—The Commission may, by order, as it determines necessary or appropriate in the public interest, for the protection of investors, or otherwise in furtherance of the purposes of this Act or the securities laws, censure or impose limitations upon the activities, functions, and operations of the Board, if the Commission finds, on the record, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, that the Board—

(A) has violated or is unable to comply with any provision of this Act, the rules of the Board, or the securities laws; or

(B) without reasonable justification or excuse, has failed to enforce compliance with any such provision or rule, or any professional standard by a registered public accounting firm or an associated person thereof.

(3) CENSURE OF BOARD MEMBERS; REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.—The Commission may, as necessary or appropriate in the public interest, for the protection of investors, or otherwise in furtherance of the purposes of this Act or the securities laws, remove from office or censure any member of the Board, if the Commission finds, on the record, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, that such member—

(A) has willfully violated any provision of this Act, the rules of the Board, or the securities laws;

(B) has willfully abused the authority of that member; or

(C) without reasonable justification or excuse, has failed to enforce compliance with any such provision or rule, or any professional standard by any registered public accounting firm or any associated person thereof.

SEC. 108. ACCOUNTING STANDARDS.

(a) AMENDMENT TO SECURITIES ACT OF 1933.—Section 19 of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77s) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (b) and (c) as subsections (c) and (d), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (a) the following:

“(b) RECOGNITION OF ACCOUNTING STANDARDS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out its authority under subsection (a) and under section 13(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, the Commission may recognize, as ‘generally accepted’ for purposes of the securities laws, any accounting principles established by a standard setting body—

“(ii) has, for administrative and operational purposes, a board of trustees (or equivalent body) serving in the public interest, the majority of whom are not, concurrent with their service on such board, and have not been during the 2-year period preceding such service, associated persons of any registered public accounting firm;

“(iii) is funded as provided in section 109 of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002;

“(iv) has adopted procedures to ensure prompt consideration, by majority vote of its members, of changes to accounting principles necessary to reflect emerging accounting issues and changing business practices;

“(v) considers, in adopting accounting principles, the need to keep standards current in order to reflect changes in the business environment, the extent to which international convergence on high quality accounting standards is necessary or appropriate in the public interest and for the protection of investors; and

“(B) that the Commission determines has the capacity to assist the Commission in fulfilling the requirements of subsection (a) and section 13(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, because, at a minimum, the standard setting body is capable of improving the accuracy and effectiveness of financial reporting and the protection of investors under the securities laws.

“(2) ANNUAL REPORT.—A standard setting body described in paragraph (1) shall submit an annual report to the Commission and the public, containing audited financial statements of that standard setting body.”.

(b) COMMISSION AUTHORITY.—The Commission shall promulgate such rules and regulations to carry out section 19(b) of the Securities Act of 1933, as added by this section, as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

(c) NO EFFECT ON COMMISSION POWERS.—Nothing in this Act, including this section and the amendment made by this section, shall be construed to impair or limit the authority of the Commission to establish accounting principles or standards for purposes of enforcement of the securities laws.

(d) STUDY AND REPORT ON ADOPTING PRINCIPLES-BASED ACCOUNTING.—

(1) STUDY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall conduct a study on the adoption by the United States financial reporting system of a principles-based accounting system.

(B) STUDY TOPICS.—The study required by subparagraph (A) shall include an examination of—

(i) the extent to which principles-based accounting and financial reporting exists in the United States;

(ii) the length of time required for change from a rules-based to a principles-based financial reporting system;

(iii) the feasibility of and proposed methods by which a principles-based system may be implemented; and

(iv) a thorough economic analysis of the implementation of a principles-based system.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall submit a report on the results of the study required by paragraph (1) to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Financial Services of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 109. FUNDING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Board, and the standard setting body designated pursuant to section 19(b) of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended by section 108, shall be funded as provided in this section.

(b) ANNUAL BUDGETS.—The Board and the standard setting body referred to in subsection (a) shall each establish a budget for each fiscal year, which shall be reviewed and approved according to their respective internal procedures not less than 1 month prior to the commencement of the fiscal year to which the budget pertains. The budget of the Board shall be subject to approval by the Commission.

(c) SOURCES AND USES OF FUNDS.—

(1) RECOVERABLE BUDGET EXPENSES.—The budget of the Board (reduced by any registration or annual fees received under section 102(e) for the year preceding the year for which the budget is being computed), and all of the budget of the standard setting body referred to in subsection (a), for each fiscal year of each of those 2 entities, shall be payable from annual accounting support fees, in accordance with subsections (d) and (e).

(2) FUNDS GENERATED FROM THE COLLECTION OF MONETARY PENALTIES.—Subject to the availability in advance in an appropriations Act, and notwithstanding subsection (h), all funds collected by the Board as a result of the assessment of monetary penalties shall be used to fund a merit scholarship program for undergraduate and graduate students enrolled in accredited accounting degree programs, which program is to be administered by the Board or by an entity or agent identified by the Board.

(d) ANNUAL ACCOUNTING SUPPORT FEE FOR THE BOARD.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF FEE.—The Board shall establish, with the approval of the Commission, a reasonable annual accounting support fee (or a formula for the computation thereof), as may be necessary or appropriate to establish and maintain the Board.

(2) ASSESSMENTS.—The rules of the Board under paragraph (1) shall provide for the equitable allocation, assessment, and collection by the Board (or an agent appointed by the Board) of the fee established under paragraph (1), among issuers, in accordance with subsection (f), allowing for differentiation among classes of issuers, as appropriate.

(e) ANNUAL ACCOUNTING SUPPORT FEE FOR STANDARD SETTING BODY.—The annual accounting support fee for the standard setting body referred to in subsection (a)—

(1) shall be allocated in accordance with subsection (f), and assessed and collected against each issuer, on behalf of the standard setting body, by 1 or more appropriate designated collection agents, as may be necessary or appropriate to pay for the budget and provide for the expenses of that standard setting body, and to provide for an independent, stable source of funding for such body, subject to review by the Commission; and

(2) may differentiate among different classes of issuers.

(f) ALLOCATION OF ACCOUNTING SUPPORT FEES AMONG ISSUERS.—Any amount due from issuers (or a particular class of issuers) under this section to fund the budget of the Board or the standard setting body referred to in subsection (a) shall be allocated among and payable by each issuer (or each issuer in a particular class, as applicable) in an amount equal to the total of such amount, multiplied by a fraction—

(1) the numerator of which is the average monthly equity market capitalization of the issuer for the 12-month period immediately preceding the beginning of the fiscal year to which such budget relates; and

(2) the denominator of which is the average monthly equity market capitalization of all such issuers for such 12-month period.

(g) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 13(b)(2) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(b)(2)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking “and” at the end;

(2) in subparagraph (B), by striking the period at the end and inserting the following: “; and

“(C) notwithstanding any other provision of law, pay the allocable share of such issuer of a reasonable annual accounting support fee or fees, determined in accordance with section 109 of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002.”.

(h) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to render either the Board, the standard setting body referred to in subsection (a), or both, subject to procedures in Congress to authorize or appropriate public funds, or to prevent such organization from utilizing additional sources of revenue for its activities, such as earnings from publication sales, provided that each additional source of revenue shall not jeopardize, in the judgment of the Commission, the actual and perceived independence of such organization.

TITLE II—AUDITOR INDEPENDENCE

SEC. 201. SERVICES OUTSIDE THE SCOPE OF PRACTICE OF AUDITORS.

(a) PROHIBITED ACTIVITIES.—Section 10A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78j-1) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(g) PROHIBITED ACTIVITIES.—It shall be unlawful for a registered public accounting firm (and any associated person of that firm, to the extent determined appropriate by the Commission) that performs for any issuer any audit required by this title or the rules of the Commission under this title or, beginning 180 days after the date of commencement of the operations of the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board established under section 101 of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002 (in this section referred to as the ‘Board’), the rules of the Board, to provide to that issuer, contemporaneously with the audit, any non-audit service, including—

“(1) bookkeeping or other services related to the accounting records or financial statements of the audit client;

“(2) financial information systems design and implementation;

“(3) appraisal or valuation services, fairness opinions, or contribution-in-kind reports;

“(4) actuarial services;

“(5) internal audit outsourcing services;

“(6) management functions or human resources;

“(7) broker or dealer, investment adviser, or investment banking services;

“(8) legal services and expert services unrelated to the audit; and “(9) any other service that the Board determines, by regulation, is impermissible.

“(h) PREAPPROVAL REQUIRED FOR NON-AUDIT SERVICES.—A registered public accounting firm may engage in any non-audit service, including tax services, that is not described in any of paragraphs (1) through (9) of subsection (g) for an audit client, only if the activity is approved in advance by the audit committee of the issuer, in accordance with subsection (i).”.

(b) EXEMPTION AUTHORITY.—The Board may, on a case by case basis, exempt any person, issuer, public accounting firm, or transaction from the prohibition on the provision of services under section 10A(g) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (as added by this section), to the extent that such exemption is necessary or appropriate in the public interest and is consistent with the protection of investors, and subject to review by the Commission in the same manner as for rules of the Board under section 107.

SEC. 202. PREAPPROVAL REQUIREMENTS.

Section 10A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78j-1), as amended by this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(i) PREAPPROVAL REQUIREMENTS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—

“(A) AUDIT COMMITTEE ACTION.—All auditing services (which may entail providing comfort letters in connection with securities underwritings) and non-audit services, other than as provided in subparagraph (B), provided to an issuer by the auditor of the issuer shall be preapproved by the audit committee of the issuer.

“(B) DE MINIMUS EXCEPTION.—The preapproval requirement under subparagraph (A) is waived with respect to the provision of non-audit services for an issuer, if—

“(i) the aggregate amount of all such non-audit services provided to the issuer constitutes not more than 5 percent of the total amount of revenues paid by the issuer to its auditor;

“(ii) such services were not recognized by the issuer at the time of the engagement to be non-audit services; and

“(iii) such services are promptly brought to the attention of the audit committee of the issuer and approved by the audit committee prior to the completion of the audit, by 1 or more members of the audit committee who are members of the board of directors to whom authority to grant such approvals has been delegated by the audit committee.

“(2) DISCLOSURE TO INVESTORS.—Approval by an audit committee of an issuer under this subsection of a non-audit service to be performed by the auditor of the issuer shall be disclosed to investors in periodic reports required by section 13(a).

“(3) DELEGATION AUTHORITY.—The audit committee of an issuer may delegate to 1 or more designated members of the audit committee who are independent directors of the board of directors, the authority to grant preapprovals required by this subsection. The decisions of any member to whom authority is delegated under this paragraph to preapprove an activity under this subsection shall be presented to the full audit committee at each of its scheduled meetings.

“(4) APPROVAL OF AUDIT SERVICES FOR OTHER PURPOSES.—In carrying out its duties under subsection (m)(2), if the audit committee of an issuer approves an audit service within the scope of the engagement of the auditor, such audit service shall be deemed to have been preapproved for purposes of this subsection.”.

SEC. 203. AUDIT PARTNER ROTATION.

Section 10A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78j-1), as amended by this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(j) AUDIT PARTNER ROTATION.—It shall be unlawful for a registered public accounting firm to provide audit services to an issuer if the lead audit partner (having primary responsibility for the audit) or the audit partner responsible for reviewing the audit that is assigned to perform those audit services has performed audit services for that issuer in each of the 5 previous fiscal years of that issuer.”.

SEC. 204. AUDITOR REPORTS TO AUDIT COMMITTEES.

Section 10A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78j-1), as amended by this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(k) REPORTS TO AUDIT COMMITTEES.—Each registered public accounting firm that performs for any issuer any audit required by this title shall timely report to the audit committee of the issuer—

“(1) all critical accounting policies and practices to be used;

“(2) all alternative treatments of financial information within generally accepted accounting principles that have been discussed with management officials of the issuer, ramifications of the use of such alternative disclosures and treatments, and the treatment preferred by the registered public accounting firm; and

“(3) other material written communications between the registered public accounting firm and the management of the issuer, such as any management letter or schedule of unadjusted differences.”.

SEC. 205. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—Section 3(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(58) AUDIT COMMITTEE.—The term ‘audit committee’ means—

“(A) a committee (or equivalent body) established by and amongst the board of directors of an issuer for the purpose of overseeing the accounting and financial reporting processes of the issuer and audits of the financial statements of the issuer; and

“(B) if no such committee exists with respect to an issuer, the entire board of directors of the issuer.

“(59) REGISTERED PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRM.—The term ‘registered public accounting firm’ has the same meaning as in section 3 of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002.”.

(b) AUDITOR REQUIREMENTS.—Section 10A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78j-1) is amended—

(1) by striking “an independent public accountant” each place that term appears and inserting “a registered public accounting firm”;

(2) by striking “the independent public accountant” each place that term appears and inserting “the registered public accounting firm”;

(3) in subsection (c), by striking “No independent public accountant” and inserting “No registered public accounting firm”; and

(4) in subsection (b)—

(A) by striking “the accountant” each place that term appears and inserting “the firm”;

(B) by striking “such accountant” each place that term appears and inserting “such firm”; and

(C) in paragraph (4), by striking “the accountant’s report” and inserting “the report of the firm”.

(c) OTHER REFERENCES.—The Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78a et seq.) is amended—

(1) in section 12(b)(1) (15 U.S.C. 78l(b)(1)), by striking “independent public accountants” each place that term appears and inserting “a registered public accounting firm”; and

(2) in subsections (e) and (i) of section 17 (15 U.S.C. 78q), by striking “an independent public accountant” each place that term appears and inserting “a registered public accounting firm”.

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 10A(f) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78k(f)) is amended—

(1) by striking “DEFINITION” and inserting “DEFINITIONS”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following: “As used in this section, the term ‘issuer’ means an issuer (as defined in section 3), the securities of which are registered under section 12, or that is required to file reports pursuant to section 15(d), or that will be required to file such reports at the end of a fiscal year of the issuer in which a registration statement filed by such issuer has become effective pursuant to the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77a et seq.), unless its securities are registered under section 12 of this title on or before the end of such fiscal year.”.

SEC. 206. CONFLICTS OF INTEREST.

Section 10A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78j-1), as amended by this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(l) CONFLICTS OF INTEREST.—It shall be unlawful for a registered public accounting firm to perform for an issuer any audit service required by this title, if a chief executive officer, controller, chief financial officer, chief accounting officer or any person serving in an equivalent position for the issuer was employed by that registered independent public accounting firm and participated in any capacity in the audit of that issuer during the 1-year period preceding the date of the initiation of the audit.”.

SEC. 207. STUDY OF MANDATORY ROTATION OF REGISTERED PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRMS.

(a) STUDY AND REVIEW REQUIRED.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a study and review of the potential effects of requiring the mandatory rotation of registered public accounting firms.

(b) REPORT REQUIRED.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General shall submit a report to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Financial Services of the House of Representatives on the results of the study and review required by this section.

(c) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term “mandatory rotation” refers to the imposition of a limit on the period of years in which a particular registered public accounting firm may be the auditor of record for a particular issuer.

SEC. 208. COMMISSION AUTHORITY.

(a) COMMISSION REGULATIONS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall issue final regulations to carry out each of subsections (g) through (l) of section 10A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as added by this title.

(b) AUDITOR INDEPENDENCE.—It shall be unlawful for any registered public accounting firm (or an associated person thereof, as applicable) to prepare or issue any audit report with respect to any issuer, if the firm or associated person engages in any activity with respect to that issuer prohibited by any of subsections (g) through (l) of section 10A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as added by this title, or any rule or regulation of the Commission or of the Board issued thereunder.

SEC. 209. CONSIDERATIONS BY APPROPRIATE STATE REGULATORY AUTHORITIES.

In supervising nonregistered public accounting firms and their associated persons, appropriate State regulatory authorities should make an independent determination of the proper standards applicable, particularly taking into consideration the size and nature of the business of the accounting firms they supervise and the size and nature of the business of the clients of those firms. The standards applied by the Board under this Act should not be presumed to be applicable for purposes of this section for small and medium sized nonregistered public accounting firms.

TITLE III—CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 301. PUBLIC COMPANY AUDIT COMMITTEES.

Section 10A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78f) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(m) STANDARDS RELATING TO AUDIT COMMITTEES.—

“(1) COMMISSION RULES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Effective not later than 270 days after the date of enactment of this subsection, the Commission shall, by rule, direct the national securities exchanges and national securities associations to prohibit the listing of any security of an issuer that is not in compliance with the requirements of any portion of paragraphs (2) through (6).

“(B) OPPORTUNITY TO CURE DEFECTS.—The rules of the Commission under subparagraph (A) shall provide for appropriate procedures for an issuer to have an opportunity to cure any defects that would be the basis for a prohibition under subparagraph (A), before the imposition of such prohibition.

“(2) RESPONSIBILITIES RELATING TO REGISTERED PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRMS.—The audit committee of each issuer, in its capacity as a committee of the board of directors, shall be directly responsible for the appointment, compensation, and oversight of the work of any registered public accounting firm employed by that issuer (including resolution of disagreements between management and the auditor regarding financial reporting) for the purpose of preparing or issuing an audit report or related work, and each such registered public accounting firm shall report directly to the audit committee.

“(3) INDEPENDENCE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Each member of the audit committee of the issuer shall be a member of the board of directors of the issuer, and shall otherwise be independent.

“(B) CRITERIA.—In order to be considered to be independent for purposes of this paragraph, a member of an audit committee of an issuer may not, other than in his or her capacity as a member of the audit committee, the board of directors, or any other board committee—

“(i) accept any consulting, advisory, or other compensatory fee from the issuer; or

“(ii) be an affiliated person of the issuer or any subsidiary thereof.

“(C) EXEMPTION AUTHORITY.—The Commission may exempt from the requirements of subparagraph (B) a particular relationship with respect to audit committee members, as the Commission determines appropriate in light of the circumstances.

“(4) COMPLAINTS.—Each audit committee shall establish procedures for—

“(A) the receipt, retention, and treatment of complaints received by the issuer regarding accounting, internal accounting controls, or auditing matters; and

“(B) the confidential, anonymous submission by employees of the issuer of concerns regarding questionable accounting or auditing matters.

“(5) AUTHORITY TO ENGAGE ADVISERS.—Each audit committee shall have the authority to engage independent counsel and other advisers, as it determines necessary to carry out its duties.

“(6) FUNDING.—Each issuer shall provide for appropriate funding, as determined by the audit committee, in its capacity as a committee of the board of directors, for payment of compensation—

“(A) to the registered public accounting firm employed by the issuer for the purpose of rendering or issuing an audit report; and

“(B) to any advisers employed by the audit committee under paragraph (5).”.

SEC. 302. CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY FOR FINANCIAL REPORTS.

(a) CERTIFICATION OF PERIODIC REPORTS.—Each periodic report containing financial statements filed by an issuer with the Commission pursuant to section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, shall be accompanied by a written statement by the chief executive officer and chief financial officer (or the equivalent thereof) of the issuer.

(b) CONTENT.—The statement required by subsection (a) shall certify the appropriateness of the financial statements and disclosures contained in the periodic report, and that those financial statements and disclosures fairly present, in all material respects, the operations and financial condition of the issuer.

(c) FOREIGN REINCORPORATIONS HAVE NO EFFECT.—Nothing in this section 302 shall be interpreted or applied in any way to allow any issuer to lessen the legal force of the statement required under this section 302, by an issuer having reincorporated or having engaged in any other transaction that resulted in the transfer of the corporate domicile or offices of the issuer from inside the United States to outside of the United States.

SEC. 303. IMPROPER INFLUENCE ON CONDUCT OF AUDITS.

(a) RULES TO PROHIBIT.—It shall be unlawful, in contravention of such rules or regulations as the Commission shall prescribe as necessary and appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, for any officer or director of an issuer, or any other person acting under the direction thereof, to take any action to fraudulently influence, coerce, manipulate, or mislead any independent public or certified accountant engaged in the performance of an audit of the financial statements of that issuer for the purpose of rendering such financial statements materially misleading.

(b) ENFORCEMENT.—In any civil proceeding, the Commission shall have exclusive authority to enforce this section and any rule or regulation issued under this section.

(c) NO PREEMPTION OF OTHER LAW.—The provisions of subsection (a) shall be in addition to, and shall not supersede or preempt, any other provision of law or any rule or regulation issued thereunder.

(d) DEADLINE FOR RULEMAKING.—The Commission shall—

(1) propose the rules or regulations required by this section, not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(2) issue final rules or regulations required by this section, not later than 270 days after that date of enactment.

SEC. 304. FORFEITURE OF CERTAIN BONUSES AND PROFITS.

(a) ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION PRIOR TO NONCOMPLIANCE WITH COMMISSION FINANCIAL REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—If an issuer is required to prepare an accounting restatement due to the material noncompliance of the issuer, as a result of misconduct, with any financial reporting requirement under the securities laws, the chief executive officer and chief financial officer of the issuer shall reimburse the issuer for—

(1) any bonus or other incentive-based or equity-based compensation received by that person from the issuer during the 12-month period following the first public issuance or filing with the Commission (whichever first occurs) of the financial document embodying such financial reporting requirement; and

(2) any profits realized from the sale of securities of the issuer during that 12-month period.

(b) COMMISSION EXEMPTION AUTHORITY.—The Commission may exempt any person from the application of subsection (a), as it deems necessary and appropriate.

SEC. 305. OFFICER AND DIRECTOR BARS AND PENALTIES.

(a) UNFITNESS STANDARD.—

(1) SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT OF 1934.—Section 21(d)(2) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78u(d)(2)) is amended by striking “substantial unfitness” and inserting “unfitness”.

(2) SECURITIES ACT OF 1933.—Section 20(e) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77t(e)) is amended by striking “substantial unfitness” and insert “unfitness”.

(b) EQUITABLE RELIEF.—Section 21(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78u(d)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (2) through (4) as paragraphs (3) through (5), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following:

“(2) EQUITABLE RELIEF.—In any action or proceeding brought or instituted by the Commission under any provision of the securities laws, the Commission may seek, and any Federal court may grant, any equitable relief that may be appropriate or necessary for the benefit of investors.”.

SEC. 306. INSIDER TRADES DURING PENSION FUND BLACKOUT PERIODS PROHIBITED.

(a) PROHIBITION.—It shall be unlawful for any director or executive officer of an issuer of any equity security (other than an exempted security), directly or indirectly, to purchase, sell, or otherwise acquire or transfer any equity security of the issuer (other than an exempted security), during any blackout period with respect to such equity security, in accordance with any exception provided by rule of the Commission pursuant to subsection (d).

(b) EFFECTIVENESS.—

(1) NOTICE REQUIREMENTS.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), no blackout period may take effect earlier than 30 days after the date on which written notice of such blackout period is provided by the plan administrator to the participants or beneficiaries.

(2) EXCEPTION.—The 30-day notice requirement in paragraph (1) shall not apply, and notice under paragraph (1) shall be furnished as soon as is reasonably possible, in any case in which—

(A) a deferral of the blackout period would violate the requirements of subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 404(a)(1) of the Employment Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, and a fiduciary of the plan so reasonably determines in writing; or

(B) the inability to provide the 30-day notice is due to events that were unforeseeable, or circumstances beyond the reasonable control of the plan administrator, and a fiduciary of the plan so reasonably determines in writing.

(3) WRITTEN NOTICE.—The notice required to be provided under paragraph (1) shall be in writing, except that such notice may be in electronic form to the extent that such form is reasonably accessible to the recipient.

(c) REMEDY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any profit realized by a director or executive officer referred to in subsection (a) from any purchase, sale, or other acquisition or transfer in violation of this section shall inure to and be recoverable by the issuer, irrespective of any intention on the part of such director or executive officer in entering into the transaction.

(2) ACTIONS TO RECOVER PROFITS.—An action to recover profits in accordance with this section may be instituted at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction by the issuer, or by the owner of any security of the issuer in the name and in behalf of the issuer if the issuer fails or refuses to bring such action within 60 days after the date of request, or fails diligently to prosecute the action thereafter, except that no such suit shall be brought more than 2 years after the date on which such profit was realized.

(d) RULEMAKING AUTHORIZED.—The Commission may issue rules to clarify the application of this subsection, to ensure adequate notice to all persons affected by this subsection, and to prevent evasion thereof.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) the term “blackout period”, with respect to the equity securities of any issuer—

(A) means any period during which the ability of not fewer than 50 percent of the participants or beneficiaries under all applicable individual account plans maintained by the issuer to purchase, sell, or otherwise acquire or transfer an interest in any equity of such issuer held in such an individual account plan, is suspended by the issuer or a fiduciary of the plan; and

(B) does not include—

(i) a period in which the employees of an issuer may not allocate their interests in the individual account plan due to an express investment restriction—

(I) incorporated into the individual account plan; and

(II) timely disclosed to employees before joining the individual account plan or as a subsequent amendment to the plan; or

(ii) any suspension described in subparagraph (A) that is imposed solely in connection with persons becoming participants or beneficiaries, or ceasing to be participants or beneficiaries, in an applicable individual account plan by reason of a corporate merger, acquisition, divestiture, or similar transaction; and

(2) the term “individual account plan” has the same meaning as in section 3(34) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002(34)).

TITLE IV—ENHANCED FINANCIAL DISCLOSURES

SEC. 401. DISCLOSURES IN PERIODIC REPORTS.

(a) DISCLOSURES REQUIRED.—Section 13 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(i) ACCURACY OF FINANCIAL REPORTS.—Each financial report that is required to be prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles under this title and filed with the Commission shall reflect all material correcting adjustments that have been identified by a registered public accounting firm in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles and the rules and regulations of the Commission.

“(j) OFF-BALANCE SHEET TRANSACTIONS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002, the Commission shall issue final rules providing that each annual and quarterly financial report required to be filed with the Commission shall disclose all material off-balance sheet transactions, arrangements, obligations (including contingent obligations), and other relationships of the issuer with unconsolidated entities or other persons, that may have a material current or future effect on financial condition, changes in financial condition, results of operations, liquidity, capital expenditures, capital resources, or significant components of revenues or expenses.”.

(b) COMMISSION RULES ON PRO FORMA FIGURES.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall issue final rules providing that pro forma financial information included in any periodic or other report filed with the Commission pursuant to the securities laws, or in any public disclosure or press or other release, shall be presented in a manner that—

(1) does not contain an untrue statement of a material fact or omit to state a material fact necessary in order to make the pro forma financial information, in light of the circumstances under which it is presented, not misleading; and

(2) reconciles it with the financial condition and results of operations of the issuer under generally accepted accounting principles.

(c) STUDY AND REPORT ON SPECIAL PURPOSE ENTITIES.—

(1) STUDY REQUIRED.—The Commission shall, not later than 1 year after the effective date of adoption of off-balance sheet disclosure rules required by section 13(j) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as added by this section, complete a study of filings by issuers and their disclosures to determine—

(A) the extent of off-balance sheet transactions, including assets, liabilities, leases, losses, and the use of special purpose entities; and

(B) whether generally accepted accounting rules result in financial statements of issuers reflecting the economics of such off-balance sheet transactions to investors in a transparent fashion.

(2) REPORT AND RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than 6 months after the date of completion of the study required by paragraph (1), the Commission shall submit a report to the President, the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate, and the Committee on Financial Services of the House of Representatives, setting forth—

(A) the amount or an estimate of the amount of off-balance sheet transactions, including assets, liabilities, leases, and losses of, and the use of special purpose entities by, issuers filing periodic reports pursuant to section 13 or 15 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

(B) the extent to which special purpose entities are used to facilitate off-balance sheet transactions;

(C) whether generally accepted accounting principles or the rules of the Commission result in financial statements of issuers reflecting the economics of such transactions to investors in a transparent fashion;

(D) whether generally accepted accounting principles specifically result in the consolidation of special purpose entities sponsored by an issuer in cases in which the issuer has the majority of the risks and rewards of the special purpose entity; and

(E) any recommendations of the Commission for improving the transparency and quality of reporting off-balance sheet transactions in the financial statements and disclosures required to be filed by an issuer with the Commission.

SEC. 402. ENHANCED CONFLICT OF INTEREST PROVISIONS.

(a) PROHIBITION ON PERSONAL LOANS TO EXECUTIVES.—Section 13 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m), as amended by this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(k) PROHIBITION ON PERSONAL LOANS TO EXECUTIVES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—It shall be unlawful for any issuer, directly or indirectly, to extend or maintain credit, or arrange for the extension of credit, in the form of a personal loan to or for any director or executive officer (or equivalent thereof) of that issuer.

“(2) LIMITATION.—Paragraph (1) does not preclude any home improvement and manufactured home loans (as that term is defined in section 5 of the Home Owners Loan Act), consumer credit (as defined in section 103 of the Truth in Lending Act), or any extension of credit under an open end credit plan (as defined in section 103 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1602)), that is—

“(A) made in the ordinary course of the consumer credit business of such issuer;

“(B) of a type that is generally made available by such issuer to the public; and

“(C) made by such issuer on market terms, or terms that are no more favorable than those offered by the issuer to the general public for such loans.”.

SEC. 403. DISCLOSURES OF TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING MANAGEMENT AND PRINCIPAL STOCKHOLDERS.

Section 16(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78p(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking “security, shall file,” and inserting the following:

“(1) shall file”; and

(2) by striking “beneficial owner, and” and all that follows through the end of the subsection and inserting the following: “beneficial owner; and

“(2) if there has been a change in such ownership, or if such person shall have purchased or sold a security-based swap agreement (as defined in section 206B of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act) involving such equity security, shall file with the Commission (and if such security is registered on a national securities exchange, shall also file with the exchange), a statement before the end of the second business day following the day on which the subject transaction has been executed, or at such other time as the Commission shall establish, by rule, in any case in which the Commission determines that such 2-day period is not feasible, indicating ownership by that person at the date of filing, any such changes in such ownership, and such purchases and sales of the security-based swap agreements as have occurred since the most recent such filing under this paragraph.”.

SEC. 404. MANAGEMENT ASSESSMENT OF INTERNAL CONTROLS.

(a) RULES REQUIRED.—The Commission shall prescribe rules requiring each annual report required by section 13 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m) to contain an internal control report, which shall—

(1) state the responsibility of management for establishing and maintaining an adequate internal control structure and procedures for financial reporting; and

(2) contain an assessment, as of the end of the most recent fiscal year of the issuer, of the effectiveness of the internal control structure and procedures of the issuer for financial reporting.

(b) INTERNAL CONTROL EVALUATION AND REPORTING.—With respect to the internal control assessment required by subsection (a), each registered public accounting firm that prepares or issues the audit report for the issuer shall attest to, and report on, the assessment made by the management of the issuer. An attestation made under this subsection shall be made in accordance with standards for attestation engagements issued or adopted by the Board. Any such attestation shall not be the subject of a separate engagement.

SEC. 405. EXEMPTION.

Nothing in section 401, 402, or 404, the amendments made by those sections, or the rules of the Commission under those sections shall apply to any investment company registered under section 8 of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a–8).

SEC. 406. CODE OF ETHICS FOR SENIOR FINANCIAL OFFICERS.

(a) CODE OF ETHICS DISCLOSURE.—The Commission shall issue rules to require each issuer, together with periodic reports required pursuant to sections 13(a) and 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, to disclose whether or not, and if not, the reason therefor, such issuer has adopted a code of ethics for senior financial officers, applicable to its principal financial officer, comptroller or principal accounting officer, or persons performing similar functions.

(b) CHANGES IN CODES OF ETHICS.—The Commission shall revise its regulations concerning matters requiring prompt disclosure on Form 8-K (or any successor thereto) to require the immediate disclosure, by means of the filing of such form, dissemination by the Internet or by other electronic means, by any issuer of any change in or waiver of the code of ethics of the issuer.

(c) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term “code of ethics” means such standards as are reasonably necessary to promote—

(1) honest and ethical conduct, including the ethical handling of actual or apparent conflicts of interest between personal and professional relationships;

(2) full, fair, accurate, timely, and understandable disclosure in the periodic reports required to be filed by the issuer; and

(3) compliance with applicable governmental rules and regulations.

(d) DEADLINE FOR RULEMAKING.—The Commission shall—

(1) propose rules to implement this section, not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(2) issue final rules to implement this section, not later than 180 days after that date of enactment.

SEC. 407. DISCLOSURE OF AUDIT COMMITTEE FINANCIAL EXPERT.

(a) RULES DEFINING “FINANCIAL EXPERT”.—The Commission shall issue rules, as necessary or appropriate in the public interest and consistent with the protection of investors, to require each issuer, together with periodic reports required pursuant to sections 13(a) and 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, to disclose whether or not, and if not, the reasons therefor, the audit committee of that issuer is comprised of at least 1 member who is a financial expert, as such term is defined by the Commission.

(b) CONSIDERATIONS.—In defining the term “financial expert” for purposes of subsection (a), the Commission shall consider whether a person has, through education and experience as a public accountant or auditor or a principal financial officer, comptroller, or principal accounting officer of an issuer, or from a position involving the performance of similar functions—

(1) an understanding of generally accepted accounting principles and financial statements;

(2) experience in—

(A) the preparation or auditing of financial statements of generally comparable issuers; and

(B) the application of such principles in connection with the accounting for estimates, accruals, and reserves;

(3) experience with internal accounting controls; and

(4) an understanding of audit committee functions.

(c) DEADLINE FOR RULEMAKING.—The Commission shall—

(1) propose rules to implement this section, not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(2) issue final rules to implement this section, not later than 180 days after that date of enactment.

TITLE V—ANALYST CONFLICTS OF INTERESTSEC. 501. TREATMENT OF SECURITIES ANALYSTS BY REGISTERED SECURITIES ASSOCIATIONS.

(a) RULES REGARDING SECURITIES ANALYSTS.—Section 15A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78o–3) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(m) RULES REGARDING SECURITIES ANALYSTS.—

“(1) ANALYST PROTECTIONS.—The Commission, or upon the authorization and direction of the Commission, a registered securities association or national securities exchange, shall have adopted, not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this subsection, rules reasonably designed to address conflicts of interest that can arise when research analysts recommend equity securities in research reports and public appearances, in order to improve the objectivity of research and provide investors with more useful and reliable information, including rules designed—

“(A) to foster greater public confidence in securities research, and to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, by—

“(i) restricting the prepublication clearance or approval of research reports by persons employed by the broker or dealer who are engaged in investment banking activities, or persons not directly responsible for investment research, other than legal or compliance staff;

“(ii) limiting the supervision and compensatory evaluation of securities analysts to officials employed by the broker or dealer who are not engaged in investment banking activities; and

“(iii) requiring that a broker or dealer and persons employed by a broker or dealer who are involved with investment banking activities may not, directly or indirectly, retaliate against or threaten to retaliate against any securities analyst employed by that broker or dealer or its affiliates as a result of an adverse, negative, or otherwise unfavorable research report that may adversely affect the present or prospective investment banking relationship of the broker or dealer with the issuer that is the subject of the research report, except that such rules may not limit the authority of a broker or dealer to discipline a securities analyst for causes other than such research report in accordance with the policies and procedures of the firm;

“(B) to define periods during which brokers or dealers who have participated, or are to participate, in a public offering of securities as underwriters or dealers should not publish or otherwise distribute research reports relating to such securities or to the issuer of such securities;

“(C) to establish structural and institutional safeguards within registered brokers or dealers to assure that securities analysts are separated by appropriate informational partitions within the firm from the review, pressure, or oversight of those whose involvement in investment banking activities might potentially bias their judgment or supervision; and

“(D) to address such other issues as the Commission, or such association or exchange, determines appropriate.

“(2) DISCLOSURE.—The Commission, or upon the authorization and direction of the Commission, a registered securities association or national securities exchange, shall have adopted, not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this subsection, rules reasonably designed to require each securities analyst to disclose in public appearances, and each registered broker or dealer to disclose in each research report, as applicable, conflicts of interest that are known or should have been known by the securities analyst or the broker or dealer, to exist at the time of the appearance or the date of distribution of the report, including—

“(A) the extent to which the securities analyst has debt or equity investments in the issuer that is the subject of the appearance or research report;

“(B) whether any compensation has been received by the registered broker or dealer, or any affiliate thereof, including the securities analyst, from the issuer that is the subject of the appearance or research report, subject to such exemptions as the Commission may determine appropriate and necessary to prevent disclosure by virtue of this subparagraph of material non-public information regarding specific potential future investment banking transactions of such issuer, as is appropriate in the public interest and consistent with the protection of investors;

“(C) whether an issuer, the securities of which are recommended in the appearance or research report, currently is, or during the 1-year period preceding the date of the appearance or date of distribution of the report has been, a client of the registered broker or dealer, and if so, stating the types of services provided to the issuer;

“(D) whether the securities analyst received compensation with respect to a research report, based upon (among any other factors) the investment banking revenues (either generally or specifically earned from the issuer being analyzed) of the registered broker or dealer; and

“(E) such other disclosures of conflicts of interest that are material to investors, research analysts, or the broker or dealer as the Commission, or such association or exchange, determines appropriate.

“(3) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection—

“(A) the term ‘securities analyst’ means any associated person of a registered broker or dealer that is principally responsible for, and any associated person who reports directly or indirectly to a securities analyst in connection with, the preparation of the substance of a research report, whether or not any such person has the job title of ‘securities analyst’; and

“(B) the term ‘research report’ means a written or electronic communication that includes an analysis of equity securities of individual companies or industries, and that provides information reasonably sufficient upon which to base an investment decision.”.

2(a)) is amended by inserting "15A(n)," before "15B".

(c) COMMISSION AUTHORITY.—The Commission may promulgate and amend its regulations, or direct a registered securities association or national securities exchange to promulgate and amend its rules, to carry out section 15A(n) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as added by this section, as is necessary for the protection of investors and in the public interest.

TITLE VI—COMMISSION RESOURCES AND AUTHORITY

SEC. 601. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 35 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78kk) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 35. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"In addition to any other funds authorized to be appropriated to the Commission, there are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the functions, powers, and duties of the Commission, $776,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, of which—

"(1) $102,700,000 shall be available to fund additional compensation, including salaries and benefits, as authorized in the Investor and Capital Markets Fee Relief Act (Public Law 107-123; 115 Stat. 2390 et seq.);

"(2) $108,400,000 shall be available for information technology, security enhancements, and recovery and mitigation activities in light of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001; and

"(3) $98,000,000 shall be available to add not fewer than an additional 200 qualified professionals to provide enhanced oversight of auditors and audit services required by the Federal securities laws, and to improve Commission investigative and disciplinary efforts with respect to such auditors and services, as well as for additional professional support staff necessary to strengthen the programs of the Commission involving Full Disclosure and Prevention and Suppression of Fraud, risk management, industry technology review, compliance, inspections, examinations, market regulation, and investment management."

SEC. 602. APPEARANCE AND PRACTICE BEFORE THE COMMISSION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78a et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 4B the following:

"SEC. 4C. APPEARANCE AND PRACTICE BEFORE THE COMMISSION.

"(a) AUTHORITY TO CENSURE.—The Commission may censure any person, or deny, temporarily or permanently, to any person the privilege of appearing or practicing before the Commission in any way, if that person is found by the Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing in the matter—

"(1) not to possess the requisite qualifications to represent others;

"(2) to be lacking in character or integrity, or to have engaged in unethical or improper professional conduct; or

"(3) to have willfully violated, or willfully aided and abetted the violation of, any provision of the securities laws or the rules and regulations issued thereunder.

"(b) DEFINITION.—With respect to any registered public accounting firm, for purposes of this section, the term 'improper professional conduct' means—

"(1) intentional or knowing conduct, including reckless conduct, that results in a violation of applicable professional standards; and

"(2) negligent conduct in the form of—

"(A) a single instance of highly unreasonable conduct that results in a violation of applicable professional standards in circumstances in which the registered public accounting firm knows, or should know, that heightened scrutiny is warranted; or professional standards, that indicate a lack of competence to practice before the Commission.

"(B) repeated instances of unreasonable conduct, each resulting in a violation of applicable

"(c) STUDY AND REPORT.—(1) The Commission shall conduct a study to determine based upon information for the period from January 1, 1998 to December 31, 2001—

"(A) the number of 'securities professionals', which term shall mean public accountants, public accounting firms, investment bankers, investment advisers, brokers, dealers, attorneys, and other securities professionals practicing before the Commission—

"(i) who have been found to have aided and abetted a violation of the Federal securities laws, including rules or regulations promulgated thereunder (hereinafter collectively referred to as 'Federal securities laws'), but who have not been sanctioned, disciplined, or otherwise penalized as a primary violator in any administrative action or civil proceeding, including in any settlement of such actions or proceedings (referred to hereinafter as 'aiders and abettors'); and

"(ii) who have been found to have been primary violators of the Federal securities laws;

"(B) a description of the Federal securities laws violations committed by aiders and abettors and by primary violators, including—

"(i) the specific provisions of the Federal securities laws violated;

"(ii) the specific sanctions and penalties imposed upon, such aiders and abettors and primary violators, including the amount of any monetary penalties assessed upon and collected from such persons;

"(iii) the occurrence of multiple violations by the same person or persons either as an aider or abettor or as a primary violator; and

"(iv) whether as to each such violator disciplinary sanctions have been imposed, including any censure, suspension, temporary bar, or permanent bar to practice before the Commission; and

"(C) the amount of disgorgement, restitution or any other fines or payments the Commission has (i) assessed upon and (ii) collected from, aiders and abettors and from primary violators.

"(2) A report based upon the study conducted pursuant to subsection (c)(1) shall be submitted to the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs no later than 6 months after the date of enactment of the 'Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002'.

"(d) RULES OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR ATTORNEYS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall establish rules, in the public interest and for the protection of investors, setting forth minimum standards of professional conduct for attorneys appearing and practicing before the Commission in any way in the representation of public companies, including a rule requiring an attorney to report evidence of a material violation of securities law or breach of fiduciary duty or similar violation by the company or any agent thereof to the chief legal counsel or the chief executive officer of the company (or the equivalent thereof) and, if the counsel or officer does not appropriately respond to the evidence (adopting, as necessary, appropriate remedial measures or sanctions with respect to the violation), requiring the attorney to report the evidence to the audit committee of the board of directors or to another committee of the board of directors comprised solely of directors not employed directly or indirectly by the company, or to the board of directors."

(b) ELECTRONIC FILING.—Notwithstanding the provisions of section 403 of this Act, section 16(a)(2) of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, as added by section 403, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) if there has been a change in such ownership, or if such person shall have purchased or sold a security-based swap agreement (as defined in section 206B of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act) involving such equity security, shall file electronically with the Commission (and if such security is registered on a national securities exchange, shall also file with the exchange), a statement before the end of the second business day following the day on which the subject transaction has been executed, or at such other times as the Commission shall establish, by rule, in any case in which the Commission determines that such 2 day period is not feasible, and the Commission shall provide that statement on a publicly accessible Internet site not later than the end of the business day following that filing, and the issuer (if the issuer maintains a corporate website) shall provide that statement on that corporate website not later than the end of the business day following that filing (the requirements of this paragraph with respect to electronic filing and providing the statement on a corporate website shall take effect 1 year after the date of enactment of this paragraph), indicating ownership by that person at the date of filing, any such changes in such ownership, and such purchases and sales of the security-based swap agreements as have occurred since the most recent such filing under this paragraph."

SEC. 603. FEDERAL COURT AUTHORITY TO IMPOSE PENNY STOCK BARS.

"(7) AUTHORITY OF A COURT TO PROHIBIT PERSONS FROM PARTICIPATING IN AN OFFERING OF PENNY STOCK.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In any proceeding under paragraph (1) against any person participating in, or, at the time of the alleged misconduct who was participating in, an offering of penny stock, the court may prohibit that person from participating in an offering of penny stock, conditionally or unconditionally, and permanently or for such period of time as the court shall determine.

"(B) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'person participating in an offering of penny stock' includes any person engaging in activities with a broker, dealer, or issuer for purposes of issuing, trading, or inducing or attempting to induce the purchase or sale of, any penny stock. The Commission may, by rule or regulation, define such term to include other activities, and may, by rule, regulation, or order, exempt any person or class of persons, in whole or in part, conditionally or unconditionally, from inclusion in such term.

(b) SECURITIES ACT OF 1933.—Section 20 of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77t) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(g) AUTHORITY OF A COURT TO PROHIBIT PERSONS FROM PARTICIPATING IN AN OFFERING OF PENNY STOCK.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In any proceeding under subsection (a) against any person participating in, or, at the time of the alleged misconduct, who was participating in, an offering of penny stock, the court may prohibit that person from participating in an offering of penny stock, conditionally or unconditionally, and permanently or for such period of time as the court shall determine.

"(2) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'person participating in an offering of penny stock' includes any person engaging in activities with a broker, dealer, or issuer for purposes of issuing, trading, or inducing or attempting to induce the purchase or sale of, any penny stock. The Commission may, by rule or regulation, define such term to include other activities, and may, by rule, regulation, or order, exempt any person or class of persons, in whole or in part, conditionally or unconditionally, from inclusion in such term."

TITLE VII—STUDIES AND REPORTSSEC. 701. GAO STUDY AND REPORT REGARDING CONSOLIDATION OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRMS.

(a) STUDY REQUIRED.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a study—

(1) to identify—

(B) the present and future impact of the condition described in subparagraph (A) on capital formation and securities markets, both domestic and international; and

(C) solutions to any problems identified under subparagraph (B), including ways to increase competition and the number of firms capable of providing audit services to large national and multinational business organizations that are subject to the securities laws;

(2) of the problems, if any, faced by business organizations that have resulted from limited competition among public accounting firms, including—

(A) higher costs;

(B) lower quality of services;

(C) impairment of auditor independence; or

(D) lack of choice; and

(3) whether and to what extent Federal or State regulations impede competition among public accounting firms.

(b) CONSULTATION.—In planning and conducting the study under this section, the Comptroller General shall consult with—

(1) the Commission;

(2) the regulatory agencies that perform functions similar to the Commission within the other member countries of the Group of Seven Industrialized Nations;

(3) the Department of Justice; and

(4) any other public or private sector organization that the Comptroller General considers appropriate.

(c) REPORT REQUIRED.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General shall submit a report on the results of the study required by this section to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Financial Services of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 702. COMMISSION STUDY AND REPORT REGARDING CREDIT RATING AGENCIES.

(a) STUDY REQUIRED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall conduct a study of the role and function of credit rating agencies in the operation of the securities market.

SEC. 805. REVIEW OF FEDERAL SENTENCING GUIDELINES FOR OBSTRUCTION OF JUSTICE AND EXTENSIVE CRIMINAL FRAUD.

Pursuant to section 994 of title 28, United States Code, and in accordance with this section, the United States Sentencing Commission shall review and amend, as appropriate, the Federal Sentencing Guidelines and related policy statements to ensure that—

(1) the base offense level and existing enhancements contained in United States Sentencing Guideline 2J1.2 relating to obstruction of justice are sufficient to deter and punish that activity;

(2) the enhancements and specific offense characteristics relating to obstruction of justice are adequate in cases where—

(A) documents and other physical evidence are actually destroyed, altered, or fabricated;

(B) the destruction, alteration, or fabrication of evidence involves—

(i) a large amount of evidence, a large number of participants, or is otherwise extensive;

(ii) the selection of evidence that is particularly probative or essential to the investigation; or

(iii) more than minimal planning; or

(C) the offense involved abuse of a special skill or a position of trust;

(3) the guideline offense levels and enhancements for violations of section 1519 or 1520 of title 18, United States Code, as added by this title, are sufficient to deter and punish that activity;

(4) the guideline offense levels and enhancements under United States Sentencing Guideline 2B1.1 (as in effect on the date of enactment of this Act) are sufficient for a fraud offense when the number of victims adversely involved is significantly greater than 50;

(5) a specific offense characteristic enhancing sentencing is provided under United States Sentencing Guideline 2B1.1 (as in effect on the date of enactment of this Act) for a fraud offense that endangers the solvency or financial security of a substantial number of victims; and

(6) the guidelines that apply to organizations in United States Sentencing Guidelines, chapter 8, are sufficient to deter and punish organizational criminal misconduct.

SEC. 806. PROTECTION FOR EMPLOYEES OF PUBLICLY TRADED COMPANIES WHO PROVIDE EVIDENCE OF FRAUD.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 73 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 1514 the following:

“§1514A. Civil action to protect against retaliation in fraud cases

“(a) WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION FOR EMPLOYEES OF PUBLICLY TRADED COMPANIES.—No company with a class of securities registered under section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78l), or that is required to file reports under section 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78o(d)), or any officer, employee, contractor, subcontractor, or agent of such company, may discharge, demote, suspend, threaten, harass, or in any other manner discriminate against an employee in the terms and conditions of employment because of any lawful act done by the employee—

“(1) to provide information, cause information to be provided, or otherwise assist in an investigation regarding any conduct which the employee reasonably believes constitutes a violation of section 1341, 1343, 1344, or 1348, any rule or regulation of the Securities and Exchange Commission, or any provision of Federal law relating to fraud against shareholders, when the information or assistance is provided to or the investigation is conducted by—

“(A) a Federal regulatory or law enforcement agency;

“(B) any Member of Congress or any committee of Congress; or

“(C) a person with supervisory authority over the employee (or such other person working for the employer who has the authority to investigate, discover, or terminate misconduct); or

“(2) to file, cause to be filed, testify, participate in, or otherwise assist in a proceeding filed or about to be filed (with any knowledge of the employer) relating to an alleged violation of section 1341, 1343, 1344, or 1348, any rule or regulation of the Securities and Exchange Commission, or any provision of Federal law relating to fraud against shareholders.

“(b) ENFORCEMENT ACTION.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—A person who alleges discharge or other discrimination by any person in violation of subsection (a) may seek relief under subsection (c), by—

“(A) filing a complaint with the Secretary of Labor; or

“(B) if the Secretary has not issued a final decision within 180 days of the filing of the complaint and there is no showing that such delay is due to the bad faith of the claimant, bringing an action at law or equity for de novo review in the appropriate district court of the United States, which shall have jurisdiction over such an action without regard to the amount in controversy.

“(2) PROCEDURE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—An action under paragraph (1)(A) shall be governed under the rules and procedures set forth in section 42121(b) of title 49, United States Code.

“(B) EXCEPTION.—Notification made under section 42121(b)(1) of title 49, United States Code, shall be made to the person named in the complaint and to the employer.

“(C) BURDENS OF PROOF.—An action brought under paragraph (1)(B) shall be governed by the legal burdens of proof set forth in section 42121(b) of title 49, United States Code.

“(D) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—An action under paragraph (1) shall be commenced not later than 90 days after the date on which the violation occurs.

“(c) REMEDIES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—An employee prevailing in any action under subsection (b)(1) shall be entitled to all relief necessary to make the employee whole.

“(2) COMPENSATORY DAMAGES.—Relief for any action under paragraph (1) shall include—

“(A) reinstatement with the same seniority status that the employee would have had, but for the discrimination;

“(B) the amount of back pay, with interest; and

“(C) compensation for any special damages sustained as a result of the discrimination, including litigation costs, expert witness fees, and reasonable attorney fees.

“(d) RIGHTS RETAINED BY EMPLOYEE.—Nothing in this section shall be deemed to diminish the rights, privileges, or remedies of any employee under any Federal or State law, or under any collective bargaining agreement.”.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 73 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1514 the following new item:

“1514A. Civil action to protect against retaliation in fraud cases.”.

SEC. 807. CRIMINAL PENALTIES FOR DEFRAUDING SHAREHOLDERS OF PUBLICLY TRADED COMPANIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 63 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“§1348. Securities fraud

“Whoever knowingly executes, or attempts to execute, a scheme or artifice—

“(1) to defraud any person in connection with any security of an issuer with a class of securities registered under section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78l) or that is required to file reports under section 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78o(d)); or

“(2) to obtain, by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, any money or property in connection with the purchase or sale of any security of an issuer with a class of securities registered under section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78l) or that is required to file reports under section 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78o(d)); shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.”.

“1348. Securities fraud.”.

TITLE IX—WHITE-COLLAR CRIME PENALTY ENHANCEMENTS

SEC. 901. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “White-Collar Crime Penalty Enhancement Act of 2002”.

SEC. 902. CRIMINAL PENALTIES FOR CONSPIRACY TO COMMIT OFFENSE OR TO DEFRAUD THE UNITED STATES.

Section 371 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking “If two or more” and all that follows through “If, however,” and inserting the following:

“(a) IN GENERAL.—If 2 or more persons—
“(1) conspire to commit any offense against the United States, in any manner or for any purpose, and 1 or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each person shall be fined or imprisoned, or both, as set forth in the specific substantive offense which was the object of the conspiracy; or

“(2) conspire to defraud the United States, or any agency thereof in any manner or for any purpose, and 1 or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each person shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

“(b) MISDEMEANOR OFFENSE.—If, however,”.

SEC. 903. CRIMINAL PENALTIES FOR MAIL AND WIRE FRAUD.

(a) MAIL FRAUD.—Section 1341 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking “five years” and inserting “10 years”.

(b) WIRE FRAUD.—Section 1343 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking “five years” and inserting “10 years”.

SEC. 904. CRIMINAL PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS OF THE EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT OF 1974.

Section 501 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1131) is amended—

(1) by striking “$5,000” and inserting “$100,000”;

(2) by striking “one year” and inserting “10 years”; and

(3) by striking “$100,000” and inserting “$500,000”.

SEC. 905. AMENDMENT TO SENTENCING GUIDELINES RELATING TO CERTAIN WHITE-COLLAR OFFENSES.

(a) DIRECTIVE TO THE UNITED STATES SENTENCING COMMISSION.—Pursuant to its authority under section 994(p) of title 18, United States Code, and in accordance with this section, the United States Sentencing Commission shall review and, as appropriate, amend the Federal Sentencing Guidelines and related policy statements to implement the provisions of this title.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—In carrying out this section, the Sentencing Commission shall—

(1) ensure that the sentencing guidelines and policy statements reflect the serious nature of the offenses and the penalties set forth in this title, the growing incidence of serious fraud offenses which are identified above, and the need to modify the sentencing guidelines and policy statements to deter, prevent, and punish such offenses;

(2) consider the extent to which the guidelines and policy statements adequately address—

(A) whether the guideline offense levels and enhancements for violations of the sections amended by this title are sufficient to deter and punish such offenses, and specifically, are adequate in view of the statutory increases in penalties contained in this title; and

(B) whether a specific offense characteristic should be added in United States Sentencing Guideline section 2B1.1 in order to provide for stronger penalties for fraud when the crime is committed by a corporate officer or director;

(3) assure reasonable consistency with other relevant directives and sentencing guidelines;

(4) account for any additional aggravating or mitigating circumstances that might justify exceptions to the generally applicable sentencing ranges;

(5) make any necessary conforming changes to the sentencing guidelines; and

(6) assure that the guidelines adequately meet the purposes of sentencing as set forth in section 3553(a)(2) of title 18, United States Code.

SEC. 906. CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY FOR FINANCIAL REPORTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 63 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“§ 1348. Failure of corporate officers to certify financial reports

“(a) CERTIFICATION OF PERIODIC FINANCIAL REPORTS.—Each periodic report containing financial statements filed by an issuer with the Securities Exchange Commission pursuant to section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(a) or 78o(d)) shall be accompanied by a written statement by the chairman of the board, chief executive officer, and chief financial officer (or equivalent thereof) of the issuer.

“(b) CONTENT.—The statement required under subsection (a) shall certify the appropriateness of the financial statements and disclosures contained in the periodic report or financial report, and that those financial statements and disclosures fairly present, in all material respects, the operations and financial condition of the issuer.

“(c) CRIMINAL PENALTIES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

“(1) any person who recklessly and knowingly violates any provision of this section shall upon conviction be fined not more than $500,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both; or

“(2) any person who willfully violates any provision of this section shall upon conviction be fined not more than $1,000,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.”.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The section analysis for chapter 63 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“1348. Failure of corporate officers to certify financial reports.”.

SEC. 907. HIGHER MAXIMUM PENALTIES FOR MAIL AND WIRE FRAUD.

(a) MAIL FRAUD.—Section 1341 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking “five” and inserting “ten”.

(b) WIRE FRAUD.—Section 1343 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking “five” and inserting “ten”.

SEC. 908. TAMPERING WITH A RECORD OR OTHERWISE IMPEDING AN OFFICIAL PROCEEDING.

Section 1512 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by re-designating subsections (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), and (i) as subsections (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i) and (j);

(2) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

“(c) Whoever corruptly—

“(1) alters, destroys, mutilates, or conceals a record, document, or other object, or attempts to do so, with the intent to impair the object's integrity or availability for use in an official proceeding; or

“(2) otherwise obstructs, influences, or impedes any official proceeding, or attempts to do so; shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.”.

SEC. 909. TEMPORARY FREEZE AUTHORITY FOR THE SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended by inserting after section 21C(c)(2) (15 U.S.C. 78u-3(c)(2)) the following:

“(3) TEMPORARY FREEZE.—(A) Whenever, during the course of a lawful investigation involving possible violations of the Federal securities laws by an issuer of publicly traded securities or any of its directors, officers, partners, controlling persons, agents, or employees, it shall appear to the Commission that it is likely that the issuer will make extraordinary payments (whether compensation or otherwise) to any of the foregoing persons, the Commission may petition a Federal district court for a temporary order requiring the issuer to escrow, subject to court supervision, those payments in an interest-bearing account for 45 days. Such an order shall be entered, if the court finds that the issuer is likely to make such extraordinary payments, only after notice and opportunity for a hearing, unless the court determines that notice and hearing prior to entry of the order would be impracticable or contrary to the public interest. A temporary order shall become effective immediately and shall be served upon the parties subject to it and, unless set aside, limited or suspended by court of competent jurisdiction, shall remain effective and enforceable for 45 days. The period of the order may be extended by the court upon good cause shown for not longer than 45 days, provided that the combined period of the order not exceed 90 days.

“(B) If the individual affected by such order is charged with violations of the Federal securities laws by the expiration of the 45 days (or the expiration of any extended period), the escrow would continue, subject to court approval, until the conclusion of any legal proceedings. The issuer and the affected director, officer, partner, controlling person, agent or employee would have the right to petition the court for review of the order. If the individual affected by such order is not charged, the escrow will terminate at the expiration of the 45 days (or the expiration of any extended period), and the payments (with accrued interest) returned to the issuer.”.

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 21C(c)(2) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78u-3(c)(2)) is amended by striking “This” and inserting “Paragraph (1) of this”.

SEC. 910. AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL SENTENCING GUIDELINES.

(a) REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE CONSIDERATION BY THE UNITED STATES SENTENCING COMMISSION.—Pursuant to its authority under section 994(p) of title 28, United States Code, and in accordance with this section, the United States Sentencing Commission is requested to—

(1) promptly review the sentencing guidelines applicable to securities and accounting fraud and related offenses;

(2) expeditiously consider promulgation of new sentencing guidelines or amendments to existing sentencing guidelines to provide an enhancement for officers or directors of publicly traded corporations who commit fraud and related offenses; and

(3) submit to Congress an explanation of actions taken by the Commission pursuant to paragraph (2) and any additional policy recommendations the Commission may have for combating offenses described in paragraph (1).

(b) OTHER.—In carrying out this section, the Sentencing Commission is requested to—

(1) ensure that the sentencing guidelines and policy statements reflect the serious nature of securities, pension, and accounting fraud and the need for aggressive and appropriate law enforcement action to prevent such offenses;

(2) assure reasonable consistency with other relevant directives and with other guidelines;

(3) account for any aggravating or mitigating circumstances that might justify exceptions, including circumstances for which the sentencing guidelines currently provide sentencing enhancements;

(4) make any necessary conforming changes to the sentencing guidelines; and

(5) assure that the guidelines adequately meet the purposes of sentencing as set forth in section 3553(a)(2) of title 18, United States Code.

(c) EMERGENCY AUTHORITY AND DEADLINE FOR COMMISSION ACTION.—The Commission is requested to promulgate the guidelines or amendments provided for under this section as soon as practicable, and in any event not later than the 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, in accordance with the procedures set forth in section 21(a) of the Sentencing Reform Act of 1987, as though the authority under that Act had not expired.

SEC. 911. AUTHORITY OF THE COMMISSION TO PROHIBIT PERSONS FROM SERVING AS OFFICERS OR DIRECTORS.

“(f) AUTHORITY OF THE COMMISSION TO PROHIBIT PERSONS FROM SERVING AS OFFICERS OR DIRECTORS.—In any cease-and-desist proceeding under subsection (a), the Commission may issue an order to prohibit, conditionally or unconditionally, and permanently or for such period of time as it shall determine, any person who has violated section 10(b) of this title or the rules or regulations thereunder from acting as an officer or director of any issuer that has a class of securities registered pursuant to section 12 of this title or that is required to file reports pursuant to section 15(d) of this title if the person's conduct demonstrates unfitness to serve as an officer or director of any such issuer.”.

“(f) AUTHORITY OF THE COMMISSION TO PROHIBIT PERSONS FROM SERVING AS OFFICERS OR DIRECTORS.—In any cease-and-desist proceeding under subsection (a), the Commission may issue an order to prohibit, conditionally or unconditionally, and permanently or for such period of time as it shall determine, any person who has violated section 17(a)(1) of this title from acting as an officer or director of any issuer that has a class of securities registered pursuant to section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 or that is required to file reports pursuant to section 15(d) of that Act if the person's conduct demonstrates unfitness to serve as an officer or director of any such issuer.”.

TITLE X—CORPORATE TAX RETURNS

SEC. 1001. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING THE SIGNING OF CORPORATE TAX RETURNS BY CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICERS.

It is the sense of the Senate that the Federal income tax return of a corporation should be signed by the chief executive officer of such corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate insists on its amendment and requests a conference with the House.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF LAVENSKI R. SMITH OF ARKANSAS, TO BE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will proceed to executive session.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the clerk will report the motion to invoke cloture.

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate on Executive Calendar No. 903, the nomination of Lavenski R. Smith, of Arkansas, to be United States Circuit Judge for the Eighth Circuit:

KULSKI, BLANCHE R. LINCOLN, BOB GRAHAM, JEAN CARNAHAN, JAY ROCKEFELLER, CHARLES SCHUMER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I understand that no one is asking for a rollcall vote on confirmation if we can reach the cloture vote. So if we reach cloture, this will be the last vote of the evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous consent, the mandatory quorum call under the rule is waived. The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on Executive Calendar No. 903, the nomination of Lavenski R. Smith of Arkansas to be United States Circuit Judge for the Eighth Circuit, shall be brought to a close?

The yeas and nays are required under the rule.

The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CRAIG), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CRAPO), and the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 94, nays 3, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). On this vote, the yeas are 94, the nays are 3. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and affirmed having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I will support the nomination of Lavenski R.

Smith, of Arkansas, to be a U.S. Circuit Judge. I did so as a member of the Judiciary Committee, and I will do so again on the floor. But I will also support the effort made by the Senator from Arizona, Mr. McCAIN, to advance the long overdue appointment of a commissioner to the expired position on the Federal Elections Commission, and in doing so I opposed the cloture motion to bring debate on the Smith nomination to a close. As we have seen, the FEC commissioners have a direct impact on Federal election laws, even to the extent of obstructing the will of Congress. Given the recent behavior of the FEC, it is reasonable for us to take every appropriate step to facilitate the filing of the expired position.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today in support of Justice Lavenski Smith to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. Before I speak directly about him and his nomination, however, I would like to take just a moment to explain where the Senate stands on its job of considering and confirming President Bush's judicial nominees during this Congress.

The Senate has not confirmed a single judge since May 13, exactly 9 weeks ago today. This is nothing short of irresponsible considering the vacancy rates and backlogs around the country.

There were 31 vacancies in the Federal courts of appeals when President Bush sent us his first 11 circuit nominees on May 9, 2001, and there are 31 today. We are barely keeping pace with the rate of attrition.

The Sixth Circuit is half-staffed with 8 of its 16 seats vacant. The DC Circuit is two-thirds staffed, with 4 of its 12 seats sitting vacant. Meanwhile, seven of President Bush's first 11 nominees have not even been scheduled for hearings—despite having been pending for 432 days as of today. A total of 23 circuit court nominations now sit pending for those 31 vacancies. But we have confirmed only 3 circuit judges this year, and only 9 since President Bush took office.

It is bad enough that the Judiciary Committee has been slow to even begin the process of consideration by scheduling hearings. It is even worse that the Democrat leadership can't do what is necessary to move the 17 judges that are still pending for a floor vote. Of course, I applaud the leadership for bringing Lavenski Smith to a vote, but I think everyone has to admit that 1 out of 17 is, at most, a low start. Many of my colleagues have noted with displeasure the Judiciary Committee's wholesale slow-walking of President Bush's nominees, but now I must bring some attention to the Senate leadership's role as well. It is high time for them to demonstrate their leadership, and their control of the floor, by setting votes on the rest of the 16 judicial nominees who are awaiting a final vote.

Mr. President, let me put the current situation into context. Historically, a President can count on seeing all of his first 11 circuit court nominees confirmed. Presidents Reagan, Bush, and Clinton all enjoyed a 100 percent confirmation rate on their first 11 circuit court nominees. In stark contrast, 7 of President Bush's first 11 nominations are still pending without a hearing for over 1 whole year.

History also shows that Presidents can expect almost all of their first 100 nominees to be confirmed swiftly. Presidents Reagan, Bush and Clinton got 97, 95 and 97, respectively, of their first 100 judicial nominations confirmed. But the Senate has confirmed only 57 of President Bush's first 100 nominees.

Some try to blame Republicans for the current vacancy crisis. That is bunk. In fact, the number of judicial vacancies decreased by 3 during the 6 years of Republican leadership. There were 70 vacancies when I became chairman of the Judiciary Committee in January 1995, and there were 67 at the close of the 106th Congress in December 2000.

Now I know that some try to justify the current wholesale delay as payback for the past. That is just a sleight of hand. Look at the facts: During President Clinton's 8 years in office, the Senate confirmed 377 judges—essentially the same, 5 fewer as for Reagan, 382. This is an unassailable record of non-partisan fairness, especially when you consider that President Reagan had 6 years of a Senate controlled by his own party, while President Clinton had only 2. Furthermore, almost 50 percent of all Federal judges currently serving are Clinton judges.

Finally, some suggest that the Republicans left an undue number of nominees pending in committee without hearings at the end of the Clinton administration. Well, we left 41, which is 13 less than the Democrats left without hearings in 1992 at the end of the Bush administration.

Mr. President, the President's nominees deserve better; President Bush deserves better; and most importantly, the American people—the people who own this Government and who rely on the judicial branch for their rights and freedoms—deserve much better.

Now, Mr. President, I would like to turn to the matter directly at hand, the confirmation of Lavenski Smith to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. Justice Smith is a highly qualified jurist who has distinguished himself through his service to the poor, his service in the public sector, and his service on the State bench. His experience includes working for legal services, running his own law firm, serving with distinction on the Arkansas Supreme Court, and holding his current position on the Arkansas Public Service Commission.

Justice Smith began his legal career at Ozark Legal Services in Fayetteville, AR, specializing in consumer defense and the representation of juveniles as a guardian ad litem. He worked with those who are traditionally under-represented: low-income individuals, families, and children. After 4 years, he opened his own law firm in the Arkansas town of Springdale, where he handled all sorts of cases, including business law, real estate, domestic relations, worker's compensation, public benefits, and estates. Notably, his firm was the first minority-owned firm in the history of the town.

Justice Smith's excellence as a lawyer and his commitment to public service did not go unnoticed: in 1999 Governor Huckabee appointed Justice Smith to the Arkansas Supreme Court. During his tenure on the bench, Justice Smith wrote opinions on a range of legal issues, including criminal, tort, worker's compensation, insurance, contract, civil procedure, oil and gas, tax, probate and attorney discipline matters.

Currently, Justice Smith serves on the Arkansas Public Service Commission, which is responsible for regulating the State's electric, gas, and telecommunications industries. In this position, Justice Smith has become an expert in understanding and interpreting a wide variety of complex Federal regulations, including the Federal Power Act and the Federal Telecommunications Act of 1996.

Chief Justice Arnold of the Arkansas Supreme Court, Justice Smith's former colleague, praises his intelligence and the quality of his service on the court, saying, "I think he'll make a great Federal judge." Justice Smith has wide, bipartisan support in his home State, but I think the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette summed it up well: It said that Justice Smith possesses "integrity, intelligence, and compassion." I agree, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this qualified candidate for the Eighth Circuit. I think that each of us can be proud about voting for the first African-American Arkansan to serve on a circuit court of appeals.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, Lavenski Smith is a young Arkansas political appointee, who has had a total of 7 years experience practicing law, has had minimal Federal experience, minimal appellate experience, and no experience at all arguing in front of the Federal Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit to which he has been nominated. He is nominated to the judgeship held by Judge Richard Arnold, one of the most distinguished judges ever to serve on the 8th Circuit.

Mr. Smith served a brief term on the Arkansas Supreme Court, after being appointed by the Governor and before running for election to a lower State court judicial vacancy and losing. He also spent several years as the volunteer executive director of the Arkansas chapter of the Rutherford Institute, an organization devoted to, among other things, doing away with a woman's constitutional right to choose, and supporting efforts against Governor, and then President, Bill Clinton."

The following is what the Arkansas Times had to say about Mr. SMITH's qualifications:

Lavenski Smith of Little Rock is not the best-qualified Arkansan President Bush could have chosen for the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals, nor even close. Marginally acceptable, if that, Smith was nominated by Bush, on the recommendation of Senator TIM HUTCHINSON, because Smith is racially, ideologically and politically correct—a black conservative Republican, avidly anti-abortion and anti-Clinton, whose nomination will, it is hoped, aid HUTCHINSON's re-election effort. Not much there to suggest a distinguished judicial career. Still, there are worse things than mediocrity, and Bush has nominated them, too.

It is difficult to vote in favor of a nominee to a lifetime appointment on a Federal appellate court with this kind of record, but he is supported by both of his home-State Senators. Senator BLANCHE LINCOLN worked hard to be sure that Mr. Smith was included in a hearing earlier this year and she supports his nomination. Based on Senator LINCOLN's confidence in this nominee's ability to do the job and based on the nominee's assurances that he will not seek to impose his personal views in his legal decisions, I have reluctantly decided to vote in favor of this nomination.

Smith seems like an honorable person, and despite his political views and political activism, I am hopeful that he will be a person of his word: that he will follow the law and not seek out opportunities to overturn precedent or decide cases in accord with his private beliefs rather than his obligations as a judge.

This is one of 17 nominations that have been reported by the Judiciary Committee to the Senate but were stalled for the last 2 months. In addition, nearly two dozen Executive Branch nominees reported by the Judiciary Committee are also awaiting action.

The delay in final Senate action on these nominees has been due to the failure of the administration to fulfill its responsibility to work with the Senate in the naming of members of bipartisan boards and commissions. Last week I congratulated the majority leader for overcoming this impediment and for his patience and determination in achieving some movement on these matters.

I understand that he hopes to be able to resume voting on judicial nominations once cloture is achieved on the Smith nomination today.

Democrats are taking extraordinary efforts to overcome impediments to action on nominations. Had the administration not caused this delay, and had Republican Senators not placed "holds" over the last several months, I am confident that the Senate would have confirmed more than 70 judicial nominees by now.

We were able to overcome the other obstacles created by the administration and proceed to confirm 57 judicial nominees in our first 10 months in the majority, a record outpacing any Republican total in any 10-month period in which they held the majority.

We have also addressed long-standing vacancies on circuit courts caused by Republican obstruction of President Clinton's judicial nominees. We held the first hearing for a Fifth Circuit nominee in 7 years, the first hearings for Sixth Circuit nominees in almost 5 years, the first hearing for a Tenth Circuit nominee in 6 years, and the first hearings for Fourth Circuit nominees in 3 years.

We have reformed the process for considering judicial nominees.

For example, we have ended the practice of anonymous holds that plagued the period of Republican control, when any Republican Senator could hold any nominee from his home State, his own circuit or any part of the country for any reason, or no reason, without any accountability. We have returned to the Democratic tradition of holding regular hearings, every few weeks, rather than going for months without a single hearing.

With a positive vote on the nomination of Lavenski Smith, the Senate will have confirmed its 10th Court of Appeals nominee of President Bush since the reorganization of the Senate Judiciary Committee a year ago, on July 10, 2001. During their recent 6½ years of majority control, Republicans averaged seven Court of Appeals confirmations a year.

The Democratic-led Judiciary Committee has had a record-breaking first year fairly and promptly considering President Bush's nominees, which I detailed last Friday. For example, in 1 year, we have held hearings for 78 of the President's nominees.

That is more hearings for this President's district and circuit court nominees than in 20 of the past 22 years.

Under Democratic leadership, the Senate confirmed more circuit and district court judges, 57, than were confirmed during all 12 months in each of 2000, 1999, 1997, 1996, and 1995, 5 of the prior 6 years of Republican control of the Senate. The Judiciary Committee has since last July voted on 15 circuit court nominees. In our first year, we held more hearings for more of President Bush's circuit court nominees than in the first year of any of the past three Presidents.

More of President Bush's nominees have also been given committee votes than in the first year of any of the past three Presidents.

Unfortunately, one-sixth of President Clinton's judicial nominees—more than 50—never got a committee hearing and committee vote from the Republican majority, which perpetuated long-standing vacancies into this year. If the Republicans had not left more than 50 of President Clinton's nominees without a hearing or a vote, the current number of vacancies might be closer to 40 than 90.

In addition, large numbers of vacancies continue to exist on many Courts of Appeals, in large measure because the recent Republican majority was not willing to hold hearings or vote on more than half—56 percent—of President Clinton's Courts of Appeals nominees in 1999 and 2000 and was not willing to confirm a single judge to the Courts of Appeals during the entire 1996 session.

From the time the Republicans took over majority control of the Senate in 1995 until the reorganization of the Committee last July, circuit vacancies increased from 16 to 33, more than doubling.

Democrats have broken with that recent history of inaction. During our first year in control of the Judiciary Committee, we held 16 hearings for circuit court nominees. That is almost the same number of circuit court nominees, 17, who were never given a Committee vote by Republicans in 2000.

Democrats are working hard to reduce judicial vacancies and we have moved quickly on these nominees, as well as many, many others. I have noted that we could have been even more productive with a little cooperation from the White House, but that has not been forthcoming.

Moreover, of the current vacancies, more than half do not have a nominee. We are almost out of district court nominees ready to be included at hearings, because the President has been so slow to nominate district court nominees and insists on delaying the ABA peer review process until after the nominations are made.

Today's vote on the nomination of Lavenski Smith to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit is the third Eighth Circuit nominee the committee has considered in the past year. This is in sharp contrast to the treatment of Eighth Circuit nominee Bonnie Campbell by Republicans.

Ms. Campbell is now a partner at the distinguished Washington law firm of Arent Fox Kintner Plotkin & Kahn, where she acts as an adviser, negotiator, advocate, and litigator, representing employers in personnel, labor relations, employment discrimination, benefits, and other employment-related matters. A graduate of Drake University and Drake's law school, Ms. Campbell has an outstanding record of public service.

She was nominated by President Clinton early in 2000 to serve on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

She was supported by both of her Senators, Democrat TOM HARKIN and Republican CHUCK GRASSLEY, given a "Qualified" rating by the ABA, and afforded a hearing before the Judiciary Committee a few months later, in May of 2000. However, despite a non-controversial hearing, Ms. Campbell was never scheduled for a committee vote. No explanation for this failure to give her a vote was ever given, and her nomination was eventually returned at the end of the 106th Congress. Other individuals nominated after Ms. Campbell were given committee hearings and votes and were confirmed later that year, while Ms. Campbell's nomination languished.

She seems to have been the victim of the Republican practice of anonymous, indefinite holds. In January of 2001, President Clinton re-nominated Ms. Campbell, but President Bush failed to seize the opportunity for bipartisanship, and withdrew her nomination shortly thereafter.

At the time of her nomination Ms. Campbell was nearing the end of a distinguished term at the U.S. Department of Justice, where she served as Director of the Violence Against Women Office, a position to which she was appointed by President Clinton in 1995.

In that capacity, she oversaw a $1.6 billion program to provide funding to States to strengthen their efforts in the areas of domestic violence and sexual abuse. She also directed the Federal Government's efforts to implement the new criminal statutes created by the 1994 Violence Against Women Act. Ms. Campbell oversaw the Justice Department's efforts to combine tough new Federal criminal laws with assistance to states and localities to fight against violence against women.

Bonnie Campbell had, before coming to Washington, served as the Attorney General of Iowa, the first woman ever elected to that position. During her tenure in office, she was instrumental in pushing the State legislature to strengthen Iowa's domestic abuse statute, and in 1992 she authored one of the Nation's first anti-stalking laws. In 1997 Bonnie Campbell was named by Time magazine as one of the 25 most influential people in America.

Ms. Campbell's record of distinguished public service and her experience in private practice combined to make an excellent nominee to the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, a fact with which both of her Senators obviously agreed. Yet once afforded a hearing, Bonnie Campbell was left to linger in an indefensible limbo. She was not granted a committee vote, but neither was she confronted with any objections to her nomination to the Eighth Circuit proceeding.

Contrasting the treatment of the nominations of Bonnie Campbell and Lavenski Smith to the Eighth Circuit evidences the difference in how the Republican majority and the current Democratic majority have handled judicial nominations and highlights the fairness that has been restored to the confirmation process.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Lavenski R. Smith, of Arkansas, to be United States Circuit Judge for the Eighth Circuit?

The nomination was confirmed.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I rise to speak about Judge Lavenski Smith who has been confirmed this evening for the eighth circuit court of appeals. This is a great evening for him and his family. He is going to be a great jurist. I congratulate Judge Smith tonight.

I thank President Bush for making an excellent choice, a choice that I think Arkansas can feel good about, the Eighth Circuit can feel good about, and, indeed, the country can feel good about. Judge Smith is an excellent choice. He is the first African American to represent the State of Arkansas in the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. He will do so with great distinction.

I will speak, very briefly, about his career. But the hallmark of Judge Smith's entire career has been one of service. It has been a storybook tale.

He is a native of Hope, AR. He earned both his bachelor's degree and his law degree from the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville. He worked his way through college. Following law school, he clerked for 3 years, and then he served the poorest citizens of Arkansas as the staff attorney for Ozark Legal Services, representing abused and neglected children.

After working with Ozark Legal Services, he opened the first minority-owned firm in Springdale, AR, handling primarily civil cases. He then taught business law at John Brown University and took several positions in public service, including Regulatory Liaison for Governor Huckabee. Currently Judge Smith serves as the commissioner of the Arkansas Public Service Commission.

In 1999, he was appointed to the Arkansas supreme court and served on the Arkansas supreme court with distinction for 2 years. As a supreme court justice, he presided over hundreds of cases and authored several dozen majority opinions. He was highly praised by all his colleagues in the Arkansas supreme court.

In June of 2001, the American Bar Association reviewed Justice Smith's qualifications and made a "unanimous qualified" determination.

Beyond all of his obvious legal qualifications, I want to point out that he has had a long history of community service. Whether it was as a board member of the Northwest Arkansas Christian Justice Center, a nonprofit organization dedicated to providing mediation and conciliation services, working with the Partners for Family Training, a group that recruits and trains foster parents, or whether it was raising funds for the School of Hope, a school for handicapped children in Hope, AR, at every stage of his life there has been this hallmark of service.

This outstanding record of service is the most outwardly visible sign of something the people in Arkansas know well; that he is a good and honorable man who will serve his country well. We can all be proud of the vote that occurred this evening.

It is a storybook tale, but it is a storybook tale that has not yet had the last chapters written. There are going to be a lot of wonderful chapters in the years ahead as he, as a young man, has a long time to serve on the Federal bench.

It will be a wonderful culmination to what has already been a great story and a great career. I stand with Arkansas this evening in pride.

I thank Senator BLANCHE LINCOLN for her cooperation, for her support, and all that she has done over the last year to make tonight's vote possible.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Arkansas for those kind words.

I rise to express my gratitude to all of my colleagues tonight for their support of the cloture motion before the Senate this evening of the nomination of Judge Lavinski Smith of Arkansas to fill a vacancy on the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

I am certainly pleased that the majority leader has taken a step which demonstrates a commitment of the Democratic leadership in the Senate to move the nomination process forward and to fulfill our obligation under the Constitution.

As one of those who signed the cloture motion to bring forward Judge Smith's nomination, I am proud of my colleagues for joining in with an excellent vote in supporting this fine Arkansas to the bench.

I want to say a special thanks to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for his hard work over the last year to reduce the number of judicial vacancies which will ensure our Federal courts can operate efficiently. He has tirelessly worked in the Judiciary Committee to be fair and to be expeditious.

There has certainly been a good deal of heated debate surrounding the pace of judicial confirmations in recent months. However, I can say from personal experience that the chairman has been highly responsive to my inquiries regarding this nomination. I am grateful for his efforts and those of the committee staff in trying to move the process forward expeditiously and fairly.

I also thank my colleague, Senator HUTCHINSON from Arkansas, for his work in this arena.

For the benefit of my colleagues who are not familiar with Judge Smith, I am pleased to offer a few words of introduction.

As my colleague from Arkansas mentioned, Lavinski Smith is a lifelong resident of Hope, Arkansas, as many people from Arkansas have been recognized being from Hope. After graduating from high school, Judge Smith moved north to Fayetteville, where he received both his BA and JD from the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville.

Since that time, Judge Smith has enjoyed an impressive career as a practicing attorney, as my colleague mentioned, with great service through the legal services to the indigent, a State supreme court judge, a professor, and, most recently, a member of the Arkansas Public Service Commission.

This would be an impressive list of accomplishments for anyone, but at the age of 43, Judge Smith's record is a good indication that he has many years of productive service in his future.

Since President Bush announced the appointment of Judge Smith last year, I have heard from dozens of Arkansans from across the political spectrum who support his nomination. In fact, my support for Judge Smith's nomination is based in large part on the enthusiastic endorsement he has received from those who know him the best: his colleagues and friends who have firsthand knowledge of his professional and personal attributes, those who have worked with him in the legal field who have sent their recommendations to me.

Those who have indicated strong support for Judge Smith in Arkansas include Arkansas supreme court chief justice "Dub" Arnold and Arkansas NAACP president Dale Charles. In addition, I believe it is important to note that Judge Smith received a unanimous "qualified" rating for this position by the ABA Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary.

Even though Judge Smith and I may not agree on every issue, that is not the test I apply to determine an individual's fitness for the Federal judiciary. I evaluate judicial nominees based on skill, experience, and ability to understand and apply established precedent, not on any one particular point of view a nominee may hold. Fundamentally, I am interested in knowing that a nominee can fulfill his responsibility under the Constitution in a court of law.

I am satisfied that Judge Smith has met that standard, and I, therefore, thank my colleagues for supporting his nomination and the cloture motion to move that forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will return to legislative session.

PASSAGE OF S. 2673

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank all of my colleagues for the tremendous work done in the past week. I especially compliment the distinguished Senator from Maryland, the chairman of the Banking Committee, for the extraordinary leadership he has shown in getting us to this point. I am sure there were few who have ever guessed this could have passed so overwhelmingly as it did tonight.

That is the accounting legislation. I am very grateful to all who had a significant role to play. I thank the staff of the Banking Committee and so many of my colleagues. I also acknowledge the fine work done by Senator LEAHY on the enforcement aspects of this legislation.

The combination of the contribution made by the Judiciary Committee, along with the Banking Committee, makes this a historic moment for the Senate, a historic moment for corporate governance, and a real recognition that at long last we are going to be rebuilding the confidence and trust we need in our free enterprise system.

We made a contribution in that regard today. I am very hopeful we can get this work done very soon.

It would be my hope, given the President's support for the Sarbanes bill, and Speaker HASTERT's support, as he indicated just last week, that the House consider taking up the Sarbanes bill and passing it free-standing so we could send it directly to the President in time to afford the President the opportunity to sign it very quickly. That would be the quickest way, and given the broad bipartisan support this legislation now enjoys, and given Speaker HASTERT's support for the legislation, I would think this would be a tremendous opportunity to demonstrate in a bipartisan way how quickly we can respond as we did today. But more than how quickly, how effectively we can respond to the needs of our Nation when it comes to restoring that confidence.

GREATER ACCESS TO AFFORDABLE PHARMACEUTICALS ACT OF 2001—Motion To Proceed

Mr. DASCHLE. Having disposed of the banking legislation, it is now our intent to turn to the whole issue of prescription drugs. We will deal with both cost containment as well as Medicare benefits. The bill passed out of the Labor Committee, S. 812, Calendar No. 491, will be the vehicle for our debate.

It is my intention now to ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 491, S. 812, to provide greater access to affordable pharmaceuticals at 10:30 a.m., Tuesday, July 16.

Mr. GREGG. This bill was reported out of the committee on which I am ranking member. At the time it was reported out, which was last Thursday—so it has been a very quick turnaround and no report has been filed on the bill—there was an understanding within the committee that there would be two issues resolved before it came to the floor. One involved bioequivalency and the other involved the 45-day rule.

There are other issues with the bill. There are other issues which may require further work, but those two issues need to be resolved before this bill comes to the floor. As I believe was the understanding when the bill was passed out of committee, it would be passed with those being resolved before it got to the floor.

I understand it is being moved to the floor quickly to be the vehicle addressing the other issues involved in drug coverage.

The bill itself has some very strong points in it; I have drafted a fair amount of it so I recognize that. But at this time I have to object to the motion to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been heard.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I am happy to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in regard to the language to which the Senator has referred on the question of the bioequivalence, a whole new section was added, subsection (C) of section 7, dealing with bioequivalency. It was sent out to the good Senator on Thursday evening.

We had indicated if we did not hear back from the Senator or his staff, we would assume that language reflected what was discussed in the course of the markup. We had similar kinds of clarifications with regard to certain procedures and filings.

As far as we are concerned, at least on our side, these particular provisions have been dealt with in the legislation and we are prepared to move ahead with the consideration.

This is extraordinarily important legislation. It relates to not only the quality of prescription drugs but accessibility and affordability of prescription drugs. We are seeing today the significant abuses of the Hatch-Waxman legislation. If we were able to just go back to the full intent of Hatch-Waxman, conforming with that, this legislation would not be necessary. But it is necessary.

The best estimate is it would save consumers $71 billion over the period of 10 years. It is very important. We ought to be about it. I hope we can get to the legislation and start debating it.

We had a strong bipartisan vote in the committee, and we are ready to go and consider amendments. If there is further clarification that is necessary, we are glad to consider it, but I regret very much we are going to have to delay legislation which is as important as this to our seniors as well as to other Americans who believe they need to be able to get fairness in the consideration of generic drugs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. GREGG. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DASCHLE. I think I retain the floor. I will be happy to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. Yes. That is why I was asking.

The question is this—rhetorical in nature. Unfortunately, in order to reach an agreement, you have to have both sides agree. Senator FRIST, who is concerned about the bioequivalency, has not agreed to the language. I have not agreed to the 45-day language. I am sure it could be worked out, and worked out rather promptly, so we would not have to go through the exercise of delaying this bill, and I would be happy to do that. But until we have worked out that issue, I have to reserve my rights and object to the proceeding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, obviously, I am disappointed. I looked at the vote. I think it was 16 to 5—similar in magnitude, on a bipartisan basis, to the Sarbanes bill that passed out of the Banking Committee. We ended up with a unanimous vote on the floor.

I hope we can get the same kind of unanimity ultimately on this legislation. But a 16-to-5 vote would seem to me to indicate very strong bipartisan support for this legislation as well. Senators are welcome to offer amendments. We oftentimes negotiate issues on the floor and accommodate Senators' concerns, both in the managers' amendment as well as in individual votes. So we will certainly have that opportunity once again.

I have no doubt if there is an interest in resolving these outstanding questions, we ought to be able to do so. But we do need to move on. That was my hope, that we could lay the bill down and begin the debate and have these discussions.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I have no choice, of course, but to move to proceed to Calendar No. 491. I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close the debate on the motion to proceed to Calendar No. 491, S. 812, the Greater Access to Affordable Pharmaceuticals Act of 2001:

Senators Harry Reid, Jon Corzine, Byron L. Dorgan, Ron Wyden, Maria Cantwell, Paul Sarbanes, Debbie Stabenow, Dick Durbin, Thomas Carper, Tom Daschle, Jack Reed, Daniel K. Akaka, Kent Conrad, Zell Miller, Charles Schumer, Ernest Hollings, and Hillary Clinton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators Lincoln and Hutchinson have the opportunity to speak for up to 8 minutes each with respect to the Smith nomination, to appear at the appropriate place in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will include in this part of the RECORD the sections relating to the bioequivalence. It is on page 53. The effect of the section is:

This section shall not be construed to alter the authority of the Secretary of Health and Human Services to regulate biological products under the Food, Drug, and Cosmetics Act. Any such authority shall be exercised under that Act as in effect on the day before the day of enactment of this Act.

Effectively, we are restating the current law.

I will also have printed in the RECORD the language which was questioned earlier—I think an explanation and how it conforms with what we had agreed to in terms of the exchange.

If it is necessary, we will be glad to work with our friends and colleagues on the other side during the remainder of the evening and certainly tomorrow to try to find out, if this language is not satisfactory, what language would be satisfactory.

We did have areas of differences, but not with regard to these two particular provisions. There was an agreement on it. It was just trying to find the appropriate language which would reflect the opinion of the committee. We believed we had done so, and we are glad to work with our colleagues on the other side. If that is not the case, we are glad to make those adjustments and changes so we can begin the debate on this extremely important piece of legislation.

We recognized when this was introduced—and I give great respect to my friends and colleagues, Senator SCHU-

MER and Senator MCCAIN, for developing the basic legislation which was the core of the debate we had in our committee—it was modified to try to respond to some of those who had some concerns. We had Senator EDWARDS and Senator COLLINS in a bipartisan way develop an approach which had strong bipartisan support. We had good discussion and debate in our committee on this matter and a strong committee outcome.

This is a very important piece of legislation. It is one which deals, not so much with the availability and the accessibility of drugs but as to the question of whether they are going to be reasonably affordable alternatives to brand name drugs and whether we are going to follow the agreement that was made at the time of the Hatch-Waxman legislation, which was enacted, which really was based upon the idea that we would have new breakthrough drugs rather than rehashing of older drugs.

What we have seen is in recent times those who have the patents are using the Hatch-Waxman legislation in ways that work to the significant disadvantage of the consumers in this country. It is to change those abuses that this legislation has been developed. It is very important. We will continue to work with our colleagues to try to clarify any of the language that needs to be clarified. We look forward to the debate at the earliest possible time.

I thank the majority leader for giving the attention and priority that he has to this legislation. I think for most of us, as we travel around to our constituencies, we find the availability, the accessibility, and the cost of prescription drugs are on the minds of just about every family in this country. You don't have to be sick, although that is certainly something that every person who is ill understands very well. But it is the total family. So much of the challenge and the burden of health care costs goes to all the members of the family.

As we are particularly in the period of what I consider to be the life-science century where we have enormous opportunities for major breakthroughs and extraordinary kinds of positive impact on the lives of people in this country, we must make sure these prescription drugs and the generics are going to be available and accessible. The faster that we have a chance to engage in this debate and pass this legislation, the better the health of the American people is going to be.

I note on the floor the prime sponsor, the Senator from New York, Mr. SCHUMER. He has probably heard that there was objection to taking up this legislation because of certain language clarifications. We reviewed and put in the RECORD clarifications which, quite frankly, conform to the issues that were raised. They are not areas of difference but areas of clarification. We sent those to our colleagues last Thursday night indicating that we understand they would be satisfactory unless we heard back. We did not hear back until just minutes ago.

We want to work with our colleagues. We certainly invite the Senator who has been such a driving force on this issue. We hope that overnight and certainly in the early morning we could have a clarification which would remove the reasons for not proceeding; that at some time tomorrow we could begin the debate in full and move ahead to considering this legislation.

Mr. SCHUMER. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank my colleague from Massachusetts who has been such a great leader on this issue. I guess, as I understand it, our friend from New Hampshire has objected to moving forward.

We have spent a very long time talking about this issue—of course the issue of availability of drugs, and of course the issue of the cost of drugs but even the specifics of the generic drugs.

We had extensive hearings on this bill 10 weeks ago or 8 weeks ago. There has been a great deal of discussion. This is not a last minute something that someone wrote on the back of an envelope and said here, take it. There has been tremendous discussion on this issue. There are differences of opinion. That is fair. That is legitimate. That is why we have a Senate.

But to prevent the bill from moving forward when the cost of drugs goes through the roof, when the people are clamoring for us to bring down those costs, and when there is a proposal that passed in a very bipartisan way in Senator KENNEDY's committee, it just strikes me as missing the forest for the trees—the forest being the great need to do something and the trees being the details that we should be debating on the floor in open debate.

I will just say to my colleague that I am as disappointed as he is—maybe not quite as disappointed; nobody works harder than he does on bringing these issues to the floor, but almost as much.

Is this something that is brand new? Where do these objections come from? These are issues that we have discussed and agreed on. It is my understanding that the Senator from New Hampshire simply didn't have the votes when he decided not to bring forward his amendments when the committee marked up.

Is that a correct or an unfair characterization?

Mr. KENNEDY. The reason the Senator objects is in behalf of the Senator from Tennessee who wanted clarification in terms of the ability of the FDA to regulate biological products. We have included a new section on page 52.

This section shall not be construed to alter the authority of the Secretary to regulate biological products under the FDA act. So we added that just for clarification.

It is difficult for me to understand why that doesn't work.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I will in just a moment.

Then there was another question with regard to the timing and procedures to be able to bring civil action. We added on page 35 a new section for the Senator from New Hampshire.

As I mentioned earlier, we don't have a difference. We would be glad to work through the evening, if we had the opportunity to proceed to this on tomorrow.

If this language isn't clear—we are not facing a difference on it. What I am troubled by is the fact that there is objection to moving to the legislation and moving to it in a timely way when it is legislation which is of such importance and relevance to every family in this country.

I see my friend from Michigan on the floor, but I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts. I pose the question because as a member of the committee and someone who was very glad to join in a positive way the bipartisan vote for the legislation, it was my clear understanding as we came to that decisive vote that a point was reached in working out the two outstanding issues which Senator GREGG mentioned in his objection. There is no desire on anybody's part to slow this legislation down. But it was with the understanding that there would be that agreement.

While it seems the issues are relatively minor and that it can be done in a very expeditious way, the fact is that Senator FRIST and Senator GREGG have not yet signed off on that language.

So I can't stand here and listen to my colleagues being characterized as obstructing the progress of this legislation when in fact they want to honor the agreement that was made at the time that bipartisan vote took place.

I ask the chairman if that is his recollection of the vote that occurred.

Mr. KENNEDY. No. The Senator has not understood correctly. I will stand by the record. There was never a conditioning of reporting this out for an agreement. I have been either chairman or ranking member for some period of time. I know those words are stated. But there was never a conditioning of reporting out based upon getting agreement. I would not have accepted that. This is too important. There was not a difference.

You will find that the language we have included with regard to biologics basically is a restatement of what Senator FRIST said. If it isn't, I am glad to make that kind of adjustment. What we did say—as we say in virtually the passage of all legislation—is that we will authorize technical corrections to be made by the staff.

If you have an agreement in principle, you do not have a difference. We have an agreement in principle.

If this language isn't carried forward—and it is language which I believe should be—give us the language, and we will work on it tonight. But I think to delay something that is as important as this is not justified. This subject matter is too important to families in my State, as I am sure it is in Arkansas. That is why I am surprised the Senator from Arkansas is standing with the Senator from New Hampshire and urging delay of this legislation, because it is of such importance. I welcome the fact that he supported it, but we want to get on with this legislation. And I think the sooner we can get on it, the better.

If the Senator wants to work with us and be the agent for the other Senators and work through the evening, we would welcome his intervention in doing that because we want to get on it.

I would be glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan. Then I would be glad to yield the floor and let the Senator speak.

Ms. STABENOW. I thank you the Senator.

First, I commend our chairman, Senator KENNEDY, for his work in bringing this important bill to the floor. I also commend Senator SCHUMER for his leadership.

I say to my friend from Massachusetts, it is my understanding the leader, because of the importance of the issue of not only lowering drug prices for everyone but providing Medicare coverage for prescription drugs, has actually allocated up to 2 weeks on this subject. I would assume we would have ample opportunity to work out any issues and problems that colleagues would have on the other side of the aisle.

But the clock is ticking on the 2 weeks. The sooner we can get to the bill, the sooner we can begin to move through a number of different amendments to be able to get this bill in good shape, to be able to deal with a number of issues, such as those that deal with increasing competition and providing Medicare coverage, and so on.

This is so critical that our leader has, in fact, allocated 2 weeks. So I am very surprised that our colleague from New Hampshire would stop even the beginning of the debate when he knows that it is not a 1-day debate. We are talking about having 2 weeks and as many hours as it takes in that time to be able to work out all of the kinks and to be able to get it right.

I know, coming from Michigan today, working and being in Battle Creek at a senior center and in Kalamazoo at a senior center, that they are watching us very closely. We have had a lot of talk, and if talk bought medicine, people would have a lot of medicine.

It is time to act. I commend the chairman of the committee for acting. I am looking forward to working with him.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will yield the floor in just a moment. I want to be very clear on the RECORD; that is, that the language was provided both to Senator FRIST and Senator GREGG on Thursday afternoon at around 4:15. The first I have heard there was objection to it was 5 minutes before the majority leader's request. I did not hear any objection to it Friday. There was not any objection to it Saturday. There had been no objection to it today, Monday.

It seems to me that if there are objections to it, we ought to be able to clarify the language and move forward it. If people have objections to this legislation, let's hear it. Let's debate it.

I pay special tribute to Senator SCHUMER and Senator MCCAIN. Seniors have been paying too high a price for too long. This is going to make a difference. We have delayed too long in addressing this issue.

So I indicate that we are prepared to work on the language over the evening or tomorrow. But we believe we ought to get about the business of dealing with this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I will be brief.

First, a specific point. One of the objections was on the language for what we call bioequivalence. In other words, what makes the drug the same drug? I am not a member of the committee, but I sat there as Chairman KENNEDY presided. As I recall, there was a consensus on that issue, which was, let us codify what the FDA does now.

That is what the language was supposed to do. There was not supposed to be a change. There was not supposed to be a wrinkle. There was not supposed to be anything different. And now, all of a sudden, we are hearing an objection based on that provision. I do not quite understand it because there was some discussion early on in the bill that the Senator from Arizona and I introduced about whether bioequivalence was the same. We intended it to be the same, but we were silent. Adding this provision just clarified it.

So there is no new change here, none. To not move forward on the bill on that basis, when there seems to be a complete meeting of the minds of what to do, does not make sense.

The second point is this, and both my colleague from Massachusetts and my able colleague from Michigan, who has been such a leader on this bill, have made it clear: The people are waiting. Every day, every minute, someone—a senior citizen, a family with a child who is ill—approaches the prescription drugstore counter with trepidation wondering what that bill will be.

They want the best drugs for themselves and their loved ones. Yet they are afraid they cannot afford it. They are afraid it means not paying the rent. They are afraid it will mean not buying gasoline for their car.

Here we have a solution. I would not say it is the most breathtaking solution. I would like to see prescription drugs added to Medicare. We are going to have a big fight about that. But it is a solution that makes a real difference, that reduces prices on a large number of drugs, that has some consensus, that does not get into the free market versus price control argument that has plagued us as we have tried to come to some kind of agreement.

So we have a proposal. We are ready to debate it. The majority leader, realizing its importance, has given us plenty of time. And the first thing we hear is objection to moving forward.

Again, as Senator KENNEDY has said, I am willing, as a sponsor of the bill, to be amenable. The more, the merrier. I do not want a partisan victory. I want to get something passed. We have spent a long time trying to work this out, and it is complicated. We know that. But when I hear the first thing done is objection to proceeding—as opposed to somebody calling up the chairman or myself and saying, what did you really mean by this? Shouldn't we dot the i's, cross the t's, and put together an amendment?—I get a little worried.

So I hope this is not an indication of anything in the future. I hope this is an indication that we can try to come together, despite some of our differing views, to work on how to reduce the costs of these wonderful drugs that are so expensive and together bring up a good bill.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I rise to applaud the majority leader for his attempt to bring forward this possible solution to help our elderly address the enormous problem that seniors face in drug costs and in getting prescription drug care, to use that bill and that tool of generics and others to try to assist our seniors in dealing with the phenomenal cost and concerns they have in being able to provide for themselves the prescription drugs they actually need for the quality of life we all know they deserve.

We all have parents and grandparents, we have neighbors and loved ones who are suffering from the unbelievable dealings of the increase in cost of prescription drugs. For us in Arkansas, where we don't have many tools at all; we have lost all of the Medicare+Choice plans that served Arkansas. The last two or three left in December, none of which provided a prescription drug package, which means our seniors in Arkansas are basically subsidizing other seniors across this country in their tax dollars. Other seniors in other areas, where a Medicare+Choice plan fits can actually get a prescription drug package because our seniors are subsidizing that. So our seniors in Arkansas are paying top dollar, more than you or I or anybody else who has insurance or who has a program like Medicare+Choice or something else, a Medigap program that is helping to pay for that, are paying more than anybody else for prescription drugs.

That is unheard of. Sixty percent of our seniors in Arkansas tend to need more prescription drugs because, unfortunately, their availability to health care is less. The other thing is their availability to prescription drugs out in rural areas is a lot more difficult. These are people who need assistance. They don't need, as Senator STABENOW mentioned, a lot more discussion, a lot more talk, and a lot more promises. What they need is action.

Unfortunately, what happened tonight was a roadblock that would prevent the kind of action we need in moving forward. We have 2 weeks to debate and talk about the initiatives here for the generics bill and some of the other proposals for prescription drugs but to move this debate forward. That is what seniors are waiting on; they are waiting on a solution. But more importantly, they are waiting on us to begin the debate. Unfortunately, that is what was stopped tonight.

I hope we can all come together and work out whatever differences they may have found from the committee, a bill that passed out in a bipartisan way, but work those details out, hopefully tonight, so maybe we can bring forward, without having to go through the unusual procedural cloture motion to bring something up, that we can begin the debate in earnest and begin to honestly look at the ways we can help the seniors of the Nation.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ACCOUNTING REFORM

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I wish to address the body on an issue of some significant importance to the country. First, good business was done by the Senate today dealing with the accounting situation, the financial trust crisis that we have going on in our country with some of the heads of corporations. I think we have taken a positive step on dealing with that problem.

NORTH KOREA

Mr. BROWNBACK. I want to address the body quickly and briefly but importantly on what is happening in North Korea and to North Korean refugees coming out of that country.

Prior to the July 4th recess, my colleagues, Senator KENNEDY and Senator ALLEN, and I brought to light the plight of North Korean refugees in a hearing before the Immigration Subcommittee. The hearing capped a month of activity that involved the passage of resolution on North Korean refugees in both the House and the Senate. Both resolutions strongly urged the Chinese government not to repatriate North Korean refugees back to North Korea. The House version passed by 406 to 0 and our resolution passed by unanimous consent on June 19, 2002.

At our hearing, we heard some very moving testimony from Ms. Lee Soon-Ok, a North Korean defector who suffered more than five years in a prison camp. We also heard from Ms. Helie Lee, a Korean American writer whose memoir, In the Absence of the Sun, movingly highlighted a largely hidden and painful secret shared by hundreds of thousands of Korean Americans and millions of Koreans—more than 50 years of separation among family members and loved ones since the outbreak of the Korean War. Few other country and its people has suffered as much.

In addition, Mr. President, I urged Secretary Powell in both a formal consultation and by correspondence on the need of our Department of State to allow the processing of North Korean refugees together with the Chinese government and the Beijing office of the United Nations High Commissioner on Refugees.

The plight of North Korean refugees, of course, is merely a symptom of a far more pressing issue—how to deal with one of the most repressive and totalitarian states in the world, the isolated country of North Korea ruled by one man, Kim Jong-il.

Although news regarding the efforts of many in the NGO community and countless others working in North East China have been slowly filtering into the West, the true nature of the North Korean regime is largely hidden and inaccessible.

It was not until the showing of a dramatic video of five members of the Han-mee family being forcibly removed from the Japanese consulate in Beijing that the world began to pay attention. Since then, several other asylum bids have drawn the attention of mainstream media, including the horrifying story of baby-killings in North Korean prison camps reported in the New York Times and based on the testimony of Ms. Soon Ok Lee, who, as I indicated before, testified at our hearing.

In June 2002, ABC Nighttime broadcast a three-part documentary of the North Korean refugee in China by Ms. Kim Jung-eun whose schedule did not permit her to testify before our committee. I was told by ABC News staff that thousands of Americans have responded to the broadcast with e-mails in disbelief and in rage against the North Korean regime. I understand that the three programs drew high response from viewers.

It is estimated that between 2 to 3 million people died of starvation and persecution in North Korea from 1995 through 1998 and that up to up to 300,000 North Korean refugees in China are living a precarious and dangerous life, hiding by day, begging by night, in an effort to avoid being captured and repatriated back to North Korea by Chinese and North Korean agents brazenly operating inside China.

Of the 300,000 refugees, only 518 refugees successfully defected to South Korea this year through June 2002, many of them by taking refuge at foreign missions in Beijing and in Shenyang, China.

These actions by the Chinese are simply unacceptable, not only to basic principles and tenets of international human rights, but also by the fact that China is a signatory of the International Refugees Convention. Hundreds of South Korean, Japanese and western NGO's are working inside China to help the refugees, risking their lives and capture by the Chinese police. A German doctor who also testified before our committee worked in North Korea for a year and a half but was evicted by the North Korean regime for disclosing the tragedies of the NK people. People like him and others on the ground in China and Korea have been some of the most vocal and active in their effort to make the whole world aware of the conditions in North Korea and China. Many NGO's have taken care of refugee families full-time with their own money.

I've met with many of these people, all of whom are now effectively shut down from operating in China. And what they tell me over and over is that they simply cannot not ignore what they saw. All of them said to me that they could not look away and ignore the refugees, many of whom were too scared to even beg for help.

These NGO's from South Korea, Japan, the U.S., France, and Germany, first reported the tragedy of the North Koreans to the outside world. These NGOs who are in the best position to know report that food aid from South Korea, the U.S., and Japan, simply are not reaching the dying people. As I mentioned in a previous statement, I believe it is absolutely necessary to condition stringent monitoring of the delivery of food aid by NGOs in an effort to determine that they are being distributed appropriately. Much of this aid is apparently being diverted to feed the million-plus North Korean army and to reward the elites and the inner circle around Kim Jong-il in Pyongyang. For this reason, many well-respected NGOs, including Doctors Without Borders have withdrawn from North Korea.

More troubling is that these NGO's have confirmed reports of more than a dozen prison camps in North Korea, where the prisoners are starved, forced to work at hard labor, and tortured to death.

Aside from the troubling refugee issue, we cannot forget that North Korea is a threat to regional and global security. North Korea continues its procurement of materials and components for its ballistic missile programs from foreign sources, especially through North Korean firms based in China. In addition, North Korea has become a "secondary supplier" of missile technology and expertise to several countries in the Middle East, South Asia and North Africa. The CIA's 2001 report assesses that North Korea is capable of producing and delivering via missile warheads or other munitions a variety of chemical agents and possibly some biological.

Furthermore, North Korea refuses to carry out its obligations under the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, NPT and the 1994 Agreed Framework. Initial IAEA, International Atomic Energy Agency, inspections and intelligence reports in the early 1990s triggered concerns regarding a clandestine nuclear weapons program. U.S. and foreign intelligence have concluded that the DPRK government of North Korea probably has sufficient plutonium for 1 to 5 nuclear weapons. Despite its obligations under the NPT and the Agreed Framework, North Korea continues to refuse inspections.

So while it would be reason enough to continue our pressure on North Korea and China for the humanitarian violations alone, there are also the pressing security threats that the current North Korean government poses to U.S. interests which must be dealt with. While refugee and nuclear weapons issues will necessitate very different responses—the thing they share in common is the alarms they raise about ignoring the North Korean problem in all its complexity.

While I am mindful of the diplomatic sensitivities regarding the need to reach out to the North Korean regime, there comes a time when we have to confront the truth and tell the truth. Moreover, reconciliation efforts have yet to yield any results. There was much hope after the historic meeting between President Kim Dae Jung and Jong-il in June 2000, that such a gesture would bring about some meaningful change.

As the naval skirmish last month and the continuing problems with the North Korean refugees show, the North Korean issue has simply worsened. It's time for the North Korean regime to immediately allow international monitoring of food aid into the country and to work with the international NGO community to alleviate the suffering of its people. That may at least stem the tide of refugees crossing over into China and being prey to human traffickers and other difficulties faced by refugees. But more fundamentally, the North regime itself must begin to change itself and join the rest of the world in giving hope and freedom to its people.

The U.S. can not afford to give into the slow-walking of reforms in North Korea. For our own security, for the stability of the region and for the sake of basic human rights—North Korea must remain a top policy focus for U.S. foreign policy. We must keep clear and constant pressure on NK and neighboring countries to bring new leadership into being. This is a daunting task, but one that we can not afford to shirk.

We have significant refugee flight taking place out of North Korea. We have had hearings in the Senate Immigration Committee on this particular topic. We have a humanitarian crisis, probably the largest in the world, that is taking place. We estimate that there are between 2 to 3 million people who have died of starvation and persecution in North Korea from 1995 to 1998, in a 3-year time period—2 to 3 million people. Nobody knows for sure because outside observers are not allowed.

This Nation is the most repressive, closed regime in the world today. The world community is feeding those who are left in North Korea. The United States and a number of other donating countries are feeding about half of the population in North Korea. Much of the food aid we are giving North Korea is not getting out to where it is needed. It is still held by the leadership in that country.

We estimate that some 300,000 North Korean refugees are living in China today in a precarious and dangerous lifestyle. They are hiding by day and begging by night, trying to keep from being caught and sent back into North Korea, which is what China does. If they catch people from North Korea, they treat them as economic migrants and ship them back into starvation, refugee camps, persecution, and probably death.

Of the 300,000 refugees in China, only 518 refugees have successfully defected, gotten out of China and into South Korea or into another third country—that is this year, through June of 2002. Many of them have done it by taking refugee status at foreign missions in Beijing and Shenyang, China. They have rushed embassies in those communities, gotten inside, asked for political asylum, it has been granted, and they passed to South Korea, generally through a third country—many times through the Philippines. I say only 518 this year. If you look at the history since the Korean conflict has ended—now 50 years ago—there have been only several thousand who have defected from North Korea into South Korea. Generally, each year, it has been a trickle—maybe in the teens.

The North Korean regime has been able to keep people in a dogmatic system, saying this regime is the best in the world and saying they are being fed by the President and the leadership. Now that trickle is beginning to really move. They believe it may be up to a thousand; there may be a thousand or more defecting this year alone, which is a massive number considering the history.

Mr. President, the issue I want to bring to light is the role of China and the importance of China in allowing these people to live. If China will allow these people to pass through, or if China will allow the U.N. Commission, or the High Commission on Refugees to establish a processing center to determine if these are people who need to be allowed to pass into third countries, thousands if not millions of people will not have to live in North Korea. If China does not, you are going to see thousands, possibly millions more, die of starvation, persecution, and other causes.

China has a choice. They will choose what the status is going to be, whether these people will live or die. They need to be confronted directly and asked to let these people live, to let them pass through. Let them pass through to Mongolia, to South Korea, to other places; but don't send them back. If they don't want to have them stay in China, allow some place for them to go through, such as a refugee center. But, China, make the choice. It is your responsibility and their blood that will be on your call as to what you determine you are going to do in this particular situation.

North Korea is a country that is difficult for us or anybody else in the world to influence. China is the only country in the world that has some influence on North Korea. So it is going to be their choice as to whether these people will live or die.

North Korea needs to change its regime. I don't need to remind Members of the Senate of the other problems we have with North Korea. They are a supplier of weapons. North Korea has become a secondary supplier of missile technology and expertise to several countries in the Middle East, South Asia, and North Africa. The CIA's 2001 report assesses that North Korea is capable of producing and delivering via missile warheads, or other munitions, a variety of chemical agents and possibly some biological agents as well.

Mr. President, I draw this to the attention of my colleagues because we need to allow refugees to pass and come into the United States as well. We will be bringing this issue up again in front of this body. I hope we will put pressure on China, which doesn't have a good human rights record, so that they can act to save people's lives—if they will only allow these people to pass through.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG COVERAGE FOR SENIORS

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I am very hopeful the Senate will be able to get on the issue of prescription drug coverage very soon. This is an urgent issue for seniors and the people of this country. I want to spend a few minutes tonight talking about why this is so important and what I think the real challenge is to the Senate in the next couple of weeks.

Mr. President, for the last quarter of the 20th century, the standard Government line on prescription drugs for older people was a little bit like the marquee of the big, old-fashioned theaters you would see downtown. The marquee sign was all lit up and it always read: "Coming soon." But, for seniors, that "soon" just never seems to arrive.

Years ago, when I was director of the Oregon Gray Panthers—I had the honor to be co-director for about 7 years before I was elected to the House—I got many of the questions then that all of us in the Senate get now. Seniors asked then, just as they do now at our town meetings, if anybody in Washington is ever going to provide some real help in paying for prescription medicines.

I am very pleased that Senator DASCHLE has made this a priority issue for the Senate. He has made it very clear to me that he is willing to work with anybody in the Senate to finally get this job done and to get it done right.

I think we know what this issue is all about for seniors, and that is the cost of medicine and coverage for medicine. In effect, cost and coverage really go hand in hand because if you are able to get seniors coverage, but you have not held down the cost, then you are not getting a whole lot for the Government's money. Of course, if you take steps to control costs, but many seniors still don't have the ability to meet even those costs, we will continue to have more and more older people fall between the cracks.

So it is important that the Senate addresses both of these issues and addresses them right. I want to talk for a few minutes about what I think some of the key components are first of holding costs down. First, I think it is important that it be done with bargaining power in the private sector. In discussing this—and we will do this over the next couple of weeks—I want to describe what I was involved in back in the 1970s when I was co-director of the Oregon Gray Panthers.

I remember one rainy night standing with a swarm of seniors around a labor union pharmacy that was barely bigger than a pill box. We were kicking off a program that night where seniors, through labor unions and others in the community, had been able to bargain with pharmaceutical concerns, and seniors were able to get their drugs at cost, plus a small monthly fee. It worked for the company, it worked for the seniors.

The community pulled together, and in this little pharmacy, which I have said was really no bigger than a pill box, we saw that you could set up bargaining power right in the private sector. I think tonight, how many more older people in this country need the benefits of bargaining power today? So I am very hopeful that on this question of cost containment we focus on bargaining power.

Senator DASCHLE made it clear that it is a priority to him. He will work with all our colleagues to make sure that is in a final bill and that we remember that across this country, and that what happened in Eugene, OR, more than 25 years ago has been duplicated elsewhere, and that what happened there is all about making sure people could have bargaining power in the private sector so that senior citizens can afford their medicine.

The underlying legislation that is going to give all Americans—not just seniors, but all Americans—quicker access to generic drugs is another step toward private sector cost containment. I commend my colleagues—Senator SCHUMER, Senator MCCAIN, and others—who have worked so hard on this legislation.

After I had the honor of serving as codirector of the Gray Panthers, I served on the Health Subcommittee in the House of Representatives, and we had a chance to work on what I thought was historic legislation. It was drafted by our distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Utah, ORRIN HATCH, and Congressman WAXMAN. It struck a good balance between holding down costs for seniors by making it easier to get access to generic medicine, while at the same time promoting innovation and research in the breakthrough products that are so important to seniors in this country.

I believed the Congress got it right in that Hatch-Waxman legislation and that the legislation we will be considering over the next couple of weeks is going to continue that kind of balance. We may try to refine it, and I am certainly open to that, but I think it will continue that crucial balance that was put together in the historic Hatch-Waxman legislation of helping to contain the costs for seniors and others through access to generic medicine, while at the same time promoting the new cures, the new research, the exciting breakthrough products that are so important.

What I have tried to contribute to the Senate on prescription drugs has been an effort to come up with solutions that are going to work in the real world for Americans trying to navigate our health care system. In the past two sessions of the Congress, Senator SNOWE and I have introduced bipartisan legislation. Tonight for just a few minutes, I want to express my appreciation to Senator DASCHLE and others in the leadership because the bill they will try to offer when we get to the question of Medicare coverage for seniors has been a genuine effort to address each of the concerns Senator SNOWE and I have focused on in our legislation.

When we get to that question, we are sure to have Members say this country cannot afford such coverage. They are going to say that the costs have already accelerated today; that we are having a demographic tsunami coming in just a few years, with millions of more older people in 2009, 2010, and 2011 retiring, and they are going to say the country cannot afford for the Congress to cover prescription drugs for older people.

I want to make it clear that, in my opinion, the Congress cannot afford not to cover senior citizens, and I want to give a short example of why this is so urgently needed.

Not long ago, a physician in Hillsboro, OR, in the metropolitan area surrounding Portland, wrote to me that he put a senior citizen in a hospital for a 6-week course of antibiotics because it was the only way the patient could afford the treatment.

Of course, when the senior goes into the hospital, Medicare Part A, which covers institutional services, picks up the bill, no questions asked. The check gets written by the program to cover the costs in the hospital. Of course, that same condition could have been treated under Medicare Part B, the outpatient portion of Medicare. Our assessment is that to spend 6 weeks in an Oregon hospital probably cost the Medicare Program $40,000, $50,000, $60,000, to pick up those huge costs for an individual who had to be hospitalized to get the benefit, whereas it probably would have cost a few hundred dollars to have treated that person on an outpatient basis under Part B of the Medicare Program.

When we hear in this Chamber and elsewhere that America cannot afford to cover prescription drugs for seniors, I am going to do my best to remind people about what I heard from that physician in Hillsboro, OR, and it has been repeated all over this country, because I think it is clear we cannot afford not to have this important program.

We know what needs to be done in the next few weeks. We ought to promote easier access to generics. It is one of the key parts of the equation of doing this right. We ought to make sure that seniors have bargaining power in the private sector.

The model that will be used in the legislation Senator GRAHAM and Senator MILLER have drafted incorporated much of what I and Senator SNOWE have been concerned about, and that is to make sure that bargaining power is structured in the private sector so that costs are not shifted to millions of other Americans. There is no Senator who wants, in the effort to come up with a prescription drug proposal for seniors, to end up shifting costs on to their children and their grandchildren. That is why private sector bargaining power, something about which I and Senator SNOWE have felt strongly, and Senator DASCHLE has graciously worked with us on, is included in what the Senate is going to have a chance to vote for.

Those are some of the key questions. I will wrap up by way of saying that as we move into this discussion over the next couple of weeks, we have one principal challenge as we try to pass a comprehensive bill and then have it go to discussions with our colleagues in the House, and that is to make it clear to the country that this is a real effort to help, and not just an exercise in election-year rhetoric. The seniors who have come to us at our meetings have watched this Congress and other Congresses debate this topic and come back to it sporadically from time to time. They want to know: Is this on the level? Is this a real effort now to do the job right? I believe it is. I believe the commitment is there now and that this is not just an election-year exercise.

There are key principles. We have an opportunity to address the questions of cost and coverage in a way that can win the support of colleagues on both sides of the aisle. The question of private sector bargaining power, ensuring that the program is voluntary so that any senior who is comfortable with their existing coverage can continue it if they choose to do otherwise—these are principles that are going to be in the Graham-Miller proposal that can win the support of colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

These are principles that can bring the Senate together. Let us make sure that at the end of this 2-week period, when we have had the opportunity to help seniors and help all Americans with respect to the cost of medicine, we do not let this opportunity slip away once again.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period for morning business, with Senators allowed to speak therein for a period not to exceed 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IN MEMORY OF LEW WASSERMAN

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, this is not a happy day for America. On this day occurs a memorial service for Lew Wasserman, who died in his 89th year. He is one of the two giants of the American free enterprise system who for over 60 years helped shape and build one of America's greatest export trade prizes and an extraordinary engine of economic and creative growth: The American film industry. He was a pioneer of great intellect and innovation. He could see what others could not, for he had the gift of vision, both rare and valuable.

He was more than that. He was a patriot in a shining sense of that word. He cared about his country and all who live in it. He believed in the American free market system. He was appalled at the behavior of those executives who knowingly soiled the honor and integrity of that system.

He and his wife, Edie, believed in young people and lavished millions of dollars in scholarships on them at a dozen universities on a continuing basis. His heart and his purse went without hesitation to the Motion Picture Home and Hospital, giving it millions of dollars so that those in the movie industry, hard-working craftsmen, artisans, and creators, when they became old and sick, could be cared for.

More millions were conferred anonymously. Lew never sought the spotlight because fame was not his goal nor publicity his guide. He had an old-fashioned view about loyalty. He never turned his back on a friend nor did he ever break his word once given to an individual, to a cause, to his country. Those who worked with him revered him because he never considered himself their leader but, rather, one who served his employees and their company.

There are many in this Congress today who can bear personal witness to his commitment to be of service to the Nation. He was the personal friend of Presidents from John Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, to Bill Clinton. I daresay if God granted him the time, he would have known and served George W. Bush. To me, personally, he was invariably kind, thoughtful, responsive to my requests for counsel and his wise judgment. He never asked me for a thing. He was, to my mind, the exemplar of the man who wants to give back more than he gained, to give back to his neighborhoods, his industry, to the young whose hopes are slender, to offer more than he has asked for, to strive always to try to make the future of this country a favorite and favorable place for generations of Americans yet unborn.

He shunned tributes, but he was proud of the Presidential Medal of Freedom bestowed on him by President Clinton. If he had not just bought Universal Studios, he would have accepted the Cabinet post offered to him by President Johnson. He is truly one of those unique human beings whose like is seldom found, which is why his loss is so profound to this Nation. I miss him. I thank him for being my friend. And I wish his family Godspeed during these difficult times.

I yield the floor.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, on June 3, our Nation lost one of its finest citizens. Lew Wasserman, long time president and chairman of MCA and friend of Presidents, died at the age of 89.

Lew came from humble roots, but never forgot those less fortunate than he. An entertainment industry visionary and modern day mogul, Lew Wasserman, along with his wonderful wife, Edie, used their position and resources to support hospitals and cultural institutions; to provide scholarships to young people; to fund research to prevent blindness; and to support political candidates in whose leadership they believed. In a rough and tumble industry, he believed in fairness and thoughtful mediation, and he cared passionately about our political system and democratic ideals.

Lew Wasserman was a mentor and role model to an entire industry and a great friend to Presidents of both parties, including my husband. I was honored that he was my friend; but, even more than that, I was grateful for his many contributions to America.

On September 29, 1995, my husband awarded Lew Wasserman the Presidential Medal of Freedom. In his remarks, the President said of Lew:

I have met a lot of philanthropists and successful people in my life. I don't know that I ever met anybody that more consistently every day looked for another opportunity to do something for somebody else, to give somebody else the chance to enjoy the success that he had in life. I thank you, Lew Wasserman.

UNIVERSITY OF DREAMS

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I recently attended the ribbon-cutting of an exciting new store in Bristol, SD. It was a joyous occasion. The entire town turned out and it looked as good as I've ever seen it look in more than a quarter-century.

The "South Dakota Made Store" will sell foods, crafts, and art from all over our beautiful State. It is an exciting addition to Bristol and northeastern South Dakota.

The program included a recitation of an inspirational poem by its author. He is a very young man whose name is Ryan A. Anderson. The title of the poem is "University of Dreams."

I know my colleagues will be as impressed with his beautiful words as I was. His talent and extraordinary ability as a poet of any age is an inspiration to us all.

I ask unanimous consent that "University of Dreams" be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF DREAMS

(By Ryan A. Anderson)

One seed can bear a stunning bloom
One spice can blend some revitalizing perfume
One individual can devise an entire scheme
One coach can pilot a basketball team
One gift can heal a hurting soul
One smile can let another's day unroll
One picture can explain an entire stance
One song can exchange for your last dance
One god can create massive seas
One god can produce ceaseless trees
One god can establish geographical extremes
One god, our God, can establish a

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred June 10, 2000, in Albuquerque, NM. A man in a minivan yelling obscenities ran down participants in a gay pride parade. One victim was hit twice in the knees and thrown off the hood. The perpetrator tried to swerve into the crowd three times before police finally pulled him out of the vehicle and arrested him.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise to note the release on July 15, 2002 of the first annual report of the U.S.-China Security Review Commission.

Shortly after the enactment in the year 2000 of legislation giving China Permanent Normal Trade Relations, PNTR, the Congress, thanks to the leadership of Senator ROBERT C. BYRD, passed legislation creating the U.S.-China Security Review Commission. According to the law that established the Commission, its purpose is to "monitor, investigate and report to the Congress on the national security implications of the bilateral trade and economic relationship between the United States and the People's Republic of China". The legislation which created the Commission charges it to submit an annual report to the Congress with recommendations for action, if any.

The bi-partisan Commission is composed of twelve commissioners, three of whom were appointed by each of the Congressional leaders in both the House and Senate. To prepare itself to issue its first Report the Commission held nine open hearings and took testimony from 115 witnesses on 35 separate panels. It also contracted for new research on China from a variety of sources including extensive translation and analysis of articles on economic, political, and trade issues that are appearing in influential Chinese publications. Members of the Commission also traveled to China, Taiwan, Japan, and the headquarters of the World Trade Organization, WTO, in Geneva. During its deliberations the Commission developed a broad bi-partisan agreement on the issues it was charged by Congress to study, and it adopted its first report by a vote of 11-1.

Among its key findings are that the United States, by acting as China's largest export market and a key investor in the Chinese economy, has been a major contributor to China's rise as an economic power. It further notes that our trade relationship with China is not only our largest trade deficit in absolute terms, but is the most unbalanced trading relationship maintained by the United States.

The Report further notes that while U.S. imports from China constitute over 40 percent of China's exports, U.S. exports to China represent only two percent of our total exports. It finds that the U.S. trade deficit with China is not only in low-skilled labor intensive items, but also in a majority of items found on the Commerce Department's list of advanced technology products. It further finds that there is plausible evidence that our burgeoning trade deficit with China will worsen regardless of China's entry into the WTO.

The Report also discusses the fast increasing trade and investment linkages between China and Taiwan which the Commission notes "could ameliorate tensions between the two", but which are also increasing "U.S. dependence on the items made in China for our computer electronics and other high technology products".

The Report makes a number of recommendations to better the chances for building a better long-term mutually beneficial economic and political relationship with China. Among these are: 1. That we put in place new programs to build a much wider expertise about China both in our society and among policymakers, and 2. that we take new measures to keep our industrial, scientific, and technological base from eroding as a result of our economic relations with a China whose government has adopted policies to expand its own base even at our expense.

I think this first Report of the Commission makes a very valuable contribution to our policy deliberations on China. It will be very helpful to the Congress as we examine how to respond to the challenges to our country posed by China's strengthening economic, military, and political profiles. We can best craft sensible policies if we better understand the perceptions that Chinese leaders have of us and what their long-term goals are. Judging the Commission's Report will help us do both.

I salute Senator BYRD for his wisdom in calling for the creation of the Commission and thank all of its Commissioners for the important contributions that their first Report makes to our knowledge of the U.S.-China economic and political relationship. I commend the Report to my fellow Senators.

CLEARING THE AIR IN THE SMOKIES

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, the Great Smoky Mountains National Park is truly the crown jewel of our national park system. With towering mountains, clear streams, and a diversity of wildlife, Tennessee is fortunate to have such a tremendous treasure in our own backyard. During the Senate's July break, I returned to the Smokies, to once again hike Mt. LeConte, this year with my oldest son, Harrison. Our hike up the Alum Cave trail was exhilarating, and we spent the night at LeConte Lodge, watching the sunset, and enjoying the hearty meals and good fellowship of fellow hikers.

My trip to the Smokies this month had another purpose, too. This year, I invited EPA Administrator Christie Whitman to join me in order for her to see first-hand the air quality problem that plagues our beautiful park. Over the coming months, Congress and President Bush's Administration will analyze and pursue policies to improve our nation's air quality. As this process moves forward, I wanted to make sure that the President's top official responsible for protecting our environment heard directly from park officials and saw for herself the unique challenge facing the Smokies.

As the first EPA Administrator to ever visit the park, Administrator Whitman demonstrated her personal commitment to address the pollution problem. We hiked to the park's highest point, Clingman's Dome, where Administrator Whitman looked out on a vista where natural visibility should be about 77 miles, but on the hot July day we visited, was reduced to only 15 miles. Air entering the southern Appalachians is trapped by geography and weather patterns, capturing pollution and harmful emissions in the park, and no where is that point made more clear than at Clingman's Dome.

Any plan to clean up the air in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park must contain two essential elements. First, we must reduce harmful emissions of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides. President Bush has proposed a plan, the Clear Skies Initiative, that contains the most dramatic reductions in these harmful emissions ever proposed by an administration. The plan would reduce power plant emissions by 70 percent by the year 2018. I will continue to closely study the Clear Skies Initiative and its potential impact on our mountains and across our state.

Second, we must reduce emissions in the most efficient and effective manner possible. Our quality of life and future economic development depends on how we pursue these reductions. Tennessee's families, businesses and communities depend on affordable and reliable energy. A thoughtful and responsible approach to address the park's air quality issue requires us to closely examine any proposal and to ensure it is based on sound science. Tennesseans and all Americans deserve no less from their elected officials.

It is also important to remember that air quality is a comprehensive problem that requires a comprehensive response. Roughly, one-half of the problems in the Smokies are caused by power plants, one third by cars and trucks, and the rest from various other sources. As we review solutions, we must address every source of emissions. For example, I want to commend local officials for Pigeon Forge's recent Clean Air Week which promoted reducing emissions through the use of low emissions public transportation. Park officials are looking at alternatives to transportation problems in the park, which will not only clean up the air, but enhance the overall visitor's experience. Continued discussion by all, local, State and federal officials along with concerned citizens, will ensure the most innovative, common-sense solutions and ensure we do what's right for the Smokies.

Tennesseans are blessed with an abundance of natural resources, and the Great Smoky Mountains National Park is world-renowned. However, we must be mindful that if we are to continue to enjoy the Smokies, all of us have a responsibility to be good stewards of the park. I am committed to fight for what is best for the Smokies, and I am encouraged by Administrator Whitman's recent visit. The Smokies are a unique American experience that must be preserved for generations to come, so that fathers and sons, just like Harrison and I, can know the joys of spending time together on a hike in the woods.

CRIMINAL PENALTIES RELATING TO TERRORIST ATTACKS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, due to time constraints, the Congressional Budget Office, CBO, estimate was not included in the report to accompany S. 2621, an act to provide a definition of vehicle for purposes of criminal penalties relating to terrorist attacks and other acts of violence against mass transportation systems. The report is now available and, therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the attached CBO estimate be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, June 27, 2002.

Hon. PATRICK J. LEAHY,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S.
Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for S. 2621, an act to provide a definition of vehicle for purposes of criminal penalties relating to terrorist attacks and other acts of violence against mass transportation systems.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contact is Mark Grabowicz.

Sincerely,

BARRY B. ANDERSON,
[FOR DAN L. CRIPPEN, DIRECTOR.]

Enclosure.

Congressional Budget Office cost estimate—S. 2621—an act to provide a definition of vehicle for purposes of criminal penalties relating to terrorist attacks and other acts of violence against mass transportation systems.

As passed by the Senate on June 25, 2002.

The USA PATRIOT Act of 2001 (Public Law 107-56) established a new federal offense for acts of violence against mass transportation systems. S. 2621 would clarify the definition of the term "vehicle" as used in that act. CBO estimates that implementing S. 2621 would result in no significant costs to the federal government. The legislation could affect direct spending and receipts through greater collections of criminal fines, so pay-as-you-go procedures would apply. However, CBO estimates that any effects on direct spending or receipts would be insignificant because of the small number of cases likely to be affected.

S. 2621 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments.

The CBO staff contact for this estimate is Mark Grabowicz. This estimate was approved by Robert A. Sunshine, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

RETIREMENT OF DR. VAN KIRKE NELSON

• Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize an outstanding Montanan whose distinguished career has literally changed the course of two generations of families in the Flathead Valley. In the 1950's a college student from Southern California came to Montana to be a camp counselor on Flathead Lake. As many do, he fell in love with the area and pledged to return after completing medical school to begin his practice in Kalispell, MT.

True to his word, Dr. Van Kirke Nelson, his wife Helen and their children Greg, Julie and Kathy packed all their belongings in a beer truck and moved to Kalispell where Kirke became the town's first medical specialist, opening his practice as an OB-GYN in 1962.

Forty years, two children, Nancy and Doug, and ten grandchildren later, my dear friend Kirke Nelson retired from active medical practice on July 1, 2002, leaving behind a legacy that has enriched the very fabric of the community to which he and his family mean so much.

For 40 years, Dr. Van Kirke Nelson delivered the town's babies. Lots of babies. So many, in fact, that it is not unusual for him to look at a list of Flathead High graduates and determine that he has delivered a majority of them.

Think of it this way. At 10 babies a month, 12 months a year, for 41 years, Kirke delivered roughly 4,920 babies in his career. To put that in perspective, those 4,920 new Montanans are a larger group than the entire population of 22 of Montana's 56 counties.

But the quality of Kirke's career cannot be measured in numbers. Every day he changed lives and made the Flathead Valley and Montana a better place to live. Partners, co-workers, patients and their families all know what I mean. There are more stories than one can possibly tell, and you can be assured that although he is retired, there will be many, many more stories yet to come.

Because you see, Kirke Nelson will never retire from making a difference in the world around him. The phone may not ring in the middle of the night anymore, but knowing Kirke as I do, that just means he'll just be better rested for the challenges that lay ahead.

I know no better Montanans than Kirke and Helen Nelson. I wish for them in this retirement an enriched life with each other and their wonderful family. There are not thanks enough for this kind of career that Kirke has shared with us, but that's what makes America so great. Ours is a country where dreams come true. Where promises are our bond. And where ordinary careers become extraordinary because of the people who live them.

Kirke Nelson's career has been truly extraordinary. And on behalf of a grateful community, State and nation, it is my honor to rise today to say thank you.●

IN RECOGNITION OF WESLEY COLLEGE ATHLETICS, COACH RICK MCCALL AND CHRIS NOLL, 2002 NCAA NATIONAL GOLF CHAMPIONS

• Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate Wesley College's Chris Noll, the 2002 NCAA National Golf Champion. His victory demonstrates the success that comes from hard work, perseverance, experience of a remarkable team, a dedicated coach, and the support of an outstanding college.

The championship competition held in Nebraska last month ended a dramatic, record-breaking season for the Wolverines. After a stellar overall performance throughout the year, the Wolverines were selected by a committee to play in the NCAA Championships. At the championship, they scored their highest finish in both Wesley records and in Pennsylvania Athletic Conference history. The team dominated the Conference and won the Pennsylvania Athletic Conference Tournament.

Throughout the season, Chris Noll set Wesley College records. He finished first in the Glen Health Ship Builders, the Wesley College Invitational, the King's College National Invitational tournaments and the District II Championships. The Dover sophomore was named Pennsylvania Athletic Conference Player of the Week for four consecutive weeks in addition to a Ping All-American. He closed the season as the 2002 NCAA National Golf Champion.

For the past decade Wolverine Coach Rick McCall has worked tirelessly to successfully build and strengthen the men's golf program. McCall was named All-Middle Atlantic Region Coach of the Year this season, as well as the Pennsylvania Athletic Conference Coach of the Year. In 1989 he won the Delaware State Golf Association Annual Golf Award. Later he was given the Pat Knight Award for his lifetime contribution to junior golf and two Philadelphia P.G.A. Junior Golf Awards. He is dedicated to the game.

The success of Wesley's golf team is indicative of the depth of the community's support, and the caliber of students, faculty, and staff at the College. I commend those associated with Wesley College athletics for their commitment to preparing athletes for success both on and off the court.

Today, I congratulate Coach Rick McCall, Chris Noll and all of the fine athletes on the golf team. Athletics play a vital role in the development and integrity of students. Wesley College athletes prove that the school's emphasis on the "carry-over value of athletics" is warranted. I am proud of their achievements as student-athletes.●

NOTICES OF HEARINGS/MEETINGS

PERMANENT SUBCOMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public that the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Government Affairs will hold hearings entitled "The Role of the Financial Institutions In Enron's Collapse." These hearings are a continuation of Subcommittee hearings on the collapse of Enron Corp., focusing on the role of major financial institutions and how they contributed to Enron's use of complex transactions to make the company look better financially than it actually was.

The hearing will take place on Tuesday, July 23, and Tuesday, July 30, 2002, at 9:30 a.m. each day, in room 342 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building. For further information, please contact Elise J. Bean of the Subcommittee staff at 224-9505.

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public that a hearing has been scheduled before the Subcommittee on National Parks of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The hearing will take place on Tuesday, July 23, 2002, at 2:30 p.m. in room 366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, D.C.

The purpose of the hearing is to receive testimony on the following bills: S. 2494, to revise the boundary of the Petrified Forest National Park in the State of Arizona, and for other purposes; S. 2598, to enhance the criminal penalties for illegal trafficking of archaeological resources, and for other purposes; S. 2727, to provide for the protection of paleontological resources on Federal lands, and for other purposes; and H.R. 3954, to designate certain waterways in the Caribbean National Forest in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico as components of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, and for other purposes.

Because of the limited time available for the hearing, witnesses may testify by invitation only. However, those wishing to submit written testimony for the hearing record should send two copies of their testimony to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, United States Senate, 312 Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC 20510.

For further information, please contact David Brooks of the Committee staff at (202) 224-9863.

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Deborah Forbes of the Labor Committee be given access of the floor during deliberation of this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that privilege of the floor be granted to Joe Laird during the remainder of the debate and the votes on this bill we are considering.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY—TREATY DOCUMENTS NOS. 107-12 AND 107-13

Mr. REID. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the following treaties transmitted to the Senate today by the President of the United States:

Treaty with Sweden on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters, Treaty Document No. 107-12;

Treaty with Belize on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters, Treaty Document No. 107-13.

I further ask unanimous consent that the treaties be considered as having been read the first time; that they be referred, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed; and that the President's messages be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The messages of the President are as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the Treaty Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Kingdom of Sweden on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters, signed at Stockholm on December 17, 2001. I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to the Treaty.

The Treaty is one of a series of modern mutual legal assistance treaties being negotiated by the United States in order to counter criminal activities more effectively. The Treaty should be an effective tool to assist in the prosecution of a wide variety of crimes, including terrorism, drug trafficking, and fraud and other white-collar offenses. The Treaty is self-executing.

The Treaty provides for a broad range of cooperation in criminal matters. Mutual assistance available under the Treaty includes: locating or identifying persons or items; serving documents; taking the testimony or statements of persons; transferring persons in custody for testimony or other purposes; providing documents, records, and items; executing requests for searches and seizures; assisting in proceedings related to immobilization and forfeiture of assets and restitution; initiating criminal proceedings in the Requested State; and any other form of assistance consistent with the purposes of this Treaty and not prohibited by the laws of the State from whom the assistance is requested.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the Treaty and give its advice and consent to ratification.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 15, 2002.

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the Treaty Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Belize on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters, signed at Belize on September 19, 2000, and a related exchange of notes signed at Belize on September 18 and 22, 2000. I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to the Treaty.

The Treaty is one of a series of modern mutual legal assistance treaties being negotiated by the United States in order to counter criminal activities more effectively. The Treaty should be an effective tool to assist in the prosecution of a wide variety of crimes, including drug trafficking, money laundering, and terrorism offenses. The Treaty is self-executing.

The Treaty provides for a broad range of cooperation in criminal matters. Mutual assistance available under the providing documents, records, and articles of evidence; locating or identifying persons; serving documents; transferring persons in custody for testimony or other purposes; executing requests for searches and seizures; assisting in proceedings related to immobilization and forfeiture of assets, restitution to the victims of crime and collection of fines; and any other form of assistance not prohibited by the laws of the State from whom the assistance is requested.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the Treaty, and give its advice and consent to ratification.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 15, 2002.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—S. 2

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I understand that S. 2, the 21st Century Medicare Act, is at the desk. I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2) to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for a medicare voluntary prescription drug delivery program under the medicare program, to modernize the medicare program, and for other purposes.

Mr. REID. I ask for its second reading and then would object to my own request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection having been heard, the bill will receive its second reading on the next legislative day.

MEASURE RETURNED TO THE CALENDAR—S. 2673

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, passage of S. 2673 is vitiated. The bill is returned to the calendar.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, JULY 16, 2002

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator from Alabama allowing us to do the closing before his remarks.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 9:30 a.m., Tuesday, July 16; that following the prayer and the pledge, the morning hour be deemed expired, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and there be a period for morning business until 10:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each; with the first half under the control of the Republican leader or his designee and the second half of the time under the control of the majority leader or his designee; that at 10:30, the Senate resume consideration of the motion to proceed to S. 812 regarding affordable pharmaceuticals; further, that the Senate recess from 12:30 to 2:15 p.m. for the weekly party conferences.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment following the remarks of the Senator from Alabama, Mr. SESSIONS, under the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DURBIN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nevada for his courtesies, as always.

Mr. President, I serve on the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee and am pleased that we reported out a bill to improve generic drug competition in America and to address the high cost of prescription drugs. The Hatch-Waxman Act, which passed in 1984, is considered to be a remarkable piece of legislation. It strives to provide patent protection to companies that invests hundreds of millions of dollars to develop new drugs. At the same time, it limits that protection by allowing generic competition. It allows generic drug manufacturers to take a patented drug, produce it, and sell it at a much lower price, a competitive price, driving down the price of the drug for consumers.

Since 1984 the scales, it appears, have tilted too much in favor of the name-brand producer of the drug, the patent holder of the drug, and too much against the generic manufacturers. There have been some problems on both sides of this issue. Loopholes of the Hatch-Waxman Act are being exploited, giving one side an advantage over the other. In fact, one of the things that has occurred is some generic companies have challenged patents and have gotten the right to produce patented drugs, because they have challenged it using the procedures of the act. Then they enter into an agreement with the original patent holder to not produce the generic drug—thereby agreeing to not compete with the name-brand manufacturer. This is a loophole that needs to be eliminated.

I believe S. 812 will help recover the delicate balance that was originally intended by the Hatch-Waxman Act. I believe it will help contain the rising costs of prescription drugs. I believe it will also encourage production of drugs the way we intended, but at the same time will eliminate unfair patent extensions. I believe that by reporting this bill out of committee, we are moving in the right direction. I salute Senators EDWARDS, COLLINS, SCHUMER, and MCCAIN who have worked to produce this legislation. I think it is going to be something we can all support.

I know we will be beginning to talk about prescription drugs in general later this week, and I think it is time to do so. This Congress voted—I voted—for a budget last year that set aside $300 billion for a prescription drug benefit. However, we were not able to pass a prescription drug benefit last year, and it remains to be seen whether we will be successful this year.

There are a lot of different views about how prescription drugs should be handled. Over the Fourth of July weekend, I visited two assisted care living facilities in Alabama: Chateau Vestavia near Birmingham and Westminster in Mobile, Alabama. I talked with seniors who have high drug bills and listened to what they had to say. I wanted to have their input as the Senate moved toward considering a prescription drug proposal. They told me that they are most concerned about high drug prices. I spoke with seniors that are struggling to pay for their drugs.

My mother is in her eighties. She has a $300-a-month drug bill. She is in relatively good health, although she has arthritis and high blood pressure. Her sister's drug bill is even higher than that each month. They are both in an assisted living center. They are getting by, but it is not easy. For people who rely on their Social Security as their sole income, they are not able to get by with those drug prices.

We know we have a problem. The theory is this: If this federal government, through Medicare, will pay for the removal of a kidney, or will pay for the amputation of a leg, is it not irrational that we would not pay to fund drugs that would keep people from having to have a kidney removed or keep people from having to have an amputation because they are diabetic?

We are at a point where drugs are such a central part of health care in America, that we cannot leave them out of Medicare.

The seniors I visited with in Alabama want us here in the Senate to address the high cost of drugs. They believe they are higher than they need to be—and I agree. They would like to see less paperwork in the process, less bureaucracy, and less fraud. They would also like to see that they can go to their local pharmacy and buy the drugs there and talk to a pharmacist about them if they choose. They would like to be able to buy through direct mail and mail order if they choose. Those are things we will have to wrestle with. I intend to be talking with more seniors as time goes by so we can listen to their concerns and desires and see what we can do to pass a responsible bill.

We are not doing anything to help Medicare beneficiaries pay for drugs today. We should not fail to act at all and do nothing simply because we can't do everything we would like to do today.

We need to have some relief now. We have people this day who are having to choose between food and rent and drugs. They often are not able to buy the drugs they need to keep themselves healthy, and that leads to complications and even greater health care costs.

We need to quit putting this off. If we cannot afford the Cadillac, we need a Ford. We need to do something to move forward. Seniors need help now.

People who need drugs, seniors who need drugs, all Medicare beneficiaries who need them and simply cannot afford them need help. We can do that through the budget we passed last year. There is, through President Bush's plan, an idea of using group purchasing power to reduce the cost through a prescription drug discount card. A number of my pharmacist friends are concerned that could hurt them. That was not the intent. They have challenged this card. But a card plan should not harm our pharmacists. We ought to be able to drive down the cost of prescription drugs by up to 20, 30, or 40 percent. That would be a tremendous savings. It would be good if we could do that today—and not wait any longer. It would be a monumental step forward.

We want our seniors to have choice and to not have to give up their current coverage plans. We do not want them to have to enter into some sort of mandatory plan that costs them more and provides less benefits.

Beneficiaries should have information and the choice to choose between whether they want generic drugs or name-brand drugs. That is a choice that many can make. We need to make sure that option is available to them.

We did vote for a budget last year that provides for $300 billion for prescription drugs. We have allowed our spending here to get out of control. Our discretionary spending last year hit about a 7 percent increase. This year, likewise, with defense and supplementals, it could be greater than that. If we get our spending under control and contain excessive spending, we ought to be able to fund a plan that would meet the needs of thousands of seniors who are in a crisis situation today.

Politics should be put on the back burner. It is time to ask ourselves how we can accomplish passing a piece of legislation that we all can support, that the American people would like to see passed, and that we can afford. We can do this, if we watch our cost and do not let it get out of control. If we are smart and work at it and do it in a way that is bipartisan as this generic bill we passed out of the HELP Committee last week, we can make good progress for America. I look forward to the debate and hope we can achieve that before the recess.

I yield the floor.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PAYING TRIBUTE TO JEAN- JACQUES CARQUILLAT

HON. MAURICE D. HINCHEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to congratulate my constituent and dear friend, Jean-Jacques Carquillat, on the occasion of his attainment of United States citizenship. Mr. Carquillat is a valued and well-respected member of our community, and I am proud to welcome him as a full citizen to the 26th Congressional District of New York State.

I became acquainted with Jean-Jacques, as well as his family, through his businesses in the Uptown Historic District in Kingston, NY. In 1994, Jean-Jacques established Le Carnard Enchaîne, a Zagat-rated, fine dining restaurant. He also started a dance club and special events catering business in 2000. The success of these businesses led to his more recent opening of Luke's Place, a gourmet restaurant, in the Town of Shandaken, named after his young son.

I have witnessed the hard work, strong character and integrity that Jean-Jacques has brought to the projects he has undertaken. His businesses have had positive impacts on our local area, including creating jobs in the City of Kingston and enhancing the city's efforts to promote tourism in the historic district. Jean-Jacques has been an active member of the Uptown Kingston Business Association and received its Excellence Award for 1999. In addition, he has been a consistent and strong supporter of various local nonprofit community organizations.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to join Jean-Jacques Carquillat's colleagues, friends and family in extending my congratulations on his naturalization. His personal and professional enthusiasm has made him a valuable asset to our community, and I am confident that he will continue to serve in the most admirable way both his community and our great nation.

HONORING THE NAMING OF THE DOUGLAS MORRISSON THEATER IN RECOGNITION OF DOUGLAS F. MORRISSON'S 40 YEARS AS A BOARD MEMBER OF THE HAY- WARD AREA RECREATION AND PARK DISTRICT

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, on July 28, 2002, the Hayward Area Recreation and Park District will rename their theater in honor of Board Member Douglas F. Morrisson. In his 40 years of service, Douglas Morrisson has honorably served the park and recreation field on the local, regional, state, and national levels.

Douglas Morrisson was first elected to the Board of Directors of the Hayward Area Recreation and Park District in November of 1962. Since then, he has been re-elected to nine consecutive four-year terms. This year, his 40th year of service, he is serving as vice-president of the District.

The Hayward Area Recreation and Park District has seen unprecedented growth during Douglas Morrisson's tenure. The District boasts beautiful parks and fine recreation facilities, including community parks, swim centers, linear parks, playgrounds, community centers, athletic fields, and senior centers. Additionally, the park district has gone beyond traditional park features to include special interest facilities for theater, art, nature study, camping and golf.

A graduate of San Jose University and a former high school teacher, Douglas Morrisson is currently an independent business owner. In the past he has served in the leadership of many park and recreation organizations, notably as President of the California Association of Parks and Recreation Commissioners and Board Members and President and Vice-President of the Commissioners and Board Members Branch of the National Park and Recreation Association. He is the recipient of the 1993 California Association of Recreation and Park Districts Outstanding Board member award and the 1993 California Special Districts Association Outstanding Board Member Award.

In the community, Douglas Morrisson has been active as a board member of the Castro Valley Fire District, and a member of the Hayward Rotary Club. He has served as chairperson and vice-chairperson of the Alameda County Local Agency Formation Commission (LAFCO) and as President and board member of the Hayward Sun Gallery. In 1999 he received the city of Hayward's Mayor's Award.

I am honored to join the colleagues of Douglas Morrisson in commending him for his 40 years of service to the city of Hayward. Douglas Morrisson's dedicated work with the Park District has provided every member of the Hayward community spectacular state-of-the-art park facilities to enjoy.

MEMORIALIZING MS. GEORGIA BALL TRAVIS

HON. MICHAEL M. HONDA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the life and work of Ms. Georgia Travis, whose amazing life came to a peaceful end on March 12, 2002, after 94 wonderful years. Ms. Travis committed her extraordinary life to the betterment of others, through social work, teaching, writing, and countless other endeavors, culminating in the creation of the Georgia Travis Center for homeless women and children. This shelter, along with the indelible imprint she left on so many lives, will stand forever as the legacy left by this amazing woman.

Georgia Travis dedicated her personal and professional life to helping others. Born in 1908 in Kansas City, Missouri, Georgia was brought up in a family with a keen awareness of social injustice and inequity. She was taught to lend a helping hand to those in need, a notion that would dictate the course of her long life. After becoming one of the first students to earn a master's degree from the University of Chicago School of Social Service Administration, she began working in the relatively new field of medical social work, helping stress patients in Chicago and disabled children in Seattle. By the late 1930s. Ms. Travis was traveling the country as a consultant for the new Washington, DC, based Crippled Children Service Department and the U.S. Transient Bureau. In 1953, Georgia was awarded a Fulbright Scholarship which sent her to Sydney, Australia, to teach. Shortly after returning to the States, she settled into what would eventually become her permanent home: the Bay Area of California.

The State of California may never fully realize the full extent of Ms. Travis' contributions, but I would like to take moment to share some of the many highlights. By 1962, just a few years after arriving in the Bay Area, she was name California Social Worker of the year. A year later she became a professor of Social Services at San Diego State University, teaching graduate level courses until her retirement in 1970. But Georgia's idea of "retirement" was as unconventional as it was prolific.

Ms. Travis lived in retirement with the same spirit and ideals of her childhood and professional life; she could sense injustice and suffering, create solutions, and see the process through to the end. After the passing of her mother in 1971. Georgia found solace and balance in the Quaker faith, and became a member of the Quaker Society of Friends. Strengthened by her new faith, Georgia focused her efforts on the plight of the homeless community, a pursuit that would lead her to some of the biggest accomplishments of her life. She started out with fundamentals like providing meals at the Family Center in Agnews Hospital and distributing clothing at the Family Shelter in East San Jose. Then, with the help of the American Association of University Women, Georgia organized a committee that develops and provides the homeless, especially women and children, with improved services and outreach. She convinced Stanford University to conduct a major study on homeless children, and helped initiate educational programs for the children as well. Mr.

Speaker, the list of her successes, of the tangible changes she made for thousands of people, is far too long to describe here. But I would like to make note of perhaps her greatest accomplishment of all: the establishment of the Georgia Travis Center.

In 1992, the nonprofit San Jose shelter agency InnVision honored the wishes of Ms. Travis by opening a new shelter for homeless women and children, to be named after the woman who perhaps had done more for their cause than anyone else in the city's history. At the Center, volunteers help women and children get back on their feet by providing meals, medical care, childhood-development courses, and classes on computers and career planning. The Center provides them not only with new hope for the future, but a sense of a security and value that may have been taken away from them when their homes were lost. Ever humble, Ms. Travis was embarrassed by the attention of having her name immortalized, but the Georgia Travis Center will forever be a working tribute to Georgia's insatiable desire to empower, enlighten, and improve the lives of those in need of help.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to mourn the loss of a friend and a role model. I had many opportunities to work with Ms. Travis, and what amazed me most about her was the ability she had to instill in others the same passion and resolve that she herself had in everything she set out to accomplish. The Bay Area should feel fortunate to be chosen as the beneficiary of her great works, and I personally feel fortunate to represent a district so deeply touched by her.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

HON. CLIFF STEARNS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remind Americans why the Pledge of Allegiance is so important in light of the 9th Circuit Appeals Court decision. I'd like to submit Chief Justice of the Alabama Supreme Court Roy S. Moore's July 1998 statement titled "Our American Birthright." At that time, Justice Moore was a Circuit Court Judge.

OUR AMERICAN BIRTHRIGHT

(By Roy S. Moore)

One nation under God was their cry and declaration,
Upon the law of nature's God they built a mighty nation.
For unlike mankind before them who had walked this earthen sod,
These men would never question the sovereignty of God.
That all men were "created" was a truth "self-evident,"
To secure the rights God gave us was the role of government,
And if any form of government became destructive of this end,
It was their right, their duty, a new one to begin.
So with firm reliance on Divine Providence for protection,
They pledged their sacred honor and sought His wise direction.

They lifted an appeal to God for all the world to see,
And declared their independence forever to be free.

I'm glad they're not here with us to see the mess we're in,

How we've given up our righteousness for a life of indulgent sin.

For when abortion isn't murder and sodomy is deemed a right,

Then evil is now called good and darkness is now called light.

While truth and law were founded on the God of all Creation,

Man now, through law, denies the truth and calls it "separation."

No longer does man see a need for God when he's in full control,

For the only truth self-evident is in the latest poll.

But with man as his own master we fail to count the cost,

Our precious freedoms vanish and our liberty is lost.

Children are told they can't pray and they teach them evolution,

When will they learn the fear of God is the only true solution.

Our schools have become the battleground while all across the land,

Christians shrug their shoulders afraid to take a stand.

And from the grave their voices cry the victory has been won

Just glorify the Father as did His only Son.

When your work on earth is done, and you've traveled where we've trod,

You'll leave the land we left to you, One Nation Under God

RECOGNIZING RICHARD P. SESSLER

HON. SHERWOOD L. BOEHLERT

OF NEW YORK

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Richard "Dick" Sessler for his 12 years of dedicated service to the Mohawk Valley Resource Center for Refugees. On June 28th, 2002, Mr. Sessler retired from his post as Executive Director for the Refugee Center. During his tenure, he was instrumental in the successful resettlement of close to 10,000 refugees from Bosnia, Russia, Vietnam, Burma, and Sudan to the Utica, NY area. Mr. Sessler is a visionary and a truly remarkable leader. Under his leadership the Mohawk Valley Resource Center for Refugees expanded significantly, initiated innovative services and formed many meaningful partnerships with a large number of community organizations.

Mr. Sessler's work with the center dates back to 1990 when he was first hired as Associate Director and later promoted to Executive Director in 1993. During that time the Center has grown tremendously. The Refugee Center now offers three well staffed and well developed programs that have been made more effective: a health program, an education program, and an excellent job placement program. In addition, Mr. Sessler was involved in the establishment of an on-site clinic, night-time English classes (ESL), a dental program, a community relations program and citizenship classes.

Upon his retirement, Mr. Sessler plans to continue to offer his services to the refugee community. His plans include consulting and serving as an active member of the Lutheran Immigration Service (LIRS). I am confident that he will continue to offer his knowledge and experience and serve as a tremendous asset to the LIRS.

Mr. Sessler's commitment to the Refugee Center should serve as an inspiration to all. Mr. Sessler was and will remain to be well respected and well liked by all that have the pleasure to work with him. He has touched and reshaped the lives of many war-torn men, women and children across the globe by helping them escape brutal religious and political persecution—I commend him for his efforts. I am confident that the Mohawk Valley Resource Center for Refugees will continue to maintain its excellent reputation, level of professionalism, and success that Mr. Sessler worked so diligently to instill within it.

VFW VOICE OF DEMOCRACY CONTEST

HON. MAURICE D. HINCHEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to congratulate my constituent Allegra Guarino, New York's recent winner of the Veterans of Foreign Wars' Voice of Democracy Scholarship Contest. This very talented young writer from Marlboro, New York has written an essay entitled "Reaching Out to America's Future" that bears reading and reflection by all of us. I am very proud to represent her in Congress, and I'm sure that her family and friends are very proud of her accomplishment. I am certain that she has a very bright future and will go on to do great things for her community and our nation. We need more young people like her.

REACHING OUT TO AMERICA'S FUTURE

(By Allegra Guarino)

When I hear the phrase . . . "reaching out to America's future" . . . I think of an outreach trip that I took this summer to Harlan County, Kentucky. Harlan County is one of—if not the poorest counties in America. The people here don't have running water, some of them don't have electricity, and what is even more shocking is that some of them don't have a sewage system. They live in hills of the Appalachian Mountains in conditions that many people wouldn't dream exist in our great country. One of the volunteers on the trip found a beautiful stone on the ground and gave it to a little girl that he met. He told her that it was a dream stone, and that if she held onto it when she was dreaming of the future, it would hold inside of it all of her hopes and her dreams. The six-year-old girl looked up at him with questioning eyes and said, "But I don't know how to hope and dream." How do you teach a child to dream? Most people don't have to be taught. Because they are lucky enough to live in part of our country where the reach of their dreams has no limitations.

Another child I met in Kentucky is named Bailey. She is a four-year-old that loves to play on the swing set, so on the third day of the trip I decided to teach her how to butterfly swing. I sat down on the swing and placed her on my lap so that she was facing me. I kicked off from the rocky soil and we began swinging. I told her to be sure and watch the shadow that we were casting on the ground. I watched her eyes light up as she saw the butterfly shaped shadow on the ground. As we pulled away from each other and then back towards each other the shadow was an image of a butterfly flapping its wings. I told her that she might not be able to fly like the butterfly but she could do lots of great things in her life. She thought about the butterfly and what I had said and then she looked at me with these big blue eyes and said you can be the wings. I know that she didn't mean it as deeply as I took it. She was probably only referring to the shadow that we were making on the ground. But to me it meant something more.

Today our country is at war and once again many brave people have gone off to fight in defense of freedom. They are truly the wings of the butterfly. Just as I picked up Bailey and placed her safely on my lap the troops fighting now, and the troops that have fought for us in the past picked up America, and started to fly. In order to start us swinging I had to push hard off the rocky ground. The American soldiers don't have an easy task ahead of them. We are just now, just kicking off of the rocky ground. But I have no doubt that we will fly. A butterfly has two wings. Each equally important. The soldiers will no doubt put 110% into flying our country to the freedom of the open skies. But we the American people must put equally as much effort into flying the country higher. All of us as a team must reach out to America's future. Without knowing us people have laid down their lives so that we would be able to enjoy the freedoms that are now being threatened. America too has a dream stone. Only it comes in a different form. It is tri-colored in red, white, and blue. Red for the blood shed yesterday, White for the pure freedoms we enjoy today and Blue for the endless clear skies of tomorrow.

Our flag is our dream stone holding inside of it the very hopes and dreams of our Nation. We held tightly to it as it was proudly carried through World War One, World War Two, Desert Storm, Vietnam and Korea. While we were enjoying a time of great prosperity we tucked our stone away in our pocket. On September 11th we pulled it out of our pockets when firefighters proudly raised it high at ground zero, athletes displayed it on their jerseys, and average Americans flew it from their cars and homes. My generation knows how to dream. Will the generation after us be able to say the same? We must reach out and place the knowledge of the past into the hands of the future. When we empower the future generations with knowledge our country is sure to thrive. It is estimated that over one million men and women have died in service to our great country. Let us, America's present, take pride in our history and reach out to the future by passing along our knowledge and our great American dream stone. Because without a doubt America's future is whatever America dreams it to be.

THE UNINSURED

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, last week, on July 11, 2002, several of my colleagues, Ms. BALDWIN, Ms. LEE, Mr. MCDERMOTT, and Ms. CARSON, declared that it was time for this Congress to place universal health care at the top of the nation's political agenda. This declaration, I believe, was a defining moment for the universal health care movement in America. Not since 1994 have we seen such a visible and strong nationwide movement for universal health care.

Two years ago, in an attempt to create momentum and a unified strategy to achieve universal health care in Congress, I founded, along with Members of the Congressional Black Caucus, the Progressive Caucus, the Hispanic Caucus, and the Asian Pacific American Caucus, the "Congressional Universal Health Care Task Force," which now has 44 Members. For over two years we have sponsored briefings on Capitol Hill, attended town meetings on universal health care in cities across the country, and learned from health care experts about different ways to achieve universal health care.

Mr. Speaker, I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 99 with several of my colleagues from the "Congressional Universal Health Care Task Force," in order to build the momentum for passage of universal health care legislation by 2004.

We currently have 86 co-sponsors for this bill. There are over 325 national, state, and local organizations who support it as well. House Concurrent Resolution 99 does not specify how to pay for universal health care, nor does it spell out how a health care for all system would be administered. Instead, the resolution explicitly states what universal health care should be—affordable, comprehensive, and accessible for all Americans.

America is on the road to universal health care. How can we as members of Congress justify the fact that we have one of the best health insurance plans available, yet we allow 40 million Americans to have no health insurance coverage at all? Mr. Speaker, we cannot defend something that is clearly indefensible.

In the world's wealthiest country, my colleagues somehow can sleep at night knowing that right now in America, there are millions of patients, many of the children and families, that are having serious heart problems, lung problems, headaches, dental problems, mental illness, or other maladies, but are delaying treatment, not because they do not care about their health, but because the system does not care about them.

We now know empirically, based on the recent Institute of Medicine's 2002 report on the uninsured, that 18,000 Americans die each year because they were uninsured. If we truly care about the health and well being of working families, and those with serious illnesses who are too sick to work, we would ensure that all Americans would have peace of mind, as they do in Europe and Canada, to accessible, affordable, high quality, and comprehensive health care for all guaranteed by law.

In Michigan, thousands of uninsured HIV/AIDS patients can not afford the necessary cocktail of life sustaining drugs due to budget cut backs of government subsidized HIV/AIDS prescription drug programs. Can we continue to allow the uninsured chronically ill, those who have serious physical or mental health problems to go without needed health care for long periods of time, jeopardizing their lives, and needlessly suffering due to having untreated illnesses? For Congress to ignore these health care injustices and continue to "wish our health crisis away" is both immoral and cold hearted.

Plain and simple, if you do not have health insurance, you will receive "second class medicine," as Consumer Reports magazine highlighted in an in depth story published last year. This is particularly true if you are African American or Hispanic. Might I remind you that the first question a nurse or hospital intake administrator asks the patient is not, "May I help you," but rather, "Do you have health insurance?" Health care in America for the most part is a business, and therefore, health care providers and physicians that are making money do not have an incentive to provide charity care.

The Kaiser Family Foundation recently reported that the majority of the uninsured do not receive comprehensive charity care in hospital emergency rooms or community clinics. Because there is no such thing as "universal charity care" in this country, we need universal health care and we need it now. Most uninsured patients with serious illnesses need long term health care treatment, prescription drugs, or medical equipment. Currently, millions of uninsured chronically ill patients must suffer the indignities of spending days and weeks searching for charity care. They often borrow money from relatives or friends just to purchase prescription drugs or to see a doctor. This is wrong and we all know it.

For the past two years, the "Congressional Universal Health Care Task Force" has sponsored several briefings with my colleagues from the Congressional Black Caucus, Progressive Caucus, Hispanic Caucuses, and the Asian Pacific American Caucus on the uninsured crisis in America. We have heard story after story of untold suffering by uninsured or under-insured Americans. We have also heard from numerous physicians who saw patients after their illness were full blown, many of them who died, because they delayed treatment only because they were uninsured. I urge Members of Congress to read "As Sick As it Gets," by Rudolph Mueller, M.D., a ground breaking book about the shocking reality of America's healthcare system. The book documents case after case of Dr. Mueller's patients who tragically became chronically ill, or died, as a result of delaying health care only because they were uninsured.

The Task Force has heard from numerous Americans whose credit was ruined for life, and went into bankruptcy due to thousands of dollars of unpaid medical bills. There are approximately 200,000 bankruptcies in America each year due to unpaid medical bills. Individuals and families should not have to experience the pain and humiliation of declaring bankruptcy just because they got sick. I heard testimony last year from two Washington D.C. residents, a husband and wife with cancer, both high school teachers, who declared bankruptcy due to the high costs of chemotherapy. They were both insured at the time, but had to rely on their credit cards to cover the costs of treatment, due to inadequate private health insurance coverage. Their daughter, who has Hepatitis C, called dozens of doctors but was denied access because she was uninsured. She is having a difficult time returning to work, because she needs long term therapy and treatment in order to be productive again. This is a national disgrace.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe, unlike many of my colleagues, that universal health care means the federal government provides vouchers so Americans can purchase costly and inferior or private health insurance, that in most cases, will not adequately cover one's health care needs, especially if an individual or family has a chronic illness. Universal health care is not a system where health decisions are made by HMO bureaucrats instead of physicians. Furthermore, it is not a system where the patient receives some kind of health insurance coverage through an HMO or a private health insurance plan, but does not have the freedom to choose their physician.

It is my hope that we will achieve universal health care one day by extending, strengthening, and expanding Medicare to all Americans. Medicare has a 2-3 percent administrative overhead, versus the 20-30 percent administrative overhead costs of an HMO or private health insurance plan. The CBO in 1991 reported that we would save $ 100 billion dollars a year if we established a public health insurance program for all Americans. Many health care economists contend that a taxpayer financed national health insurance program would cost the average family of three a total of $739 dollars a year for all of their health care costs, as opposed to the thousands of dollars needlessly wasted on premiums, co-pays, and high deductibles of a private health insurance plan. If we continue to support the idea that health care must be run like a business, and we continue to worship at the altar of private health insurance, it will be difficult if not impossible to cover the skyrocketing costs of primary care, prescription drugs, mental health services, and long term care through a private health insurance dominated system.

National health insurance would save billions of dollars through reduced emergency room visits, reduced chronic illnesses, and a dramatic reduction in uncompensated care for public hospitals which treat the uninsured after they have developed full blown chronic illnesses. Prevention is the key here. All Americans would have access to affordable primary care, and therefore, illnesses such as hypertension, cancer, heart conditions, pre-natal health conditions, respiratory, or kidney problems would be dramatically reduced due to having access to regularly scheduled check-ups.

Mr. Speaker, every sector of the American public is calling for health care coverage for all. Citizens, business, labor, the faith community, civil rights organizations, community clinics, public hospitals, the media, physicians, state and local officials; all are calling for health care for all. The time has come for Congress to act on the crisis of the uninsured. Let's join the rest of the industrialized West, and ensure that all Americans receive high quality and affordable health care.

I urge my colleagues to co-sponsor House Concurrent Resolution 99. Let's show the American people that we truly care about their health. We can not allow another 18,000 Americans to die next year because they are uninsured.

DEATH OF DHIRUBHAI AMBANI

HON. JIM McDERMOTT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, as the current Co-Chairman of the Congressional Caucus on India and Indian American, I note with great sadness the recent death of Dhirubhai Ambani, the founder of The Reliance Group, India's largest and most profitable company.

Dhirubhai Ambani began his illustrious business career as a small trader of fabrics in rural Gujarat. Over the next half decade, he transformed his small business into a diverse economic powerhouse which included vibrant businesses in petrochemicals, petroleum, polyesters, telecommunications, securities and cutting edge technologies. Unlike many older Indian businesses, however, Reliance chose a new path on its ascendancy to becoming a Fortune World 500 Company, and Dhirubhai Ambani was the architect of Reliance's success. Dhirubhai Ambani chose not to keep his businesses as a family concern. Instead, he floated equity shares and thereby allowed millions of middle-class Indians to join with him in enjoying Reliance's decades of economic success. Indeed, there are now more than three million investors in India's largest and most widely held company, which is also the largest exporter from India, as well as the largest private sector source of revenue to the Indian government.

Mr. Speaker, Dhirubhai Ambani was a legend in India. He was also a role model for entrepreneurs around the world, as well as having served as a shining example of India's economic potential. I am confident that all of the Members of the India Caucus join with me in expressing our sympathy to the entire Ambani family. In particular, we send our heartfelt condolences to his widow, Kokilaben Ambani, and her two sons, Mukesh and Anil, who have assumed the helm of India's largest economic vessel. Dhirubhai Ambani's legacy is large, but his sons will continue to build on their father's many achievements.

IN SUPPORT OF H.R. 4687, NATIONAL CONSTRUCTION SAFETY TEAM ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. JOSEPH CROWLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4687, the National Construction Safety Team Act. And I especially want to recognize my friend from New York, Anthony Weiner for his work on the bill.

As we all know, September 11th changed New York. It changed our world. Since September 11th, brave workers, volunteers, and scientific experts have traveled to Ground Zero in the name of recovery and understanding.

These workers, volunteers, and experts have all pushed themselves and their skills to the ultimate limit to deal with an unusually grave situation. And I commend them all.

In particular, the National Institute of Standards and Technology, NIST, had to deftly work with a myriad of concerned New Yorkers. There are thousands of affected family members who are both grieving and seeking answers. People like John and Kathy Ashton of Woodside, Sally Regenhart of Co-op City, and Arthur Taub of Co-op City. Some, like Mr. Taub, had concerns about the NIST investigation itself.

NIST has worked with constituents who wanted answers—and with constituents who had information.

Even seasoned NIST employees admitted they were covering new ground as no one could ever imagine such an event as 9/11 happening.

In the immediate aftermath of September 11th, NIST had to try to do its job amidst emergency respondents, police officers, and incomprehensible loss.

In this extraordinarily challenging situation, critical evidence—like beams, steel work, and cables—was being carted off before the NIST team had a chance to even catalogue or identify it.

Given the fact that the scope of this tragedy had never been seen before, it is understandable that the investigation would be less than ideal.

But it is important that we learn from this tragedy.

And there are several lessons to be learned from September 11th. One lesson is the importance of a swift and thorough investigation of a building failure.

NIST's response teams must have access to building debris as soon as it's safe to enter a site.

And they must be able to move and preserve this critical evidence. This bill gives NIST that authority.

Looking toward the future, it is important to do all we can to prevent a building failure of any kind from ever happening. This bill will allow us to obtain information to help prevent building failures.

And it is important for us to swiftly and thoroughly respond to the community when building failures, God forbid, happen. And this bill does that also.

July 15, 2002

I urge your support of H.R. 4687.

IN RECOGNITION OF JOSE L.
LASTRA

HON. E. CLAY SHAW, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Jose L. Lastra, a man who has served with distinction in the Social Security Administration in South Florida for 30 years.

Born in Cardenas, Cuba in 1948, Jose Lastra arrived in the United States on September 28th, 1961, speaking no English and carrying with him nothing but a strong work ethic and determination. Graduating from Miami Edison High School in 1966, Jose continued his education, earning a degree in History with a minor in Political Science from Florida Atlantic University, with post-graduate studies at the University of Miami School of Hispanic American Studies and Florida International University's School of Public Administration.

Mr. Lastra entered public service on July 17, 1972, when he was hired for the position of Service Representative in the Miami Beach Social Security Office. This month marks his 30th anniversary with the Social Security Administration. Over the last three decades, Jose has served with distinction in a number of positions in the South Florida Area, including: service, claims and field representative, Hispanic Program Officer, and manager of the Cuban-Haitian Emergency Processing Office and the Riverside Branch Office. In recognition of his outstanding work, Jose was awarded the Commissioner's Citation in 1980, 1991, and 1992, and the Commissioner's Team Award in 1997.

In 1990, Mr. Lastra was appointed Area Director of South Florida. In this capacity, he oversees thirty-three Social Security field offices with a total staff of 978 employees. The South Florida Area includes more than 2 million Social Security beneficiaries, many of whom reside in my district. As Chairman of the House Social Security Subcommittee, I am especially grateful for all of Mr. Lastra's hard work on behalf of my senior constituents.

Today, I am pleased to recognize a man who has taken full advantage of what America offers. Coming to this country as a young immigrant from Cuba, he studied hard, worked tirelessly and rose from an entry level position to one of leadership in the Social Security Administration. A true sign of his character, Jose is held in the highest regard by those who work with him and for him. Jose L. Lastra's life and achievements represent the dream of opportunity that America so proudly boasts.

ON THE RETIREMENT OF JOHN DURANT OF CUSTOMS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor today to acknowledge the retirement of John

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Durant, Director of Commercial Rulings for the U.S. Customs Service. Mr. Durant retires after 33 years of federal service, with almost 31 years of that time with Customs. John Durant served in Customs field offices in Boston and Houston, before coming to Headquarters office in Washington DC. John is well known to all members of the international trade community and the trade bar as a preeminent expert on Customs matters and has been instrumental in the effort to modernize Customs' procedures for the benefit of trade and our economy.

Thirty years has seen remarkable changes in how trade has taken on an ever more important role in our country's economic success. Just in the last decade, trade has grown 132 percent, and by 2004, Customs will be processing more than 30 million commercial entries a year. This is up from 12.3 million in 1994 more than double the level of 10 years earlier. John has had the unenviable but critical role in overseeing more than 12,000 commercial rulings that Customs issues each year on such arcane topics as tariff classification, country of origin and marking. He was also the liaison with the trade community for Customs during discussions leading up to the passage and implementation of the Customs Modernization Act of 1993.

For the Congress, however, Mr. Durant will always be known as Customs point man, and sometimes lightening rod, on trade legislation. For the past 14 years, Mr. Durant has been invaluable to the Congress in providing timely and useful technical comments on draft legislation. Much of trade legislation is not exciting or entertaining. It requires people who are professional, dedicated, and very attentive to detail. Mr. Durant is the leader of such men and women at Customs and he does so with a sense of humor. He has been the "man to see" at Customs for answers on trade matters. His retirement will be sorely felt by Customs, Congress, and the trade community.

I am very grateful for all of his help throughout the years. John is a delightful man to work with. We wish him the best in his retirement and his future endeavors. We hope Mr. Durant will return to the nation's Capital and lend his considerable talents to the private sector.

TRIBUTE TO MR. JOHN WALLACH

HON. JOE KNOLLENBERG

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, today I join the chorus of voices around the world to express my admiration and respect for Mr. John Wallach. On July 10, 2002, John Wallach passed away after a life of passion, hope, and heart. I offer my condolences to the family and friends of this truly great man.

Throughout his life, John Wallach approached all things with heartfelt passion. As an award-winning journalist, peace activist, and friend to so many individuals throughout the world, Mr. Wallach inspired those around him to believe in themselves and achieve their dreams.

I had the opportunity to meet Mr. Wallach through his work as founder of, and force behind, the organization Seeds of Peace. Seeds of Peace promotes understanding and long-term stability by uniting teenagers from areas of regional conflict for a unique mediating program at its neutral site in Otisfield, Maine. It was John Wallach's confidence that hope and progress can succeed that enabled Seeds of Peace to grow from simply an idea into the world leader in conflict resolution for youth. I have personally visited this camp in Maine, and seen first-hand the positive effect it has on the participants. Seeds of Peace has established a network of peace builders, who now serve as an inspirational part of John Wallach's legacy.

Before embarking on a second career as an ambassador of peace and mutual understanding, Mr. Wallach had a distinguished career in journalism and as an author. From 1968 to 1994, he served as diplomatic correspondent, White House correspondent, and foreign editor for the Hearst Newspapers. His articles earned many prizes, including two Overseas Press Club awards, the Edward Weintal Prize and the Edwin Hood Award, the highest honor presented by the National Press Club. In 1979, President Carter presented Mr. Wallach with the Congressional Committee of Correspondents Award for his coverage of the Egyptian-Israeli Camp David summit. As an author, he co-authored with his wife Janet Wallach, three books, Arafat: In The Eyes of the Beholder, Still Small Voices, and The New Palestinians. Mr. Wallach has also written The Enemy has a Face.

John Wallach was a man with an enormous heart. Throughout his life he took chances to make progress, and motivated others to follow their hearts. The world is a better place because of John Wallach, and I join many people around the world to commend him and thank him for what he has done.

AIDS CONFERENCE

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, last week in Barcelona, Spain, 15,000 people came together for the 14th International AIDS Conference for "Knowledge and Commitment for Action."

We know that in 2001, there were 5 million new AIDS infections across the globe. Today there are 40 million people living with AIDS worldwide, and there are 14 million AIDS orphans. Currently, in Africa more than 28 million people are living with HIV/AIDS, however, only 30,000 are in treatment.

In comparison, in the United States, nearly 100 percent of the people who need treatment receive it. 99 percent of the African people living with AIDS do not have access to Antiretroviral drugs because they are simply too poor to purchase them.

In Barcelona, thousands came together to call for treatment now, and presented the "Barcelona Declaration," which was also read during the opening session of the Conference. Nelson Mandela and former President Clinton have pledged their assistance to help raise awareness and funding for the UN Global AIDS Trust Fund.

This declaration called for securing donations of $10 billion per year for global AIDS; Antiretroviral (ARV) treatment for at least two million people with HIV/AIDS in the developing world by 2004; lower, affordable ARV drug prices and universal access to generics in the developing world; and a new global partnership between government and NGOs.

I am urging that Congress and the President in a bi-partisan spirit, bolster UN efforts to combat the AIDS pandemic, provide 2 billion dollars to the United Nations Global Aids Fund, to help pay for the costs of HIV/AIDS treatment and prevention programs. This Administration has allocated $200 million to fight global AIDS. I wholeheartedly agree with the activists in Barcelona that $200 million is not enough to combat "the Plague" of the 21st century.

The United States must put at least $2 billion into the Global Trust Fund. Dr. Peter Piot, the Director of UNAIDS said that a $10 billion effort will only begin to make a dent in the crisis. It is a falsehood to say that spending money on AIDS in Africa would simply be a waste of money. Critics of the fund incorrectly say that corrupt dictators will take the money and use it to enrich themselves. In Uganda, Thailand and Senegal, for example, strong national leadership partnered with a community-wide response are reducing new HIV infections and AIDS diagnoses and focusing on treatment measures for their people. There are hundreds of AIDS organizations and government officials around the world that are monitoring the progress of the Fund. Please . . . let's give it a chance to work.

I am urging today that my colleagues in Congress, the Bush Administration, the private sector, and the celebrity community begin lobbying the more affluent nations of the European Community and Asia to provide the remaining 8 billion necessary to combat the AIDS pandemic. France, Germany, Japan, Taiwan, and the oil rich Countries of the Middle East are not providing enough funding to the UN Global AIDS Trust.

I have often heard the argument that we can not afford to treat and prevent HIV/AIDS patients around the world who have AIDS, or will contract it in the future. Nobody on the planet can persuade me that America, and the industrialized countries of the East and West, nations with trillion dollar economies, do not have the resources to combat the AIDS pandemic. But the truth of the matter, and I have seen this for decades, is that the international community will follow our lead if we provide the moral and financial leadership on HIV/AIDS. Again, this has not been the case.

I am also urging my colleagues to call a meeting with the pharmaceutical companies, and begin the much needed discussion on how to bring the price of HIV/AIDS prescription drugs down so that the poorer nations, in particularly those in Africa, can afford to buy them or generic drugs. In times of international health disasters, we must put the lives of people first; and profits second. Sadly, this has not been the case.

In the United States, 950,000 people have been diagnosed with AIDS. African Americans make up only 13 percent of the total U.S. population but 54 percent of new infections. 82 percent of women who are newly infected with HIV are African-American and Latino.

In Michigan, AIDS patients who are dependent on federal programs to help cover the costs of HIV/AIDS drugs are now saying that due to budget cuts, they are having difficulty affording HIV/AIDS drugs. We can not allow this to happen.

It is imperative that we as a nation provide the requisite funds necessary to provide adequate treatment and prevention for HIV/AIDS both at home and abroad.

COMMEMORATING THE 40TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF JOE AND BARBARA SALTZMAN

HON. MICHAEL M. HONDA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Joe and Barbara Saltzman who were married on July 1, 1962, and are now celebrating their 40th wedding anniversary. They are the children of Ruth and Murray Saltzman and Sid and Lillian Epstein, the parents of David and Michael Saltzman, the parents-in-law of Jennifer Saltzman, and the grandparents of Samantha and Sarah Saltzman.

Joe and Barbara Saltzman have been active as professional journalists in the community for four decades, with Joe Saltzman having won more than 50 awards as a broadcast journalist including the Columbia University-Pontiac broadcast journalism award, four Emmys, four Golden Mike's, two Edward R. Murrow Awards, a Silver Gavel, and one of the first NAACP Image Awards, and Barbara Saltzman having been a member of the Los Angeles Times staff for 22 years and editor of the daily Calendar section.

When their son David, a Chadwick School graduate, tragically died of Hodgkin's disease after graduating from Yale, Joe and Barbara could have turned their backs on the world. Instead, they mortgaged their house to keep a promise they had made to David. They promised that if he finished his children's book, The Jester Has Lost His Jingle, they would make sure it would be published in the way he envisioned it and would donate it to children who were suffering from illnesses.

Joe and Barbara made that promise a reality producing more than 40,000 Jester books and 35,000 Jester & Pharley Dolls that have been donated to ill and special-needs children. The book has also become a national best-seller and there are more than 300,000 copies in circulation. To further their efforts, Joe and Barbara Saltzman have created The Jester & Pharley Phund, a non-profit charity so that they can continue the mission of giving every child a sense of hope, a feeling of empowerment, a love of learning, the joy of laughter, and the desire to live up to The Jester & Pharley's motto: "It's up to us to make a difference, it's up to us to care. . . ."

Barbara has become "The Jester's Mom" bringing the Jester & Pharley's message of hope and laughter to thousands of children in hospitals and schools throughout the country. Joe has served the community as a professor of journalism at the University of Southern California Annenberg School for Communication for more than 35 years and continues to serve as an educator, academic, journalist and administrator.

Mr. Speaker, Joe and Barbara Saltzman have dedicated their lives to helping children who need to hear the Jester's message and have made a significant difference in the lives of so many people who need to find hope and laughter. I commend their commitment in bringing a little more happiness to all our lives.

TRIBUTE TO CARDINAL WILFRID NAPIER, OFM, OF DURBAN, SOUTH AFRICA AND THE ARCHDIOCESE OF DETROIT

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Archdiocese of Detroit, which has joined with the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and Catholic Relief Services to stand in solidarity with Africa through the Africa Rising: Hope and Healing Campaign. Encouraging members of the Metro Detroit Catholic community to engage in advocacy, dialogue, and prayer, they have joined this campaign to truly put their faith to work. On Sunday, June 30, 2002, the Archdiocese of Detroit had the distinguished honor of hosting Cardinal Wilfrid Napier, OFM, of Durban, South Africa, as part of their Africa Rising: Hope and Healing Campaign.

Born in Matatiele, South Africa, in 1941, Cardinal Napier studied in Ireland and France and completed a Masters Degree in Philosophy and Theology. Ordained a priest in 1970 and then appointed Administrator Apostolic of the Diocese of Kokstad and made Bishop of Kokstad in 1981, Cardinal Napier's vibrance and leadership was apparent from the start. Serving two terms as President of the Southern African Catholic Bishops' Conference from 1987-1994, Cardinal Napier went on to be appointed Archbishop of Durban in 1992. In 1998 Pope John Paul II appointed him as Consultor to the Congregation for the Evangelization of the Peoples, and in February of 2001, he was named Cardinal. An outspoken advocate for HIV-AIDS treatment, poverty eradication, debt relief, and development, Cardinal Napier's outstanding work to create innovative new programs and initiatives for these social justice issues is truly unparalleled. He has taken up the challenge to fight for the people of sub-Saharan Africa and continues to work hard for the advancement of his region and beyond.

I applaud Cardinal Napier for the work he has accomplished and continues to do, and I welcome him to the United States and to Detroit, Michigan. I also applaud the Archdiocese of Detroit for its leadership, commitment, and service, and for encouraging our community to stand in solidarity with our brothers and sisters in Africa. I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting Cardinal Napier, and pay tribute to him as he embarks on this historic visit.

THE FREE HOUSING MARKET ENHANCEMENT ACT

HON. RON PAUL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce the Free Housing Market Enhancement Act. This legislation restores a free market in housing by repealing special privileges for the housing-related government sponsored enterprises (GSE). These entities are the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae), the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac), and the National Home Loan Bank Board. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the housing-related GSEs received 13.6 billion worth of indirect federal subsidies in Fiscal Year 2000 alone.

One of the major government privileges granted the GSEs is a line of credit to the United States Treasury. According to some estimates, the line of credit may be worth over $2 billion dollars. This explicit promise by the Treasury to bail out the GSEs in times of economic difficulty helps the GSEs attract investors who are willing to settle for lower yields than they would demand in the absence of the subsidy. Thus, the line of credit distorts the allocation of capital. More importantly, the line of credit is a promise on behalf of the government to engage in a massive unconstitutional and immoral income transfer from working Americans to holders of GSE debt.

The Free Housing Market Enhancement Act also repeals the explicit grant of legal authority given to the Federal Reserve to purchase the debt of the GSE. GSEs are the only institutions besides the United States Treasury granted explicit statutory authority to monetarize their debt through the Federal Reserve. This provision gives the GSEs a source of liquidity unavailable to their competitors.

Ironically, by transferring the risk of a widespread mortgage default, the government increases the likelihood of a painful crash in the housing market. This is because the special privileges of Fannie and Freddie have distorted the housing market by allowing Fannie, Freddie and the home loan bank board to attract capital they could not attract under pure market conditions. As a result, capitol is diverted from its most productive use into housing. This reduces the efficacy of the entire market and thus reduces the standard of living of all Americans.

However, despite the long-term damage to the economy inflicted by the government's interference in the housing market, the government's policies of diverting capital to other uses creates a short-term boom in housing. Like all artificially-created bubbles, the boom in housing prices cannot last forever. When housing prices fall, homeowners will experience difficulty as their equity is wiped out. Furthermore, the holders of the mortgage debt will also have a loss. These losses will be greater than they would have otherwise been had government policy not actively encouraged over-investment in housing.

Perhaps the Federal Reserve can stave off the day of reckoning by purchasing the GSE's debt and pumping liquidity into the housing market, but this cannot hold off the inevitable drop in the housing market forever. In fact, postponing the necessary, but painful market corrections will only deepen the inevitable fall. The more people invested in the market, the greater the effects across the economy when the bubble bursts.

No less an authority than Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has expressed concern that the government subsidies provided to the GSEs make investors underestimate the risk of investing in Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for Congress to act to remove taxpayer support from the housing GSEs before the bubble bursts and taxpayers are once again forced to bail out investors who were misled by foolish government interference in the market. I therefore hope my colleagues will stand up for American taxpayers and investors by cosponsoring the Free Housing Market Enhancement Act.

INTRODUCTION OF THE DEFICIT REDUCTION SAFEGUARD RESOLUTION

HON. JOHN SULLIVAN

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Deficit Reduction Safeguard Resolution. The House Deficit Reduction Safeguard Resolution will allow Members of Congress to reduce the federal deficit by crediting money to the Deficit Reduction Safeguard Balance.

Under current budget and House Rules, when a Member offers an amendment to reduce spending the money saved is left on the table and available for someone else to spend on another program. Members are not allowed to offer amendments and direct the savings to deficit reduction. As a result, there is little incentive to reduce wasteful spending in order to reduce the deficit.

The Deficit Reduction Safeguard Balance would correct this problem by amending House Rules to permit a Member to dedicate the money saved from any amendment to be dedicated to reducing the deficit. The Deficit Reduction Safeguard Balance only amends House Rules. It does not require approval by the Senate. This Resolution applies to both mandatory and discretionary spending. We have maxed out Uncle Sam's credit card and until we pay down the debt it is shortsighted for us to continue spending without restraint.

This Resolution is about honesty with the American public. A dollar saved should actually be a dollar saved, not a dollar added to another program. I urge my colleagues to co-sponsor this Resolution.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. TODD TIAHRT

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, July 12, I was unavoidably detained and missed roll call vote numbered 295.

Rollcall vote 295 was on passage of H.R. 4687, legislation which would provide for the establishment of investigative teams to assess building performance and emergency response and evacuation procedures in the wake of any building failure that has resulted in substantial loss of life or that posed significant potential of substantial loss of life.

Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on this bill.

TRIBUTE TO DIOCESE BISHOP
CHARLES M. LASTER 20TH PASTORAL ANNIVERSARY PENTECOSTAL TEMPLE CHURCH

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, as the congregation of the Pentecostal Temple Church gathered together on Sunday July 14, 2002, they celebrated the 20th Pastoral Anniversary of Diocese Bishop Charles M. Laster. A life-long leader and devoted pastor, Bishop Laster has truly demonstrated his commitment to advancing the mission of Pentecostal Temple Church across southeastern Michigan. As the members and friends of Bishop Laster and Elect Lady Jacqueline Laster gathered to celebrate this special anniversary, they paid tribute to their outstanding years of activism, leadership, and faith.

Bishop Laster has been preaching the Gospel to the congregation of Pentecostal Temple Church, located in Detroit Michigan, since 1982. As his glorious message and ministry has been received, he has shown a special dedication to making a positive difference in the lives of others. An active force in his community, he has worked tirelessly with the Pentecostal Temple Church throughout the years in organizing several programs and ministries as well as working with many organizations around the State of Michigan. With community outreach programs, social and religious events, charity work for those in need, and statewide and national conferences, his involvement with church and beyond has been an inspiration to all. In fact, Bishop Laster's leadership has truly become a legacy, as he has led his congregation and community to greatness.

Bishop Laster's distinguished service and outstanding dedication to improving the lives of people through faith will continue to serve as an example to communities across this Nation. I applaud Bishop Laster for his leadership, commitment, and service, and I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting him for his exemplary years of faith and service on this very special 20th Pastoral Anniversary.

SPEECH OF

HON. BETTY McCOLLUM

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 9, 2002

Ms. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5017, a bill that creates an opportunity for the United States to implement agreements with foreign countries to assist us as we battle severe wildfires.

During the devastating wildfires two years ago, both Australia and New Zealand provided the United States much needed help. Following the 2000 fire season, long-term agreements for firefighting assistance were negotiated with these countries. Unfortunately, these agreements have not been implemented because of concerns that foreign firefighters could be held liable for actions taken while providing assistance in the United States. H.R. 5017 removes this barrier and extends liability protection to foreign firefighters providing service to our nation by treating them the same as U.S. employees. At the same time, it requires those countries with which we enter reciprocal firefighting agreements to extend the same protection to U.S. firefighters who lend support overseas, or across our borders.

The valuable assistance firefighters from other countries provide to the United States is not new. For years, the collaborative relationship we have developed with Canada has protected property, resources and lives. Forest fires do not recognize international boundaries. It is vital we continue to work with other countries to ensure that wild fires are prevented and contained.

Just last week lightening started a 450-acre wildfire in the northeast corner of Minnesota, north of the small town of Hovland. Since the risk of wildfire is low in Minnesota, much of the state's firefighting resources had been sent west to help with the forest fires there leaving us shorthanded. Because of our close working relationship with Ontario's natural resource agency, Canadian firefighters were able to bring the Hovland fire quickly under control.

Unfortunately, not every country has the unique and special relationship that the United States has with Canada in fighting wildfires. H.R. 5017 will allow the U.S. Government to develop similar firefighting relationships with other countries around the world and enhance the relationship we have with one of our neighbors. We must help each other. I am pleased the House addressed this issue today and am proud to lend my support.

REGARDING H.R. 5068, ALLOWING UNINSURED WOMEN TO OBTAIN TREATMENT FOR OVARIAN AND UTERINE CANCER

HON. PATSY T. MINK

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, Congress passed the Breast and Cervical Cancer

Treatment Act (P.L. 106-354) to help low-income, uninsured women with breast and cervical cancer.

Before passing this act, low-income women could receive free mammograms and pap smears through the CDC's National Breast and Cervical Cancer Early Detection Program. However, women who were diagnosed with cancer could not obtain financial assistance for treatment. The government found diseases that could kill these women, but it did not help them obtain the medical treatment they needed.

P.L. 106-354 corrected this problem by providing federal funds to treat any breast or cervical cancer detected by the CDC's early detection program.

Congress passed P.L. 106-354 so poor women suffering from breast and cervical cancer could focus on dealing with their illness rather than paying for expensive medical bills. The law allows these women to obtain medical coverage for cancer treatments and medicine.

My bill, H.R. 5086, amends the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act to include ovarian and uterine cancer. It will provide medical treatment for women who are screened by the CDC's early detection program and who are found to have ovarian and uterine cancer.

My bill takes the next logical step by helping low-income women with ovarian and uterine cancer, two of the most devastating cancers faced by women. Ovarian cancer is the 5th leading cause of cancer death in women. Every year almost 40,000 new cases of uterine cancer are diagnosed in the U.S., and approximately 6,600 women will die from uterine cancer.

I urge my colleagues to help women who live in poverty and cannot obtain the cancer treatments they desperately need.

TO HONOR MR. VINCENT ROIG FOR HIS MERITORIOUS ACHIEVEMENTS

HON. ED PASTOR

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. PASTOR. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise before you today and take this opportunity to recognize the meritorious achievements of an outstanding Arizonan and American, Mr. Vincent Roig.

Mr. Roig has distinguished himself as a leader in the essential work of providing educational opportunities for qualified citizens. From his early years as an educator and financial aid administrator at a number of universities, he dedicated himself to helping young people gain the knowledge and skills that they would need throughout their life.

In 1982, he was one of the founders of the Arizona Educational Loan Marketing Corporation, the state's secondary market for Federal student loans, which is now an affiliate of the Southwest Student Services Corporation.

Although the Congress of the United States had the foresight to create the Federal Family Education Loan Program, it takes the leadership and dedication of a person such as Mr. Roig, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Southwest Student Services Corporation, to effectively implement the Congress' intended goal. The Southwest Companies initially supported only students at Arizona colleges and universities. However, to date, they have provided more than $3 billion to more than one million parents and students nationally in support of providing financial access to post-secondary education.

Under the initiative and leadership of Mr. Roig, not only have the Southwest Companies facilitated the availability of student financial support, they have reduced costs to the borrowers and provided the critically important informational services that ensure that low-income families understand that educational opportunity is available to them. Mr. Roig has worked tirelessly with the U.S. Department of Education, Congressional Subcommittees and the many organizations supporting student financial assistance to bring about useful change and modernization to improve service to educational institutions and students alike. In recognition of his efforts, in 2001 he was awarded the Jean S. Frohlicher Outstanding Service Award by the National Council of Higher Education Programs. This is a prestigious award for which he was chosen by his peers for his exceptional service.

Today, on the occasion of the celebration of Southwest Companies' 20th Anniversary, I ask my colleagues to join me in extending our heartiest congratulations to Southwest Student Services Corporation and to Mr. Vincent Roig for his 20 years of leadership and dedication.

TRIBUTE TO RAY TOWNSHIP

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 15, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize Ray Township, whose outstanding dedication and commitment to the service of its community has led to a great accomplishment. On Sunday, June 30, 2002, Ray Township will be celebrating its 175th Anniversary.

Ray Township today is a flourishing center of civic and social activities and resources for families of the community. With a great emphasis on community service, Ray Township has opened its doors throughout the years to welcome community members to civic gatherings, conferences, club meetings, and events for the entire family. Ray Township's Historical Committee will be honoring the many years of service by presenting the State of Michigan's Registered Historical Site Plaque.

Community will always serve as the cornerstone of Ray Township. While maintaining this community spirit, Ray Township is expanding, by bringing in new levels of technology and resources. The community of Ray Township has dedicated its time and talents to bring its community into the 21st Century, and they have been successful. While continuing to progress, Ray Township's roots will forever be memorialized by the Historical Plaque that will be unveiled at the anniversary celebration. The plaque will represent the First Religious Society of Ray built in 1869, currently the township's Town Hall, and the Ray Township District School House of 1863, currently the township's library. Because of this community unwavering support throughout its remarkable history, Ray Township has become a place that will continue to cultivate its historic roots as well as reach out to younger generations.

Ray Township is a true testament to the hard work and dedication of community members and their families. I applaud the people of Ray Township for their leadership, commitment, and service, and I urge my colleagues to join me in congratulating them on this landmark occasion.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, July 16, 2002 may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.
